ASIR MAHOMED SHEIKH AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS—APPEL'ANTS

versus

RAJA PROBHA CHANDRA BARUA—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Rent, enhancement of, suit for—Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (B. C. VIII of 1869), ss. 14, 18, scope of—'Prevailing-rate', how to ascertain.

A rate brought into existence by the landlord pending disputes with the tenants regarding enhancement of rent is not contemplated by the term 'prevailing rate' mentioned in section 18 of Act VIII of 1869. [p. 2, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Goalpara, dated 22nd July 1912, modifying that of the Munsif of Dhubri, dated the 31st of January 1912.

Baboo Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Gobinda Chandra Chuckerbutty, for the Appellants.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose, Babus Basanta Kumar Bose and Mohini Mohan Chuckerbutty, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of suits for enhancement of rent under section 18 of Act VIII of 1869 B. C. The only ground upon which enhancement has been allowed is that the defendants paid rent below the prevailing rate of rent paid by tenants in the places adjacent. The defendants have appealed to this Court, and several questions have been raised in these appeals.

The main contention, and that which applies to all the appeals, is that the decision of the Courts below as to the prevailing rate is incorrect.

The holdings of the defendants are situated in Mouzah Bidyapara. Some of the tenants of Bidyapara pay rent at a higher rate than that paid by the defendants, but they do not form a majority of the tenants of the mouzah. The Courts below, however, have taken the rate of rent in the neighbouring mouzahs, along with the rate paid by the minority of the tenants of Mouzah Bidyapara itself, to be the prevailing rate.

It has been contended that neighbouring mouzahs are not 'places adjacent' within the meaning of section 18 of Act VIII of 1869. It is unnecessary, however, to discuss the question, having regard to the view we take of the 'prevailing rate' in the present case. It appears that the plaintiff, who is the proprietor of Mouzah Bidyapara and the neighbouring mouzahs, held a survey of all these mouzahs and demanded enhancement of rents from the tenants.

The tenants of the neighboring mouzahs and some of the tenants of Mouzah Bidyapara agreed to the enhancement, but the defendants in these cases refused to do so. They were accordingly served with notices of enhancement under section 14 of Act VIII of 1869. These notices were served so far back as 1907, and the present suits were instituted in 1910. Now the enhanced rates paid by the tenants of the neighbouring mouzahs and by some of the tenants of Bidyapara

PURAN MAL V. TARIF.

Mouzah came into existence since the defendants were called upon to pay the enhanced rents. It is true that plaintiff has succeeded in realising rents at the enhanced rates from the other tenants, but that was shortly before the notices of enhancement were served upon the defendants, and the plaintiff cannot by merely delaying the institution of the suits rely upon the rate at which he had succeeded in realising rents since the commencement of the disputes as to rates in the locality. We do not think the prevailing rate mentioned in section 18 of Act VIII of 1869 contemplates a rate brought into existence, so to say, by the landlord pending disputes with the tenants regarding enhancement of rent.

We are accordingly of opinion that the Courts below are in error in relying upon the rates paid by the minority of the tenants of Bidyapara and the tenants of the neighbouring mouzahs under the circumstances stated above as the 'prevailing rate' and that the plaintiff has failed to prove the prevailing rate according to law.

In this view it is unnecessary to consider the other questions raised on behalf of the appellants.

In the result, the claim for enhancement is disallowed. The plaintiff will get a decree for rent at the rates admitted by the defendants in each case with interest at the legal rate. Under the circumstances we direct each party to bear his own costs in all the Courts.

Appeals allowed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1080 OF 1914.

July 20, 1915.

Present:—Sir Henry Richards, Kt., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, Kt.

PURAN MAL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus

*TARIF AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS
—RESPONDENTS.

Written statement of co-defendant, admission made in, whether admissible in evidence against another defendant—Ex parte decree—Restoration of suit—Order, if can be questioned in appeal from final decree.

A statement made by a defendant in his written statement is not admissible in evidence against his co-defendant. [p. 3, col. 2.]

An order setting aside an ex parte decree is not appealable and as such it cannot be questioned in appeal from the final decree passed after restoration. [p. 3, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Meerut, dated the 23rd May 1914.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs sued for possession of property as reversioners of a widow. They alleged that the widow died on a certain date within one year of the institution of the suit. The widow, it appears, had transferred the property to her brother, Shibba, on 7th November 1888. Shibba transferred a large portion of the property to Puran Mal on 16th May 1896. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the daughters-in-law of Shibba, filed a written statement alleging that the widow had died about three years before the institution of the suit. At the hearing all the defendants (including Puran Mal) were absent and the suit was decreed ex parte. Puran Mal then applied for the restoration of the suit and this was done. The Court of first instance found on the evidence that the widow had died more than 12 years prior to the suit and it dismissed the claim. The lower Appellate Court, although it disbelieved the plaintiffs' evidence, decreed the claim on the ground that the written statement filed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was admissible in evidence against Puran Mal and that Puran Mal had not shown sufficient cause for the restoration of the suit. Puran Mal appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Kailash Nath Katju (with him Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the Appellant:—The grounds on which the Court below has decreed the claim are both untenable. It is for the plaintiffs to prove that the suit as brought is within time. Venkata Hanumanulu Garu v. Lchamma (1). The Court below having disbelieved the evidence produced by the plaintiffs was not justified in relying on the written statement of certain defendants who had no interest in the suit. This written statement was no evidence at all. Moreover, the Court below had no authority to question the order setting aside the ex parte decrees. Kunja Mal v. Gauri Shankar (2); Tasuddug Husain v. Hayat-un-nissa (3).

Mr. Baldeo Ram Dave (for Dr. Sunda Lal), for the Respondents:—The written statement was verified on oath and it stands on the same footing as an affidavit. Also the Court below could question the order restoring the suit. Nand Ram v. Bhopal Singh (4).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by an alleged reversioner against the transferors of a deceased Hindu widow. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree and decreed the plaintiffs' claim.

The widow was one Musammāt Hukmo. She made an alienation of the whole property as far back as the year 1888 in favour of one Shibba. Shibba on the 16th of May 1896 transferred part of the property so alienated to him to the defendant Puran Mal. The Court of first instance found that Musammāt Hukmo had died some 18 years before the institution of the suit, giving somewhat cogent reasons for its finding. The lower Appellate Court found the utmost difficulty in believing the plaintiffs' story as to the date of the death of Musammāt Hukmo. It appears, however, that when the present suit was first instituted, in addition to Puran Mal the two daughters-in-law of Shibba were made parties. The plaintiffs in their plaint had alleged that Musammāt Hukmo had died a year before the institution of the suit. The two lady defendants in their written statement had said that Musammāt Hukmo died $4\frac{1}{4}$ years before the institution of the suit. The ladies do not appear to have taken any further step of any kind in defending the suit, and in the first instance it was decreed ex parte. Puran Mal subsequently applied to have the ex parte decree set aside and was successful. The learned District Judge, after stating that he does not believe the plaintiffs' evidence as to the date of the death of Musammāt Hukmo, proceeds as follows: "The fact that Musammāt Misri and Musammāt Manno said originally that Hukmo died four years ago is to my mind the one piece of untainted evidence in the whole case and I would be prepared to accept it. By their admissions Musammāt Misri and Musammāt Manno stood to lose that portion of the property of Har Narain held by Musammāt Hukmo which she had passed to Shibba."

It is certainly somewhat suspicious that the Musammats who never fought out the case should have been so particular to allege the date of the death of Musammāt Hukmo. It is also somewhat remarkable that the plaintiffs at once accepted the date and had their plaint amended. The two Musammats had absolutely nothing to gain by putting in their written statement that Musammāt Hukmo died $4\frac{1}{4}$ years before the suit. It could not have helped them in any way in making a defence to the suit. Their motive for making the statement is very obscure, unless they intended to help the plaintiff. Why the plaintiffs should have amended their plaint when they were getting an ex parte decree is also not very clear. However, in our opinion, the statement made by these ladies in their written statement was not evidence against Puran Mal. The ladies were not called as witnesses. It is clear, therefore, that if the statement of the ladies be excluded, in the opinion of both the Courts below the plaintiffs failed to prove the death of Musammāt Hukmo within 12 years of the institution of the suit. The onus undoubtedly lay upon the plaintiffs of proving the death of Hukmo within 12 years, so as to show that they had a subsisting title at the date of the institution of the suit. The learned District Judge has, however, decreed the plaintiffs' claim on the ground that the trial Court ought never to have set aside the ex parte decree. In our opinion the question of the propriety of setting aside the ex parte decree was a matter which could not be considered by the learned District Judge in appeal. No appeal is given by the Code from an order setting aside an ex parte decree. It cannot be taken exception to later on in a regular appeal, because it did not affect the merits of the case. This has been repeatedly held by this Court. In our opinion the decree of the Court of first instance was correct and ought to be restored. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree

JOHN INNES MARSHALL—OPPOSITE PARTY—APPELLANT

GRANDHI VENKATA RATNAM—

APPLICANT—RESPONDENT.

Contempt of Court by committing breach of injunction—Injunction on firm—Assistant, liability of, under what conditions.

Where an injunction is issued by a Court restraining the defendant firm from disposing, selling or dealing in any manner with the goods referred to in the plaint, but where the injunction makes no mention of X an assistant in the firm or of servants and agents:

Held, that X not being named in the order cannot be punished for contempt of Court for disobeying the injunction. [p. 7, col. 1.]

Appeal against the following order of Mr. Justice Greaves in a motion for contempt of Court, arising out of a suit brought by Grandhi, dated the 31st March 1915:—

The notice of motion in this case is directed to one J. I. Marshall who is in the employ of the defendant firm, and it asks that he shall stand committed to the Presidency Jail for having committed a breach of an injunction granted by me on the 20th (March) instant restraining the defendant firm, their servants and agents (I am here quoting the words of the motion) from disposing, selling or dealing in any manner with the goods referred to in the plaint herein, over Tuesday the 23rd of March 1915, and for an order on J. I. Marshall to pay to the plaintiff his costs of and incidental to this application. The notice of motion is dated 26th March 1915 and was duly served on Mr. Marshall.

On the 30th of January 1914, a contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants for the sale of 500 cases of matches. Certain of the cases were delivered between the months of March and December 1914, but on that day certain cases still remained undelivered. On the 17th of March of this year, the plaintiff received information to the effect that another consignment of matches of 75 cases marked with the plaintiff's name had arrived in Calcutta and that the defendant firm was trying to dispose of them to somebody other than the plaintiff. Thereupon interviews took place between the defendant firm and the plaintiff's son and the defendant firm expressed their willingness to deliver the goods at a certain price which was higher than the price which the plaintiff considered that he was bound to pay. On the 19th of March, the defendants threatened to dispose of the goods, unless the plaintiff purchased them at the price of 1s. 6½d. per gross. They threatened to sell the goods by 11 o'clock on the 20th of March unless the plaintiff was willing to pay this price. On the same day, the 19th March, a letter was written by the plaintiff's solicitor saying that the defendants could not sell the goods to a third person, as they were the property of the plaintiff. On the 20th March 1915 the plaint was filed in this suit at 12 o'clock, and, at 1.30 on that day, an application was made to me for an injunction, and I granted an ad interim injunction over the following Tuesday in these terms, restraining the defendants from selling, disposing of or otherwise dealing with the goods referred to in paragraph 3 of the plaint, and I gave the plaintiff liberty to serve the defendants with the notice of motion for the following Tuesday, for an injunction restraining the defendants from selling, disposing or dealing with the goods pending the hearing of this action and for a Receiver of the goods. I directed the notice of motion to be served before 4 o'clock at No. 3, Commercial Buildings, where the defendant firm carry on business, or if these premises were closed, then on Mr. Cameron who was the manager of the defendant firm at his private address. It appears from the evidence of the plaintiff before me that after the injunction was granted, the plaintiff's son accompanied by one Akshay Kumar Rudra, an Attorney of this Court and assistant of Babu Charu Chandra Bose, Attorney for the plaintiff, went to No. 3, Commercial Buildings, and arrived there at about 2-15 P. M. They inquired at the office for Mr. Cameron and were told that Mr. Cameron was not there, and thereupon the plaintiff's son took the Attorney to Mr. Marshall, as he was the next superior officer in the office of the defendant firm. The plaintiff's son and his Attorney stated that they read out a copy of my order to Mr. Marshall in the presence of Mr. Surita, an Advocate of this Court: and that after reading out the same they handed Mr. Marshall a copy of the order, and they state that he read the same in their presence and in the presence of Mr. Surita, that they asked Mr. Marshall to sign an acknowledgment of the receipt of the copy of the said order, but Mr. Marshall refused to do this and said that his firm had already sold the goods. Akshay Kumar Rudra, the Attorney, goes on to say that he attended immediately after at the office of the Jetty Superintendent of the Port Commissioners with the plaintiff's son, and showed a copy of my order to the Deputy Superintendent and read out the same to him and asked him to sign an acknowledgment, which he refused to do saying that he could only act on an order signed by an officer of this Court. Both the deponents state that at the goods shed at the Jetty, they saw several cases of matches marked with the plaintiff's mark, which was pointed out, and the Attorney states that he pointed out the goods to the plaintiff's son and also to one Satya Charan Ray who was the Jetty Sircar of the plaintiff, asking the plaintiff's son to count the number of packages there, which he and the Jetty Sircar accordingly did, telling the Attorney that there were 75 cases of matches lying there. The affidavit of the Attorney further states that on the following day he was informed by the plaintiff's son that 53 cases of matches had been sent to the Howrah Station and the same were lying there at No. 13 Goods Shed, Howrah. There is an affidavit also filed on behalf of the plaintiff by Satya Charan Ray, confirming the counting of the cases of matches, and also stating that after the Attorney and the plaintiff's son had left, one Pran Kristo Coondoo, who was a Sircar in the employ of the defendant Company and whom he knew, came to Jetty No. 2 and gave directions to certain cartmen to take the goods to Murgihatta Godown-baree. He states that a portion of these goods were, thereafter, removed to Jetty Shed No. 2 by the employee of the defendant Company.

On behalf of Mr. Marshall, three affidavits are filed, one by himself in which he states at paragraph 4 that about 2-30, after office hours, and after the business of the defendant firm was closed for the day, and while he was preparing to leave the office being actually in the act of changing his clothes, a person whom he did not know, accompanied by one Grandhi Subramaniam, called, and saw him at No. 3, Commercial Buildings, stating that he was an Assistant of Messrs. Bose and Company and wanted to see Mr. Cameron. Mr. Marshall states, that he informed him that Mr. Cameron was away from office and he, Mr. Marshall, was the next officer in charge of the office. Mr. Marshall states that the Attorney informed him that he had obtained an injunction restraining Mr. Cameron from disposing of the 75 cases of the matches in question, and that he told him, as was the fact, that they had already been sold and paid for, and then the Attorney asked him to whom they had been sold; he thereupon said that if they wrote and asked him, he would give them information in writing as he did not want to run the risk of being misrepresented if he gave any information verbally. Mr. Marshall then goes on to state that he left the office shortly after with Mr. Surita and one Mr. Moss, who were both present. Mr. Marshall further states that the Attorney produced and handed to him a piece of paper with some type-written matter on it, which bore no signature to show that it was a copy of an actual order. He states that he glanced at the document, but did not read it through before handing it back to him, and he denies that the document was read out to him, and he is supported in this denial by an affidavit of Mr. Surita. In paragraph 6 of his affidavit, Mr. Marshall states that he had nothing whatever to do with the removal of or the endeavour to remove any of the goods in question, and that he never at any time sold or disposed of or otherwise dealt with the goods or any of them in disobedience or contempt or breach of the alleged injunction or order, and he states, in paragraph 7, that for the first time he came to hear that the Jetty Sircar, Pran Kristo Coondoo, had been concerned in the removal of the said goods, when he found the statements to that effect in the affidavit of Satya Charan Roy. He states that this removal was not done in pursuance of any order or instruction given by him or by any one belonging to the defendant firm, and he states that he has since ascertained that the Sircar did on the 20th of March remove or cause to be removed some of the goods, but that he did so after office hours in his spare time and at the request of and on behalf of the purchaser, Juggal Kissore Pyne, and in no wise on behalf of the defendant firm.

As before stated, Mr. Surita filed an affidavit which corroborates Mr. Marshall's statement with regard to the interview on the afternoon of 20th March. A further affidavit is filed on his behalf by one Jugal Kissore Pyne, who states that on the 3rd of March he agreed to purchase from the defendant firm 75 cases of matches at Rs. 1-7-6 per gross. He states that the purchase was completed by him at the office of the defendants on 20th March and that he paid a sum of Rs. 5,507-13-0, as referred to, as the price of the matches, and that he thereupon handed the gate pass in respect of the goods, to obtain delivery from the Port Commissioners' Jetty. He states that the purchase price was paid and the whole transaction was completed by sometime between 12 noon and 12-30 on Saturday, and that he thereupon immediately arranged with one Pran Kristo Coondoo, the defendant firm's Jetty Sircar, for an extra charge of Rs. 3 to remove the goods from the Jetty to his godown at Suken's Lane, and that he gave him the gate pass. He states that sometime about 4 or 4-30 in the afternoon, he returned to his godown and there found that in the interval 53 cases out of 75 cases had been brought from the Jetty and stored there, and he never heard about any injunction until 22nd March.

Now, it is urged before me on behalf of Mr. Marshall that there has been no breach of the terms of the injunction, inasmuch as he has not sold, disposed of or otherwise dealt with the goods, and considerable discussion took place before me with regard to the absence from my order of the words "permitting the disposal of or dealing with the goods"; and it was urged on behalf of Mr. Marshall that in the absence of these words, he had committed no breach of injunction and that he was not guilty of any contempt of Court. In my opinion the absence of these words makes no difference—See Harding v. Tingey (1).

Now it seems, to me abundantly clear from the facts stated in the affidavits that if Mr. Marshall had applied his mind to the injunction and communicated with the Jetty Superintendent or with the purchaser of the goods, or in any case, if he had communicated the name of the purchaser to the plaintiff, the removal of the goods in question could not have taken place, and that in that case these proceedings would not have been brought. Of course, when it comes to a matter affecting the liberty of the subject, he is entitled to have the terms of the injunction considered with the greatest strictness and have everything that could possibly be urged or said in his favour considered on his behalf and given effect to, and it would clearly be wrong to send Mr. Marshall to prison having regard to the facts and circumstances of this case, but I cannot think that he performed the duty, which is incumbent on every good citizen to perform, of assisting the process of the Court in whatever form it comes before him. That the goods were dealt with despite the injunction or after it had been granted was due to his action or rather inaction; he has, therefore, committed contempt of Court and accordingly although I make no order for committal, I direct Mr. Marshall to pay the costs of this motion.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Greaves, who has been treated before us as an order finding that there had been a contempt by the appellant Marshall which merited, if not imprisonment, at any rate the payment of the costs of the motion. The notice of motion called upon J. I. Marshall, an assistant of the defendant firm, to take notice that on Monday, the 29th of March 1915, an application would be made on behalf of the plaintiff for an order that he, J. I. Marshall, do stand committed to the custody of the Superintendent of the Presidency Jail for having committed a breach of the injunction granted by Mr. Justice Greaves on the 20th March 1915, restraining the defendant firm, their servants and agents from disposing, selling or dealing in any manner with the goods referred to in the plaint. That notice of motion is erroneous, for the injunction makes no mention of Mr. Marshall or of servants and agents. It necessarily follows from this that the procedure which had been adopted was misconceived. The proceeding against Mr. Marshall, if any, should have been for assisting in a contempt of Court. But the case need not be disposed of on that ground, because on the merits it has not been made out that Mr. Marshall in any way assisted in a contempt of Court. He did nothing. He did not dispose of, sell or deal with the goods nor did he in any way assist in disposing, selling or dealing with them after service on him of the injunction. All that he did was done prior to the injunction. It has been suggested before us that he is in some way responsible for the delivery which is said to have taken place after the injunction. But on the facts it appears, that the delivery was prior to the injunction. There was no contempt or participation in contempt on Mr. Marshall's part. In my opinion the order of the learned Judge is erroneous and must be set aside and the motion dismissed with costs of the hearing before Mr. Justice Greaves and before us.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Sale by unregistered document followed up by delivery of possession—Subsequent vendee under registered sale-deed—Notice of prior sale—Priority—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 50.

Mere delivery of possession in pursuance of an unregistered deed of sale will be effective to pass title to the vendee but such delivery must be with the consent, express or implied, of the seller, and in connection with and to give effect to the contract of sale. [p. 8, col. 1.]

But to give such sale priority (where the competition is between the purchaser and a subsequent vendee claiming under a registered document) it is essential that the subsequent vendee should at the time of his sale have notice of the prior unregistered sale-deed and possession thereunder. [p. 9, col. 2.]

Per Tyabji, J.—In the case of immoveable property of less than Rs. 100 in value, an oral transfer (without any document) but followed by delivery of possession confers on the transferee an indefeasible title to the interest transferred. [p. 11, col. 1.]

A sale or mortgage by a written but unregistered instrument, if followed by delivery of the property, transfers the ownership of or an interest in the property but the title so created is liable to be defeated by the vendor subsequently selling or mortgaging the same property by a registered instrument. [p. 11, col. 1.]

The right of an unregistered transferee is not defeated by a registered transferee who had notice of the prior unregistered transfer. [p. 11, col. 1.]

on the 22nd and 30th October 1913 and having stood over for consideration till the 4th November 1913, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The 4th defendant, the appellant, relied on an oral sale on the 4th May 1901, the date of her unregistered document, Exhibit I, executed by the 1st defendant; the plaintiff on a registered sale-deed, Exhibit A, executed on the 5th May 1908 by the 1st and 2nd defendants. The question is whether on the latter date the plaintiff's vendors had any title to convey; and the answer to it depends under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act on whether the 4th defendant's oral sale included a delivery of the property sold, that is, whether the 1st defendant placed the 4th defendant in possession.

The 4th defendant relied primarily on an alleged delivery to her of the property at the Monigar's house at the time of the execution of Exhibit I and her alleged enjoyment from that date. The learned District Judge has found some difficulty in applying the authorities he cited to these allegations. But their result seems to us plain, that proof of a formal delivery of the property by the seller is unnecessary, if there is proof that possession passed to the buyer and that it did so with the assent, express or implied, of the seller and in connection with and to give effect to the contract of sale.

In this case the 4th defendant relied on the delivery to her in the Monigar's house at the execution of Exhibit I and on enjoyment from its date or, in the alternative, on enjoyment from some later date as given in connection with the sale. Our attention has been called to the District Judge's observation that there is really no evidence that the 4th defendant obtained possession on the date of Exhibit I. But, as he also set out fully the evidence as to what happened in the Monigar's house and as to enjoyment, we understand him to mean only that there was no evidence of value. His conclusion on the former point is not stated distinctly. But it is clear from the tenor of his judgment that he concurred in the District Munsif's decision that the delivery in the Monigar's house (whatever its effect) and enjoyment from the date of Exhibit I were not proved.

The first point for decision is then, whether the 4th defendant was placed in possession at any later date before the 5th May 1908. The learned District Judge, no doubt, referred at the end of his judgment to her failure to prove that the land was delivered to her. But he had already referred to the ample evidence on the plaintiff's side that she had been in possession for "only three or four years prior to November 1910" and, as the plaintiff admitted the 4th defendant's possession, this must be taken as expressing his conclusion. His judgment is dated the 8th August 1911, and there is, therefore, no finding on the essential point, whether possession was obtained by the 4th defendant before or after Exhibit A. If she did not prove that it was so obtained, she must fail. If she did prove this, it will be necessary for the District Judge to decide in the light of the foregoing whether the transfer of possession to her fulfilled the other requisites above referred to.

We accordingly call for findings on the following issues:—

(1) Is it proved that the 4th defendant obtained possession before the 5th May 1908?

(2) If she did so, did she do so with the assent, express or implied, of the 1st defendant, and in connection with, and to give effect to, the contract of sale between them?

On the first of these issues no fresh evidence is necessary since the question was tried fully in the Court of first instance.

We have been asked in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 2458 of 1913 to admit in evidence here or to direct the admission by the District Court at the remand hearing of a document tendered there but not admitted at the hearing of the appeal. There is nothing before us to explain the 4th defendant's failure to make this document evidence at the trial in the Court of first instance. The only affidavit is one by the clerk of the 4th defendant's Vakil to the effect that the document was tendered in the District Court; but there is nothing as to the clerk's means of knowledge. In the circumstances the document cannot be admitted, and Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 2458 of 1913 must be dismissed with costs.

AMMANI v. JAGANNATHA REDDI.

* It is not clear that the point raised by the second issue remanded has been considered by either Court. On it any fresh evidence, which may be adduced, should be taken and considered.

The findings should be submitted within six weeks from the date of this order and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

TYABJI, J.—I agree.

In compliance with the above order of this Court, the District Judge of South Arcot submitted the following

FINDINGS —

My finding on the 1st issue remanded is that the 4th defendant did obtain possession of the southern half of the field, i. e., the suit land, and was in possession of it at least from 1902, the date of the earliest katchat, Exhibit III, that she was probably in possession prior to that date and that she probably got into possession shortly after the execution of Exhibit I.

With regard to the 2nd issue, I see no reason for not accepting the 4th defendant's evidence that she took possession shortly after the execution of Exhibit I with the express consent of 1st and 2nd defendants given at the time when Exhibit I was executed; but if it is held that it is open to me to record such a finding, on the ground that the general tenor of my predecessor's judgment shows that he found that permission to occupy the suit land was not given at the time when Exhibit I was executed, then my finding on the 2nd issue remanded is that it must be presumed that the 4th defendant got into possession of the suit land about 1902, if not earlier, with the implied consent of both the 1st and 2nd defendants as their vendee, in the absence of any explanation on behalf of her vendors, on whose evidence the plaintiff relies, as to how she got into possession except as their vendee.

In the result my findings on both the issues remanded are in 4th defendant's favour.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 30th April 1914 after the receipt of the findings called for by order of this Court dated 4th November 1913 and having stood over for consideration till the 27th July 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The learned District Judge's findings on the issue remanded are in 4th defendant's favour. It is now, however, argued that they do not entitle her to a decree, unless it is proved that plaintiff, claiming under a registered document, had notice of the prior unregistered conveyance to her. The question of notice was not raised at the last hearing of the appeal, and, therefore, no issue regarding it was remanded. But in the circumstances of the case and in view of the course of pleading we think that plaintiff should be permitted to raise it. Krishnamma v. Suranna (1) is authority in favour of plaintiff's contention and in spite of the considerations referred to in the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver, is binding on us. The question of fact involved has not been considered by either of the lower Courts, and we must, therefore, remand the following issue for a finding:—

"Whether at the date of Exhibit A, the plaintiff had notice of the transfer to the 4th defendant by Exhibit I."

Fresh evidence may be taken. The finding should be submitted within six weeks and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

TYABJI, J.—The plaintiff and 4th defendant are rival claimants to a piece of land, which is "of a value less than Rs. 100." On the 4th of May 1901, the 4th defendant purchased the land from its last admitted owners and was according to the finding, which we accept, put into possession of it. The sale-deed evidencing this transaction is unregistered (Exhibit 1). Seven years after, on 5th May 1908, the plaintiff became the ostensible purchaser of the same land by a registered instrument, Exhibit A.

The plaintiff relies upon section 50 of the Indian Registration Act to oust the 4th defendant.

Section 50 of the Registration Act, omitting the portions that are not material and incorporating in it section 18, clause (a), to which it refers, runs as follows:—

"Every document.....which purports or operates to create.....any right, title or interest.....of a value less than

(1) 16 M. 148; 3 M. L. J. 54.

AMMANI v. JAGANNATHA REDDI.

Rs. 100 to or in immoveable property (in this case Exhibit A.).....shall, if duly registered, take effect as regards the property comprised therein against every unregistered document (in this case Exhibit I) relating to the same property, and not being a decree or order, whether such unregistered document be of the same nature as the registered document or not."

The 4th defendant resists the plaintiff's claim on the strength of the following paragraph of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act:—

"In the case of tangible immoveable property of a value less than one hundred rupees, such transfer (i. e., a sale) may be made by delivery of the property."

The interpretation of these sections of the law is settled by a long series of decisions. In Bimaraz v. Papaya (2) decided prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, it was pointed out that section 48 of the Registration Act prevents an oral agreement or declaration (followed by possession) from being postponed in effect to a registered document. So that an oral sale followed by delivery of possession is not defeated by a subsequent sale through a registered document. But section 48 of the Registration Act does not (so it was held) similarly save the operation of a sale made not orally but by an unregistered document. The startling result is referred to in the decision: an unregistered written instrument not requiring registration, followed by possession, has less effect than an oral declaration or agreement so followed.

This result is the more startling because (as it is said in the case cited) a written instrument is but an oral declaration committed to writing. Hence where there is a written instrument followed by delivery of possession, ex hypothesi, there are three stages: (1) the oral declaration (2), the written instrument and (3) delivery of possession. But the Court apparently proceeded on the basis that the existence of the second stage prevents its being said that there is an oral declaration followed by delivery of possession within the terms of section 48 of the Indian Registration Act.

That decision was pronounced in 1881.

(2) 3 M. 46.

The next year the Transfer of Property Act was passed. The effect of the two Acts was considered in a very elaborate manner by a Full Bench of Calcutta in Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy (3) and of Madras in Krishnamma v. Suranna (1). In these cases it was argued in effect that assuming that the interpretation of the Registration Act, section 50, demanded the startling result which was referred to in Bimaraz v. Papaya (2), that difficulty was removed by the Transfer of Property Act section 54, inasmuch as section 54 does not refer either to an oral declaration or to an unregistered document, but provides for a transfer of property by delivery of possession alone without referring to the consideration whether immediately prior to the delivery of possession there was merely oral agreement or a documentary instrument. In other words, accepting the interpretation put in Bimaraz v. Papaya (2) upon sections 48 and 50 of the Registration Act, it was argued that the Legislature had by section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act provided that an unregistered instrument followed by delivery shall not have less effect than an oral declaration so followed. This argument was supported on the ground that the Transfer of Property Act completes the transfer by delivery alone, that after the ownership of any property is vested in one person, another person cannot without the consent of the then owner transfer its ownership to a third: and that in this way the provisions of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act protected a person with an unregistered written instrument to whom the property had been delivered no less effectively than section 48 of the Registration Act protected one to whom the properties were orally transferred. See Mr. Justice Prinsep's dissenting judgment in Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy (3) and Krishnamma v. Suranna (1). This argument, however, has not found acceptance. It has been held that the title given by section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act to an unregistered holder is liable to be defeated under the rule of priority by a valid later sale or mortgage evidenced by a duly registered document. See Krishnamma v. Suranna (1),

On the other hand, it was held that if the subsequent transferee with notice of the existing unregistered deed has notice of the existing unregistered deed, then the registered deed gives its holder no priority. Fuzludeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (4), Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy (3), Bimaraz v. Papaya (2), Khali Ram v. Himmata (5).

The rules of law as propounded in the decisions above referred to may be stated in the following terms:—

In the case of immoveable property of a less value than Rs. 100 (1) an oral transfer (without any document) followed by delivery of possession confers upon the transferee an indefeasible title to the interest transferred [section 48 of, Registration Act, Bimaraz v. Papaya (2), Krishnamma v. Suranna (1)].

(2) A sale or mortgage evidenced by a written but unregistered instrument, if followed by delivery of the property, transfers the ownership of or an interest in the property, but the title or interest so created is liable to be defeated, by the vendor subsequently selling or mortgaging the same property by a registered instrument [section 50 of the Registration Act, Bimaraz v. Papaya (2), Krishnamma v. Suranna (1)].

(3) The right of the unregistered transferee is not defeated by a registered transferee who had notice of the prior unregistered transfer. [Krishnamma v. Suranna (1), Fuzldeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (4).]

Though the law seems now to be settled by the decisions after so much doubt and difference of opinion, I cannot help joining in the desire expressed by more than one of the learned Judges who have had to interpret sections 48 and 50 of the Registration Act and section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act that the Legislature should make the law explicit so as to make it not only free from doubt, but also easy of reference. It may be assumed that the interpretation put upon the Acts by the Judges whose opinion has prevailed has been accepted by the Legislature, in spite of the anomaly referred to in Bimaraz v. Papaya (2) and by Prinsep, J., in Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram Roy (3) and the hardship caused by interpreting section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act in such a manner that though ownership may be transferred to the vendee under the section, yet the title of the transferee is so precarious as to depend upon the honesty or vigilance of an entire stranger, and of a person who has no interest left in the property transferred. But in any case it is not satisfactory that the rules of law relating to transfer of property should have to be discovered by a laborious examination of decisions. If the title obtained by delivery of the property under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act is subject to be defeated in the manner above referred to and that defeasance can itself be prevented by notice, it is surely laying a trap for the unwary to leave these important provisions of the law unexpressed in the Act.

The law being as I understand it, the 4th defendant's title to the property depends upon the question whether the plaintiff had notice of the sale to the 4th defendant prior to Exhibit A on which the plaintiff relies.

There is no finding on this question. It is true that the District Judge refers to the fact that "the 1st defendant as P. W. No. 4 says that the plaintiff knew of his having executed the sale-deed, Exhibit I, to 4th defendant and of his alleged subsequent refusal to sell the land to her." This fact and the fact that the 4th defendant has been found to have been in possession may furnish evidence of notice (as pointed out in the cases to which I have referred), but as the rights of the parties depend entirely on this issue, it will be desirable to have it considered after the parties have had an opportunity of adducing evidence on it. I, therefore, agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

In compliance with the above order of remand, the District Judge of South Arcot submitted the following

FINDING.—I am asked to submit a finding on the following issue:—

"Whether at the date of Exhibit A, the plaintiff had notice of the transfer to the 4th defendant by Exhibit I."

I find on the evidence of D. W. No. 4 and D. W. No. 5 as well as on the evidence of plaintiff's own witness P. W. No. 4 coupled with the fact that plaintiff was the owner of the land just south of the suit land and must have known of 4th defendant's possession of the suit land for many years prior to Exhibit A, that the plaintiff had notice of the transfer to 4th defendant by Exhibit I prior to the date of Exhibit A.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court called for by order of this Court dated 27th July 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the lower Appellate Court's finding; 4th defendant's appeal is allowed; the suit as against her is dismissed with costs throughout. Her costs will be recovered from the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The plaintiff has throughout claimed in the alternative possession or a refund of half the purchase-money paid by him from defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have not opposed this claim. The plaintiff must, therefore, be given a decree for Rs. 43 with interest at 6 per cent. from 6th May 1908 to date of realisation. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 will pay the plaintiff's costs throughout.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Rangpur, dated the 6th April 1909.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti, Hem Chandra Mittra and Sarat Kumar Mittra, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application made by one Bejoy Kumar Roy Chowdhury for revocation of Probate of the Will of one Kashi Nath Gupta. Kashi Nath Gupta made his Will in August 1883 and died on the same day. He left a widow named Nalini Sundari Gupta, the appellant-opposite party in this case, a daughter, Sarat Sasi by another wife Niroda Sundari Gupta, and his mother Bama Sundari. Bama Sundari applied for Probate of her son's Will, but died before the order on her application was made. An order in this matter was passed on the 31st March 1884. The next proceedings were the two applications one by Prosonno Chandra Sen, the father of Nalini Sundari, and the other by Umesh Chandra Mojumdar, the brother of Niroda Sundari, for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. Both these applications were refused on the 2nd April 1884. The matter was then brought up to this Court, but the appeal was dismissed on the ground that no Letters of Administration could be granted, the estate then being in the custody of the Court of Wards. In 1889 the present petitioner, Bejoy Kumar Roy Chowdhury, was born. He is the son of Sarat Sasi and so grandson of Kashi Nath. On the 24th April 1893, Probate of the Will of Kashi Nath was granted to Nalini Sundari as executrix. There had been another application by Sarat Sasi, who was then a minor, through her husband for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed, which was disposed of on the same day, that application being dismissed. It appears that Probate was granted to Nalini Sundari in consequence of a compromise which was arrived at between her and Basanta Kumar, the husband of Sarat Sasi. It was agreed between them that the objection to the Probate should be withdrawn, and the Will was proved in common form by the examination of one witness. The petitioner attained his majority on the 25th July 1907. Previous to this his mother Sarat Sasi had died on the 18th June 1906. He filed the present petition for revocation of the Probate on the ground that he had not been cited in the Probate proceedings of 1893. The petitioner is the reversioner to the estate of Kashi Nath Gupta and he would, therefore, be entitled apart from any Will to succeed to that estate, after the decease of Nalini Sundari, the testator's widow.

The learned District Judge has granted the application and disposed of the objections of Nalini Sundari Gupta in a somewhat perfunctory manner. He holds that, because the petitioner was not cited, the Probate must, therefore, be revoked and he has not gone into any other questions though Nalini Sundari, the opposite party, had put in a petition raising a number of issues. We think that the learned Judge was in error and that he ought to have considered the other questions arising, before he could revoke the Probate on the ground that the petitioner was not cited. We may refer to the case of Kunja Lal Chowdhury v. Kailash Chandra Chowdhury (1). In that case it was held that though an infant has a right in such cases to apply after he comes of age for revocation of Probate obtained by consent, yet he may be barred by acquiescence and delay for a long time or by subsequent ratification of the disposition of the Will from putting the executor to the proof of the Will in solemn form or from contesting its genuineness. In the present case it is alleged that the petitioner did, as a matter of fact, accept the two-annas share which was bequeathed by the Will to Sarat Sasi and her heirs, that he had been in enjoyment of that share and he cannot now dispute the Probate or the genuineness of the Will. This and other circumstances must be inquired into by the District Judge before he can pass an order in favour of the petitioner. The Judge must inquire whether the petitioner is debarred in any way from applying to have the proceedings re-opened. If, after taking such evidence as may be offered on that point, he still decides in favour of the petitioner, we think that he ought to give the opposite party an opportunity of proving the Will in solemn form in the presence of the petitioner. There seems to be no reason why this should not be done without instituting fresh proceedings in the matter of Probate.

We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the case to him for determination of the various points after taking fresh evidence.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result of the proceedings before the District Judge. We fix the hearing fee in this appeal at five gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed ; Case remanded.

No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 28, Sch. I, Art. 144—Grant to Municipality—Adverse possession against Municipality for more than 12 years, effect of.

The plaintiff sued the Karachi Municipality seeking a declaration of his title as against the Municipality regarding a portion of land forming a corner space adjoining a public street alleging to have acquired the rights of the Municipality to the land by adverse possession for more than 12 years before suit. By its Resolution dated the 3rd November 1873, the Government had granted the beneficial interest in all waste lands within the Karachi Municipal District to the Karachi Municipality including the exclusive right of possession for ever, subject only to the right of resumption if required for a public purpose:

Held, that the possession of the Municipality was not that of an agent or a servant of the Government but in its own right as a beneficial owner, and that consequently the right of the Municipality to possession was extinguished by adverse possession for 12 years under section 28 read with Article 144 of the Limitation Act. KARACHI MUNICIPALITY v. SHAMOO LADHA.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—On the issue remanded the lower Court has found—there was transferred by Government to the Municipality, on or about 1873, the exclusive right of possession for ever over the land in suit, subject to the right of resumption if required for a public purpose; there was also transferred the right to grant a lease for a long term, subject to and in accordance with certain rules to be sanctioned by Government.

Objections to this finding have been filed by the second defendant, the Government Pleader. The Secretary of State contends that he is prejudiced by the terms of the issue and that it should have been wide enough to include the question as to whether title vests in Government or in the Municipality. But the issue does cover this question for the antecedent title of Government is admitted and, therefore, the only question that remains is whether any of those admitted rights of ownership have been transferred to the Municipality. The object of joining the second defendant in the suit was to obtain the best evidence on this point and to safeguard the interests of Government. The Government Pleader admits that he has had every opportunity of adducing evidence as to the present title claimed by Government and it is, therefore, difficult to understand on what the allegation of prejudice rests.

The further evidence produced consists of two Government Resolutions intermediate between the last two referred to in the remand order, i. e., the ambiguous Government Resolution of 1873 and Government Resolution of 1910, in which the transfer of a beneficial interest to the Municipality was admitted. These two Government Resolutions are (1) of 1898 and (2) of 1909.

The Government Resolution of 1898 arose out of a reference by the Commissioner-in-Sind who pointed out that the practice of the Municipality granting leases of waste lands had been in force since 1883 and recommended that Government, with a view to assure the title of grantees of waste land in Karachi, should formally transfer all such land to the Municipality. There was much correspondence on this reference. Government took the advice of its law officers and referred the matter to the Government of India. Finally in accordance with suggestions made by the Government of India, Government issued this Government Resolution drawing a distinction between lands granted prior to the Government Resolution of 1873 and lands granted subsequent to that date. As to the former lands the Government Resolution states: "The Commissioner-in-Sind accepts the conclusion that the Municipality retains no right in the lands leased before the 3rd November 1873" (the date of the Government Resolution of 1873). This accords with the conclusion arrived at in the remand order.

As to the latter lands i. e., lands leased after the 3rd November 1873, the Government Resolution states that "full proprietary rights" have not been transferred to the Municipality, but that "as pointed out by the Honorable Advocate-General, the Municipality is entitled to all the benefits arising from the lands in question except such as would arise from the sale of the lands themselves. The retention of the proprietary right in the State is in consonance with the stipulation that Government may re-possess themselves of such of the lands as may be required for a public purpose."

Here is a clear admission that while Government are the owners of the land, still some of the rights of ownership have been transferred to the Municipality, and these rights included the right of possession subject to dispossession by Government if the land were required for a public purpose.

Government, therefore, recognized that a beneficial interest in the land had been transferred to the Municipality and in the 2nd Government Resolution, that of 1909, rules were sanctioned regulating the disposal of the land by the Municipality. The preamble to these rules is as follows:—

"Whereas Government has granted the beneficial interest in waste lands within the Karachi Municipal District to the Karachi Municipality under Government Resolution 6072, dated 3rd November 1873, the following rules are made for the disposal of the said lands."

This clear admission of a transfer of an interest to the Karachi Municipality was repeated in the Government Resolution of 1910 referred to in the remand order.

KARACHI MUNICIPALITY v. SHAMOO LADHA.

On the face of these admissions it is idle to contend that the possession of the Municipality is that of an agent or servant of Government. The Municipality are in possession and have a right as against Government to retain possession, subject only to dispossession by Government when the land is required for a public purpose.

It is contended for the Municipality that the transfer on the 3rd November 1873 was prior in date to the enactment of the Bombay District Municipal Act, VI of 1873; that the Municipality on that date was incorporated under Act XXVI of 1850, and had no power to hold land. Mr. Rupchand suggests, therefore, that the grant was ineffectual as the Municipality was not a competent transferee.

Mr. Rupchand points out that no express power to hold land is conferred by Act XXVI of 1850. On the other hand it is unusual to find such a power expressed in Indian Acts. In English Statutes of Incorporation the power has to be expressly conferred in order to avoid the Statutes of Mortmain, but there is no such necessity in India. For instance, the power of a Company to hold land is expressly conferred by section 16 of the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908, but there is no such power in the corresponding section 41 of the Indian Companies Act VI of 1882. No doubt, a statutory Corporation can only exercise such powers as are expressly or impliedly conferred by the statute creating it: Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche (1). But the implication is, I think, clear in Act XXVI of 1850, for sections 6 and 2 require the Municipality to make tanks and roads and that must imply the power of acquiring land for the purpose of opening up roads and making tanks. The power to hold land was not expressly conferred upon District Municipalities until 1884: see section 15 of Bombay Act II of 1884, but it was similarly implied in Bombay Act VI of 1873, for section 17 declared that certain immoveable property vested in them. I feel no doubt, therefore, that the Municipality were competent transferees of the interest vested in them by the Government Resolution of 1873.

Mr. Rupchand next contends that the plaintiff only claims a lease and that as lessee his possession cannot be adverse. The word used in the plaint, however, is sanad or grant and paragraph 2 of the plaint expressly claims ownership of the land. Plaintiff claims that the Municipality have granted their rights to him or in the alternative to have acquired those rights by prescription.

The rights transferred by Government have been extinguished and are now vested in the plaintiff. The plaintiff having the right of possession, the site is not one to which section 122 (2) of the Municipal Act applies, i. e., it is not "an open space not being private property." The expression private property does not imply that all the rights of ownership are vested in a private person—otherwise a lessee from Government for 999 years would be liable to eviction by a Municipality.

I would, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal. Plaintiff to recover his costs in both Courts from defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 2 to bear his own costs.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—The lower Court's finding on the issue remanded by this Court is that there was transferred by Government to the Municipality, in or about 1873, the exclusive right of possession for ever over the land in suit, subject to the right of resumption if required for a public purpose; there was also transferred the right to grant a lease for a long term, subject to and in accordance with certain rules to be sanctioned by Government.

This finding is attacked both by the Government Pleader and Mr. Rupchand for the Municipality.

In my opinion, however, nothing which has been urged by them upsets the conclusion as to the effect of the Government Resolution of 1873, which has been come to by the two learned Judges, Mr. Waley Cohen and Mr. Crouch, in the Court below, and which after full consideration and much discussion was adopted by Government themselves. Thus in paragraph 3 of Government Resolution No. 2410, dated 5th April 1898, Government adopt the view of the Advocate-General that "the Municipality is entitled to all the benefits arising from the lands in question, except such as would arise from the sale of the lands themselves", and Government have in 1910 made the further express admission referred to in this Court's previous judgment. This construction of the Resolution of 1873 is supported by Rule VIII of those contained in that Resolution, and no sufficient reason is shown for treating it as an erroneous one. On the other hand the construction which Mr. Wadhmal asked the Court to put on it, viz., that it transferred full proprietary rights to the Municipality, is clearly opposed both to the language used and the principle that a grant from the Crown is construed most strictly against the grantee and most beneficially for the Crown, so that nothing will pass to the grantee by the clear and express words (Broom's Legal Maxims, 7th Edition, page 450).

The main contention of the Government Pleader and Mr. Rupchand was that, notwithstanding the transfer of the right of possession and to grant leases to the Municipality, the proprietary right remained in Government, and the Municipality in regard to these lands occupied the position merely of an agent or trustee for Government.

But the extent of the beneficial interest transferred to the Municipality shows beyond any doubt that it cannot be regarded as a mere agent, and though, no doubt, it holds the lands as a trustee, it is trustee, not for Government, but for the purposes of the proper management of the Karachi Municipal affairs in accordance with the provisions of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901. Assuming that the ultimate proprietary right to the land remained vested in Government, this, in my opinion, makes no difference in this case. On this point I concur with the remarks of the learned Judge in his reasons for his finding, viz., "The Municipality cannot transfer the full rights of ownership, but having been given possession of all waste lands with the expressed intention on the part of Government that they shall retain possession, and having expressly been given authority to grant long leases on certain conditions, they can, so long as they act within the rules sanctioned by Government, give a perfectly good title to their leases."

To put it in another way, the Municipality is "a person entitled to the possession of" the waste lands in question within the meaning of section 8 of the Specific Relief Act. It could, therefore, have sued the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title for possession of this piece of land in its own name, by virtue of the right to such possession conferred on it by Government, cf. Coverdale v. Charlton (2) and the remarks of James, L. J., in Rolls v. Vestry of St. George, Southwark, (3) that that case decided "that something more than easement passed to the local board, and that they had some right of property in and on and in respect of the sort which would enable them as owners to bring a possessory action against trespassers". Any such suit must under Article 144 of the Limitation Act be brought within 12 years of the time when the possession of the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title became adverse to the Municipality. If that period has expired, then the right of the Municipality to this property has become extinguished under section 28 of the Limitation Act. The plaintiff in his suit merely seeks a declaration of his title as against the Municipality, and not as against Government, and it is open to him to claim this limited declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Any proprietary or other right that may be vested in the Crown cannot affect the decision of this question as between the plaintiff and the Municipality, nor can it affect the operation of section 28 and Article 144 of the Limitation Act in regard to the right of the Municipality to possession of the land in suit.

In this particular case, it was admitted by the Pleader for the Municipality at the trial that the plaintiff, or his father, had a shop on the land for 12 years prior to 1900. The land is a corner space adjoining a public street, and such an occupation of the site must, I think, be taken to be adverse to the Municipality. There is no allegation by the Municipality that the occupation was permissive, and the evidence points the other way. In the circumstances I think it clearly must be taken to have given notice of adverse possession which, if the Municipal authorities had exercised due diligence, should have led to inquiries by them and knowledge of the encroachment long before 1908. Even if the witness Nathan is correct in his statement that the shop first came into existence in 1897 or 1898, plaintiff has still acquired a prescriptive title as against the Municipality.

Sub-section (2) of section 122 of the Municipal Act does not, in my opinion, help the Municipality in this case. As plaintiff has acquired a prescriptive title as against it, the land is "private property," at any rate qua the Municipality. An estate less than freehold of the kind known in English Law as "chattels real," is nonetheless "private property," cf. Chapter V, of Volume I, of Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England.

Mr. Rupchand further contended that the Municipality could not in 1873 hold any rights in lands, as no such power is conferred on them by Act XXVI of 1850, which was then in force. But this contention proceeds on the English rule of law that corporations cannot lawfully hold lands without the license of the Crown or the authority of Parliament. As stated in the Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, Volume 9, page 441, this rule is based on the Mortmain Acts, which do not apply to India, cf. Broughton v. Mercer (3), and in any case, as the transfer was one not merely with the license of the Crown, but by the Crown, the rule in question would not invalidate this transfer. There is no reason, therefore, for holding that Government could not legally transfer the beneficial interest in the lands which it did (under powers conferred on it by the Government of India) in the Government Resolution of 1873. The Act of 1850 also seems clearly to imply that a Corporation under that Act might legally hold lands, though this is not expressly stated.

I, therefore, concur in the order contained in the learned Judicial Commissioner's judgment.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought in the name of the two plaintiffs, Suleman Haji Usman and Jusub Jan Mohammad, purporting to be disciples of a certain Pir, for relief regarding an alleged Darga of the Pir Saheb, said to be in the possession of the defendants, for a declaration that the Darga was the owner of all the moveable and immoveable property in the possession of the defendants; that the defendants were unfit to act as trustees; for a perpetual injunction against the defendants; and that the plaintiffs or other persons might be appointed trustees in their place, and put in possession of the property.

Under the authority of a Government Resolution, the Collector of Thana was invested with the powers of the Advocate-General under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, and by virtue of section 157 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, the powers conferred operate under the present Code in respect of sections 91 and

92. We are here concerned with section 92. Sub-section (2) of that section provides that "save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to, except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section." This being a suit in respect of such a trust claiming reliefs specified in sub-section (1), it can only be supported if brought in conformity with the provisions of section 92. It is sought to show that these provisions have been complied with by a communication from the Collector in reply to a petition addressed to him by the 1st plaintiff alone. That petition states that "the petitioner as a member of the Muhammadan community, and especially a disciple of His Holiness Pir Mowlanasaheb, wants to file a civil suit against the said heirs according to the Civil Procedure Code, sections 92 and 93. Your Honour's consent is necessary for the institution of the suit. The suit is to be filed in the name of the petitioner and another member of the Muhammadan community and disciple of the Pir Sahab, Jusub Jan Muhammed." The Collector's reply is as follows:—"The Collector doubts whether section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to this case, but if the Court holds that it does, the Collector hereby declares his consent to the filing of a suit to claim any of the reliefs specified in section 92, which the Court may deem fit to grant."

In some High Courts it was considered, until the year 1908, that the provisions of section 539 were permissive and not imperative, but that has never been the view of this High Court, and the Legislature by the enactment of sub-section (2) of section 92 has made it clear that section 92 must be regarded as imperative.

The Collector under section 93 stands in the position with regard to his Collectorate of the Advocate-General in the Presidency town, and the suit which requires his consent is a suit which he, if he thought fit, would be competent to file in his own name as a public officer, whose duty it is to protect public charities as the representative of the Crown in that capacity, and he has no right to consent to the institution of a suit by two persons claiming to have an interest in the trust, unless it is such a suit as he would consider himself to be justified in filing at the relation of such two persons in his own name. The duties of the Collector have been described by the Calcutta High Court in Sajedur Raja Chowdhuri v. Gour Mohun Das Baishnav (1). It is there stated that—

"The Collector is required to exercise his judgment in the matter before giving his consent [to the institution of a suit]. This view is borne out by the observations of Lord Eldon in Ex parte Skinner (2)...The Collector in giving his consent has to exercise his judgment in the matter, and see, not only whether the persons suing are persons who have an interest in the trust, but also whether the trust is a public trust of the kind contemplated by the section, and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust."

The observations of Lord Eldon in Ex parte Skinner (2) were as follows:—

"It appears to me that such a petition as the present, supposing it to be properly within the scope of the Act of Parliament, can derive no sanction from the signature of the Solicitor-General, he being competent to act as, and in the place of, the Attorney-General, only when there is no such officer as an Attorney-General. The intention of the Legislature in framing the Act was to guard charitable trusts from abuse, and, for that purpose, to prevent such proceedings from being instituted as are too frequently instituted for no other reason than because it is known that the costs will be payable out of the charity funds. It was with this view that the Legislature provided for the signature of the Attorney-General, or, in case of there being no Attorney, of the Solicitor-General; and I desire to have it understood, that no petition under the Act ought to receive that signature, except upon the same deliberation that it would be thought fit to afford to the case if it were presented in the shape of an information."

We may point out with reference to the powers of the Advocate-General, which are vested in the Collector, that it is an invariable practice in this Presidency for the Advocate-General, where he does not file the suit himself, to endorse his consent upon the plaint. If the Collector had followed this practice he would perhaps have more clearly realised his responsibilities in the matter. The plaint is, to a certain extent, his plaint as it is launched under his sanction. It should only be such a plaint as he would feel justified in filing himself.

In the present case we agree with the learned District Judge that the Collector has not acted in the manner provided by the section. He has not indicated on the proceedings that the suit is filed with his consent, and in that respect has not followed the practice of the officer whose powers he is to discharge. But more important than that, he has not even come to a conclusion that the suit is one which ought to be filed.

He doubts whether section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to this case, but if the Court holds that it does, the Collector "hereby declares his consent to the filing of the suit to obtain any of the reliefs specified in section 92 which the Court may deem fit to grant;" that is to say, instead of consenting to the institution of a suit for certain definite reliefs, of which he approves, he leaves it to the Court to decide whether such a suit ought to be filed or not. We are of opinion that he has not discharged the powers conferred upon him as intended by the Legislature, and we, therefore, hold that the suit has not been filed in conformity with the provisions of section 92, and that the learned District Judge was right in dismissing it on that ground.

We are not, however, satisfied that the Judge was justified in awarding two sets of costs to the defendants who had one and the same defence, and his award of costs has not been seriously defended by the learned Counsel who appears for the respondents. We affirm the decree and dismiss the appeal with costs. There must be only one set of costs against the plaintiffs throughout.

Decree affirmed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by plaintiffs-respondents to be allowed Pleader's fees as between Pleader and client under clause (g) of Appendix VI of the Rules of the Court. The fee of Rs. 30 allowable under rule (a) is inadequate having regard to the intricacy of the case, but Mr. Rupchand contends that under the authority of Goverdhandas v. Naraindas (1), the plaintiffs are not entitled to enhanced fees because they might have put a higher valuation on the injunction which they sought. The valuation made by the plaintiff would regulate the fee under clauses (a) and (b) of Appendix VI, but in no way affect the fee under clause (g). The case of Goverdhandas v. Naraindas (1) only rules that the low valuation is one of the circumstances which the Court will consider in the exercise of its discretion to grant special fees. It also proceeded on the ground that the conduct of the defendants had not contributed to the cost of the litigation. That is not the case here.

The length and the intricacy of the trial was chiefly due to the defendants' ignorance (1) 7 Ind. Cas. 601; 4 S. L. R. 37 (F. B.).

of their own title. This was the chief difficulty in the suit and it was for this reason that it became necessary to remand the appeal and join Government as a party—moreover the defendants made plaintiffs' suit a test case in order to decide an important question bearing upon their right of disposal of waste lands. We, therefore, think this case a fit one in which to order Pleader's fees to be assessed under clause (g) of Appendix VI of the Rules of the Court.

Order accordingly.

A plea of fraud will not be heard unless it is expressly and specifically advanced in the pleadings. [p. 20, col. 2.]

Mr. J. N. Lentaigue, for the Appellant.

Mr. Agabeg, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant, Lal Mohamed, sued for possession of a paddy land holding, measuring 56'55 acres, sold to him for Rs. 3,000, in 1911 by a registered conveyance executed by Mi Shwe Ban We, the owner, who died in December 1911. The defendants-respondents are Mra Tha Aung and Mi Hla Pru, husband and wife, who are the son-in-law and daughter respectively of the vendor, Mi Shwe Ban We, and who are in possession of the holding. The plaintiff sued also for a year's rent of the land alleging that the defendants were his tenants,

The defence was that at the time of the conveyance the vendor had no saleable interest in the land, as she had previously in 1904 made over the northern moiety of it by the way of gift to her daughter, the 2nd defendant, and in 1906 sold the remaining southern moiety to her son-in-law, Mra Tha Aung, for Rs. 360.

The plaintiff has been unsuccessful in both the lower Courts. Both Courts decided that the deceased Mi Shwe Ban We had no saleable interest in the land, having already disposed of it as pleaded in the written statement. But they went out of their way in impugning the genuineness of the plaintiff's conveyance. The District Court thought that the suspicion of fraud in this instrument was very strong and the payment of the alleged consideration doubtful. The Divisional Judge said: "I have no hesitation whatever in finding that plaintiff got a false document drawn up and got it executed by the deceased so as to bolster up a claim to the land." Both Judges overlooked the fact that the written statement of the defendants, which contains a detailed exposition of their case, makes no allegation of fraud but relies on only Mi Shwe Ban We's title. The lower Courts committed a serious error in making out for the defendants a defence of fraud which they had never pleaded, and from the judgments it seems probable that the view taken by the Judges on this point materially influenced them in deciding the real issues of the case against the plaintiff-appellant. No rule of practice is better established than that a plea of fraud will not be heard unless it is expressly and specifically advanced in the pleadings. The finding of fraud must be entirely eliminated. But I note that this finding rests on very slender foundations. There was no obligation on the plaintiff-appellant to produce the alleged previous mortgage document of 1262 B. E. As regards his statement that the particulars of holding as entered in the conveyance of 1911 were taken from the mortgage of 1262 B. E., the most that can be said is that it is a suspicious circumstance which may or may not be susceptible of an innocent explanation. The Judges disbelieved the evidence as to the payment of Rs. 1,200 in cash to Mi Shwe Ban We, but the grounds of their disbelief are not cogent. The mere fact that Mi Shwe Ban We after the conveyance showed no signs of prosperity is of little significance. She may have used the money to pay off other creditors. It would be most fair to conclude that she had not received the purchase-money merely because the purchaser was unable to show how she had disposed of it. Mi Shwe Ban We was an old woman at the time but there is no evidence beyond the bare statement of her daughter, the 2nd defendant-respondent, that she was in her dotage. There are no grounds for holding that she was not in full possession of her faculties. Even if fraud had expressly been pleaded by the defendants, I think it should be held to be unproved and the ordinary presumption in favour of fair dealing would prevail.

Turning now to the substantive defence, I see no reason to dissent from the finding of the lower Courts that the gift of the northern part of the holding 25'60, acres, to the 2nd defendant was proved. The land was made over to the defendant and a report was duly made to the Revenue Surveyor by the donor, Mi Shwe Ban We. It is urged that she could under the Dhammathats revoke the gift and she must be held to have exercised this power by actually selling it seven years later to the plaintiff-appellant. I am not prepared to hold that the gift in this case is governed by the Dhammathats at all. As in the Upper Burma case of Maung At Gyi v. Ma U Me (1), the mother treated the property as her own absolutely with an absolute power of disposal and the daughter claims it as her own in virtue of an exercise of that power in her favour. No question of inheritance or succession is involved. Nor has it been proved in this case any more than in the Upper Burma case that when a Burmese Buddhist father or mother makes a gift to a child, it is an implied incident that the gift is revocable at the parent's Will.

Moreover, if the donor had the power of revocation, an exercise of the power could not be inferred from the mere fact that the donor conveyed the property to a stranger; an express act of revocation would at least be necessary.

Mr. Lentaigue argues that the gift is invalid as it was not effected by a registered instrument under section 25, Contract Act. No instrument was necessary before the introduction of the Transfer of Property Act from 1st January 1905. The explanation to section 25, Contract Act, provides that nothing in the section shall affect the validity, as between donor and donee, of any gift actually made. The same rule applies as between the donee and the persons claiming through the donor, like the plaintiff-appellant in this case. I think it is clear that the conveyance to the plaintiff-appellant is of no effect as regards the area given to the 2nd defendant in 1904.

The alleged sale of 25'60 acres in 1906 stands on a different footing. The Transfer of Property Act was then in force and the transaction would, therefore, be ineffectual without a registered conveyance. At the eleventh hour the defendants made an effort to overcome this serious difficulty by producing evidence that this area was given by Mi Shwe Ban We to her son, Mg. Lon, in 1904 when she gave the other area to her daughter, and that the real vendor in the sale of 1906 was Mg. Lon though the transaction was carried out in the name of his mother as vendor as the land still stood in her name. This plea is clearly an afterthought; it is not suggested in the written statement that Mi Shwe Ban We sold the land on behalf of her son, and the defendants should not have been permitted to raise this inconsistent plea. Moreover Mg Lon's evidence was discredited by the lower Courts and it does not agree with the evidence of Nga So Maung who was called to corroborate Nga Lon. According to So Maung, Mg. Lon after receiving the land by gift from his mother let it out to a native of India for two years; but Nga Lon himself says nothing about this. If Mi Shwe Ban We had made a gift of 4 doons to Nga Lon at the same time that she gave the similar area to Mi Hla Win Pru, it is most unlikely that she would refrain from reporting the former transaction to the Revenue Authorities as she did the latter. It must be held, therefore, that at the time of conveyance to the plaintiff-appellant Lal Mohamed, in 1911, the vendor, Mi Shwe Ban We, had a good subsisting title to the whole of the holding of 56'55 acres except the area, 25'60 acres, which she had given to her daughter in 1904. The plaintiff-appellant's claim for rent remains to be decided. On this point, I agree with the lower Courts. It is clear that Mrs. Tha Aung disputed the plaintiff-appellant's claim to rent and though the plaintiff-appellant produced oral evidence that Mrs. Tha Aung had agreed to pay rent, I think it is very unlikely that he did so. He thought, no doubt, that he could maintain his title to the whole holding as against Lal Mohamed and in the circumstances the lower Courts were probably justified in refusing to believe the evidence of a tenancy.

The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and a decree will be granted in favour of the plaintiff-appellant for possession of the area claimed by him minus the area, 25'60 acres, given to Mi Hla Win Pru in 1904. The District Court should cause the area, 25'60 acres, to be demarcated in a compact block adjoining Mrs. Tha Aung's other land on the north.

The claim to rent is dismissed.

Looking to the excessive nature of the plaintiff-appellant's claim I direct that the parties shall pay their own costs throughout.

Decree set aside.

Custom—Succession—Self-acquired property—Statements in riwaj-i-am opposed to general custom, effect of—Gaur Brahmins of Palwal Tahsil of Gurgaon district—Collaterals and daughter—Pleadings.

It is a well-established general custom in the Punjab that as regards self-acquired property, i. e., property which has not descended from the common ancestor, a daughter or her son succeeds in preference to collaterals. [p. 22, col 2; p. 23, col. 1.]

Statements in the riwaj-i-am when opposed to the general custom can carry very little weight unless supported by instances. [p. 23, col. 1.]

Among Gaur Brahmins of Tahsil Palwal, District Gurgaon, collaterals do not exclude a daughter and her sons from self-acquired property. [p. 22, col. 2.]

An appellant cannot argue a point not raised in his memorandum of appeal. [p. 23, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 15th September 1913, dismissing the claim.

Lala Sangam Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are collaterals in the third degree of Gokal, and claim to succeed to his property to the exclusion of Gokal's daughter and her sons. The parties are Gaur Brahmins of the Palwal Tahsil of the Gurgaon District. Gokal died, so it appears, about 1885, and the estate was then held by his widow, Musammam Ram Devi, on whose death in 1912, the present dispute between the plaintiffs and the daughter of Gokal arose. The daughter died during the pendency of the suit, and her sons are now defendants in her stead. The lower Court finds that the parties are governed by custom, that the property is not ancestral qua the plaintiffs, and that no special custom is proved by which collaterals can exclude a daughter and her sons from self-acquired property. So the lower Court has dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appeal.

Though Mr. Kirkpatrick does not admit that the parties are governed by custom, it may be assumed that they are.

The first two grounds of appeal attack the finding of the lower Court as to the property not being ancestral qua the plaintiffs. Counsel for the plaintiffs has not thought fit to say a word in support of these grounds, and we need only say briefly that the lower Court's decision on this point seems perfectly correct.

Grounds 5 and 6 complain of proceedings having taken place in September to the prejudice of the plaintiffs, but here again Counsel has not thought it worth his while to address us, so we take it that there has been no real prejudice.

Mr. Sangam Lal's arguments are—

(1) that by general custom of the Province collaterals exclude a daughter even as regards self-acquired immoveable property;

(2) that in this particular case plaintiffs have proved that by custom of Gurgaon Brahmins a collateral excludes a daughter from all kinds of immoveable property.

As to what the general custom is, we consider it well-established that as regards self-acquired property, i.e., property which has not descended from the common ancestor, a daughter or her sons succeed in preference to the collaterals. There is ample authority for this. The authorities are to be found in Rattigan's Digest and we need not cite them here.

So the plaintiffs, in order to succeed, must prove a special custom. No doubt the rivaj-i-am (see page 7 of the paper-book) prepared in 1879 is in favour of the plaintiffs, but no instances are there quoted. We do not say that statements in a rivaj-i-am can never carry any weight unless supported by instances, but we certainly do consider that such statements, when opposed to the general custom, can carry very little weight unless supported by instances. Certain instances have been cited by the plaintiffs' witnesses, but on examination they are of no value. The instances are as follows:—

(1). Kallu was succeeded by his brother to the exclusion of his daughter, see evidence of Babu, P. W. No. 1. But the property was in part at least ancestral according to this witness, and according to Nathan Singh P. W. No. 5, it was wholly so.

(2). Bhura was succeeded by his collaterals. This case is cited by Babu, P. W. No. 1, and apparently by Nathan Singh, P. W. No. 5. Neither witness mentions the existence of a daughter, and Nathan says the land was ancestral.

(3). Nauba was not succeeded by his daughter. Here again the land was ancestral, see evidence of P. W. No. 5, Nathan.

(4). Devi Ram left a son and a daughter. Of course the son succeeded, excluding his sister. This is not a case of exclusion by a collateral.

(5). Baldeo was succeeded by his nephew to the exclusion of his daughters, see evidence of Madho, P. W. No. 2, who says the property was partly ancestral and partly self-acquired.

(6). Todha's daughter was excluded by collaterals. But the land was ancestral, see evidence of Chhajjan, P. W. No. 4.

(7). Ganeshi's property went to his collaterals on his widow's death. See evidence of Shib Lal, P. W. No. 6, who says Ganeshi's sister's sons were excluded. Of course a sister or her son cannot ordinarily succeed.

(8). Sandhi's widow made a gift to her daughter's sons, which the collaterals got upset. But the land was ancestral, see evidence of P. W. No. 6.

(9). Musammatt Dhan Kaur's case is cited by P. W. No. 6, who says Musammatt Dhan Kaur herself acquired land which went to her husband's brother, and not to her daughter's son, whom she tried in vain to adopt—So Shib Lal, P. W. No. 6, deposes. We can only say that if the version given by him is correct, the daughter's son was apparently foolish not to assert his rights to his grandmother's self-acquired property.

(10). Jisukh's daughter was excluded by a collateral. This case is cited by Nathan Singh, P. W. No. 5, who says the land was partly ancestral.

It will be seen that these instances can carry very little, if any weight. If in certain cases the estate comprised a little self-acquired land it is no wonder if the daughter did not trouble to contest the claim of the collateral.

But Counsel urges that some of defendant's witnesses also support the alleged custom. Sher Sahai (page 27) says he has some acquired property which will go to his nephew if he does not make a gift in his daughter's favour. Apparently he thinks the self-acquired property must go with the rest of the estate, but it does not at all follow that his opinion is correct. Ram Narain, D. W. No. 1, (pages 26-27) cites three instances in which a daughter succeeded by gift, and Counsel relies on this as showing that but for the gift the daughter would not have succeeded. But even though a daughter may be the heir there is nothing strange in her father making a gift in her life-time. The object of such a gift is to accelerate the succession, not to divert it. We agree with the lower Court that plaintiffs have failed to prove their right to exclude the daughter's sons.

In conclusion we note that Counsel wished to argue a point not raised in his memorandum of appeal, viz., that Sukh Ram, nephew of Gokal who died in 1902, was the last male owner. This argument was put in as an additional ground of appeal long after the period of limitation for appealing had expired and as it entirely varies the grounds on which plaintiffs claim possession of the property, we declined to hear Counsel in support of this ground. We merely note that if Sukh Ram ever succeeded to the property it is remarkable that plaintiffs did not claim the estate on his death; also that in the presence of Gokal's widow Sukh Ram's succession would be entirely opposed to custom, and that according to the plaint it was not Sukh Ram who succeeded on Gokal's death, but Gokal's widow who succeeded on the usual life-tenure and died eight months prior to institution of suit.

We uphold the decree of the lower Court dismissing the suit, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the first Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Hardasmal Ghurbamal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, widow of Laru, has sued Laru's brother, Ghuman, and his sons for partition of an estate consisting of a field, shops and houses. The defendants raised several and inconsistent defences. They said that Laru had made a verbal Will appointing defendants to be owners of all his property and declaring plaintiff No. 1 to be entitled only to maintenance during her life-time; that the estate was not purchased for the firm of Laru and Ghuman; that in that firm Laru had only 1/5th share; and that as Laru died in 1900, the partnership was dissolved in that year and the plaintiff's only remedy was a suit for an account for that dissolved partnership and that the remedy was barred by limitation.

The lower Court has found that there was no Will; that Laru and Ghuman were partners until the death of Laru on the 15th March 1900; and that Laru's share in the partnership was 26½ out of 54 annas; and that the property was acquired out of partnership assets. On all these points the findings of the lower Court have not been challenged. But the lower Court found that although the whole estate exclusive of two fields had been purchased out of partnership assets, yet the estate so purchased was held by Laru and Ghuman as co-owners and decreed plaintiff's claim for partition and possession of her husband's share. It is on this point alone that Mr. Hardasmal in his careful and able argument has attacked the judgment of the lower Court. His contention is that the mere fact that the land was purchased out of the partnership property raises a presumption that the land is partnership property. But in the case of a purchase of land it cannot be said that there is a presumption either way, for much depends upon the purpose for which the land was purchased. The law on this point was laid down in Bank of England case (1). Turner, L. J., said at page 284: "It cannot, I think, be laid down as an universal rule, that when lands are bought by partners in trade, and are paid for out of the partnership assets, they of necessity become part of the joint estate of the partners. There are different purposes for which the lands may have been bought. They may have been bought for the purpose of being used and employed in the trade ... or they may have been bought, not for the purpose of being used or employed in the trade, but for the purpose of a mere speculation on account of the partnership Again they may have been bought without reference to the purposes of the trade or the benefit of the partnership, with the intention of withdrawing from the trade the amount employed in the purchase, and converting that amount into separate property of the partners, or they may have been bought on account of one or more of the partners, he or they becoming debtors to the partnership for the amount laid out in the purchase..... Where land purchased is not merely paid for out of the partnership assets, but is bought for the purpose of being used and employed in the partnership trade, it is scarcely possible to conceive a case in which there could be sufficient evidence to rebut the trust, ...but where the land is not purchased for these purposes, the question becomes more open, and we have to consider whether the circumstances attending the purchase show that it was made on account of the partners individually, or of any one or more of them in whose name the land may have been bought."

It follows, therefore, that if land is purchased out of the partnership assets and not used for the purpose of partnership business, the question is an open one and is to be determined on the general evidence. Here the partnership business was a grocer's shop and the land was not necessary for the purpose of this business. Mr. Hardas-mal points to a potamel of a prior partnership of the brothers and two others which was dissolved in 1887, and there some land is shown as part of the partnership assets. But even if this be the same land the admission of the principal defendant, Wadhmal, shows that in 1887 the old shop was demolished, fresh accounts kept, and a new business started in a new shop on different lines altogether. There were then only two brothers who were interested, and it seems more probable that they treated the landed property that had been acquired as property of which they were the co-owners. This inference receives support from the fact that the defendants have not produced any account of the partnership from 1887 to 1900 and further from the fact that the plaintiff, widow of one of the brothers, retained physical possession of some property. It is scarcely open to the defendants to allege that the property was held in any other way, because throughout the proceedings in the lower Court Wadhmal stoutly maintained that the landed property had no connection whatever with the shop.

There is only one other point raised in the appeal, and that is the question of the non-joinder of Shinho, who is the grandson of Ghuman. Shinho was originally a party but was dropped by the plaintiff on the 13th October 1911. The defendants raised no objection at that time and the Sub-Judge says that the matter was only incidentally referred to in the concluding arguments of the defendants' Pleader a year later. Under the circumstances the defendants must be held under Order II, rule 7, to have waived the objection as to his non-joinder. It does not, however, appear that Shinho was really a necessary party. The property was not ancestral and the finding of the lower Court is that it was Ghuman alone of the defendants' branch who had such share in it.

As to the cross-objections—the joint property was shown in the schedule annexed to the plaint and no objection was raised in the written statement that this was property in which Ghuman was not interested.

The decree, therefore, should be for the whole of this property with the exception of the two fields bought after the death of Laru. We accordingly vary the decree of the lower Court by including the portions of Survey Nos. 12, 15, 17, 207, 208, 209 and 1 and measuring 10 ghantas, 3 acres, 2 acres—13 ghantas, 23 ghan'as, 37 ghantas, 29 ghantas, and 2 acres respectively.

The decree is otherwise confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs. Cross-objections allowed with costs.

Decree varied; Cross-objections allowed.

Section 9 (1) of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act is not limited to proceedings pending, or decrees asked for, against the debtor, but extends to all proceedings pending at the time an order of management is published under section 7 in respect of the debts and liabilities mentioned in section 8. Consequently a suit in respect of a mortgage-debt against such a debtor must be stayed, even though no personal relief is claimed against him on account of his insolvency. [p. 26, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the Joint Subordinate Judge of Hyderabad under section 9 of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act, XX of 1896.

The plaintiffs sued to recover the amount due on a mortgage bond executed by the first defendant, Abdullah, on the 30th September 1909. Two years later, the mortgagor became insolvent and the property mortgaged vested in the Receivers appointed in his insolvency. The Receivers sold it to one Bhai Sobhraj. The two Receivers and Bhai Sobhraj were, therefore, joined as defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in the suit.

During the pendency of the suit a manager was appointed of the estate of the first defendant, Abdullah, on account of his debts and an order of management published under section 7 (2) of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act.

The Sub-Judge then made an order staying the suit under section 9 (1) of the Act.

That section requires that all proceedings pending in Civil Courts in respect of debts and liabilities mentioned in section 8 shall be stayed. Section 8 refers inter alia to all debts and liabilities to which the debtor is subject. The mortgage-debt was clearly such a debt and the order of stay was, therefore, one which the Sub-Judge was required to make by section 9. The case of Nanchand v. Yenawa (1) does not help the appellant, for even if the decree is not against the debtor yet the suit is one in respect of the debt.

It is urged that the name of the first defendant could have been expunged from the record. But no such application was made before the stay order. And if made it is doubtful if it could have been granted, for as regards the personal remedy it seems that the Receiver does not represent the insolvent, see the judgment of Hayward, A. J. C., in Jethalal Kalianji v. Gangaram Naomal (2).

I would, therefore, confirm the order of the lower Court and dismiss this application with costs.

FAWCET, A. J. C.—I concur in the proposed order.

I feel some doubt whether the defendant Abdullah was a necessary party to the suit, in view of his being an adjudicated insolvent. In England he would not be entitled to redeem so long as he was bankrupt (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 21, page 142, section 27 (1), and the same result is, I think, effected in India by section 16 (2) (a) read with section 2 (1) (e) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, under which defendant's right of redemption becomes vested in the Receiver. If so, he has no present interest in the right of redemption, and it may be said that he is not, therefore, a necessary party under Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code. And in any case his interest would perhaps be sufficiently represented by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (the trustees of his estate) under Order XXXI, rule I, Civil Procedure Code. But neither this nor the fact that appellants now drop all claim for personal relief against the mortgagor, really affects the case, because section 9 (1) of Act XX of 1896 is not limited to proceedings pending, or decrees asked for, against the debtor, but extends to 'all proceedings then pending . . . in respect of the debts and liabilities mentioned in section 8.' The mortgage-debt, in respect of which Abdullah is sued, clearly remains a debt to which he is subject in spite of his insolvency and the sale of the mortgaged property, and falls, therefore, under section 8. Accordingly, I think the view taken by the Sub-Judge was quite correct. No doubt the stay of plaintiff's suit may be rather hard on him, but it would clearly also be hard on the purchaser of the mortgaged property, if this property were sold for the realization of the mortgage-debt before it was seen whether the debt could not be wholly or partly satisfied under a liquidation scheme, as provided for in Chapter IV of

(1) 23 B. 630; 6 Bom. L. R. 582.

(2) 29 Ind. Cas. 30; 8 S. L. R. 325.

RAM KRISHNA v. Mohanta BHAGWAN RAMANUJA DAS.

Act XX of 1896. And the right to put the mortgaged property to sale only accrues after the mortgagor has failed to pay the mortgage-debt held due from him: so there is nothing illogical in the suit being stayed so that the manager may have an opportunity of dealing with this claim against the mortgagor, along with others.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, dated the 28th March 1912. The appeal was heard by us ex parte and it was decreed on the 28th May of the present year. Subsequently another Bench of this Court on an application made to them set aside our judgment and directed us to re-hear the appeal. With all deference, I doubt the jurisdiction of another Bench of this Court to set aside our judgment and direct us to re-hear the appeal. If there were grounds for setting aside our judgment, the application ought to have been made to us. I understand from Sir Rash Behari Ghose, that he mentioned the matter to the Chief Justice who also expressed his doubt as to the jurisdiction of another Bench to do so. However, Sir Rash Behari Ghose, on behalf of the appellants, has not pressed the point and is willing that the appeal should be re-heard by us.

The point that we dealt with on the last occasion was a point of law arising on the findings of fact made by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment. On that occasion, Sir Rash Behari Ghose on behalf of the appellants accepted the findings of fact made by the learned Subordinate Judge and argued that the learned Judge had arrived at a wrong conclusion on a point of law. We accepted the argument put forward by Sir Rash Behari Ghose and decreed the appeal. On the appeal coming on before us for re-hearing, both sides agree that, on the findings of fact made by the learned Judge at the Court below, his judgment cannot stand. But the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has asked us to dissent from the findings of fact made by the learned Subordinate Judge on which his judgment is based. The defendants, who are the appellants before us, claim through their grandfather who had got a lease of the property for 18 years in the benami of Bishnu Priya. That lease expired in 1880. The story put forward by the plaintiff is that there was a verbal lease or arrangement between one Hari Ballav Sur and the former Mohant, Hayagriba, in the year 1287. The evidence shows that the late Mohant, Hayagriba, was gathered to his fathers before the date of the lease. An attempt was made by some of the plaintiff's witnesses to place this verbal arrangement at an earlier date before the death of Hayagriba. That was the case which the plaintiff invited the learned Judge to express his opinion on and when that case failed as false the learned Judge clearly and rightly refused to enter into a consideration of the case that this man Hariballav had entered into some arrangement other than that set up resulting in his possession of the property as a licensee. In that, I think, the learned Subordinate Judge was quite right. The documentary evidence read to us leaves no doubt on my mind that Hariballav was connected with the property solely as a relative or guardian of the two present defendants. The documentary evidence seems to me to be conclusive on that. This story about the verbal lease to Hariballav on his entering into possession of the property as licensee in his own right, I am satisfied, is wholly untrue. On the evidence, I am clearly of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge came to a correct conclusion. That being so, the learned Judge was right when he held that the said suit was barred by limitation. We pointed out in our former judgment that on that finding, the learned Judge was not entitled to give to the plaintiff the relief that he has given. For the second time I must express my dissent from the result arrived at by the learned Judge of the Court below. The appeal must, therefore, be decreed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

First appeal from the decree of the Court of the Assistant Collector, first Grade, acting as District Judge, Lahore, dated the 7th May 1910, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Fazl-i Husain, for the Appellants.

Khawaja Ziaud-Din and Pandit Ram Bhaj Datta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in dispute is situate in the civil station of Lahore and has been recorded in the Revenue Records as the joint property of the defendants. On an application for partition having been made by some of the recorded owners, the plaintiff, Muhammad Bakhsh [intervened and opposed the application on the ground that he was the sole owner thereof and that the entries in the Revenue Records did not represent the real state of affairs. As there was a dispute as to the title in the land sought to be partitioned, the Revenue Officer proceeded to determine it as though he were a Civil Court, and after recording the evidence adduced by the parties he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not established his title by adverse possession. Against that decision this appeal has been preferred, and a preliminary objection has been raised by Mr. Ram Bhaj Datta that as the respondents Ranjha, Ramzan and Fateh Din had died more than six months before the dates on which the respective legal representatives were brought on the record, the appeal should abate. We think that considering the facts that the appellant, the representative of the deceased plaintiff, is a pardah nashin lady and that it was difficult for her to obtain the necessary information within six months for making the applications, the delay has been sufficiently accounted for and that a case for extending the prescribed period has been established. We, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection and proceed to decide the appeal.

Upon the merits, it is clear, and the fact is admitted that the defendants were the owners of the land, and the question for determination is whether the plaintiff has acquired title thereto by adverse possession for twelve years. The onus of establishing such title is obviously on the plaintiff and after examining the evidence carefully, we concur with the Court of first instance that it has not been discharged. Now the entries in the Revenue Records and the oral evidence prove conclusively that Sheikh Wazir, father of Muhammad Bakhsh, came into possession of the land as a tenant and that he was allowed by the proprietors to build some stables thereon. It appears that in making subsequent additions to the building the tenant did not obtain the permission of the landlords, but we do not in the circumstances of the case regard it as an overt act amounting to a denial of their title. The entry in the jamabandi of 1886-87 shows that the annual rent was fixed at Rs. 24, and as the tenant had spent money in constructing the building, it was agreed that the rent should be retained in part payment of the amount spent by him on the building. It is to be noticed that the provision to that effect is recorded in the annual papers of 1898-99, and we consider it hard to believe that the entry, which has been repeated in all the subsequent jamabandis, was made without the consent of the plaintiff or that he was not aware of it.

The evidence of the defendants Ranjha and Ghulam Muhammad, upon which great reliance has been placed by the learned Counsel for the appellant, does not, in our opinion, support the theory of adverse possession. It must be remembered that there were about fifteen persons who were jointly entitled to the land, and it seems that as all of them could not come together and agree as to the amount of rent, the dispute as to its enhancement between the tenant and the landlords was never finally settled. It may be that the plaintiff and his father, who having erected building on the land appropriated the rent towards the payment of the costs thereof, were regarded by the public as the ostensible owners of the land, but we do not think that they openly repudiated the title of the real owners and asserted their right of ownership to the knowledge of all the co-sharers. The vague and inconclusive statement of Ranjha does not bear the construction which the appellants' Counsel wants to place upon it, and in view of the entries as to tenancy made at the Settlement of 1891-92 we are unable to hold that there was an assertion of adverse title before that year as the appellant wants to make out. Nor do we find sufficient evidence to prove adverse possession subsequent to that year and for a period of twelve years prior to the institution of the suit.

Upon an examination of all the material placed on the record, we think that the oral evidence is insufficient to rebut the presumption raised by the entries in the Revenue Records and we hold that the plaintiff has failed to prove his ownership. This is the only point before us and the questions whether the tenant is liable to ejectment, and, if so, whether he is entitled to compensation, do not arise in this case, and we, therefore, consider it unnecessary to pronounce any opinion thereupon.

We accordingly confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Babus Brojo Lal Chakravarti, Upendra Nath Bagehi and Nagendra Nath Sen, for the Appellant.

Sir S. P. Sinha, Babus Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, Sarat Coomar Mitter and Kali Kinkur Chakravarti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Berhampore dismissing her suit. The plaintiff brought her suit to recover certain properties that represent one-half of the estate originally belonging to one Shibaram Singh. Shibaram died on the 9th of August 1836 leaving a widow, Chhaya Kumari, aged about 14 years and a daughter, Foodan Kumari by a former wife. Foodan was many years older than the widow. She was married to Chait Lal Singh and had two sons, Ram Lal and Behari Lal. On the death of Shibaram his widow succeeded to his properties. By a subsequent arrangement with Foodan Kumari and Chait Lal Singh, Chhaya Kumari was left in possession of 8-annas share of the property, except one mehal which was made over to Ram Lal. The other 8-annas share in the property was made over to Foodan Kumari and Chait Lal Singh.

The present suit relates to the 8-annas share of the property retained by Chhaya Kumari. The defendants Nos. 2 to 6 are in possession of the property No. 11 in schedule ka to the plaint under a purchase from Chhaya Kumari. The rest of the properties sued for are in the possession of the defendant No. 1. He claims them as heir of his father Nilkanta who, it is alleged, was adopted by Chhaya Kumari. Nilkanta was a son of Gopal Sundari, a daughter of Foodan Kumari. The plaintiff is the widow of Shayama Charan Singh who was the son of Annapurna, another daughter of Foodan. It is not denied that if no son had been adopted to Siva Ram, the present plaintiff in the events that have happened would be entitled to the estate of Shibaram.

The plaintiff questions the alleged adoption of Nilkanta on the following grounds, first, that there was no such adoption in fact, secondly, even if there were, Shibaram gave no authority to Chhaya Kumari to adopt and, thirdly, the adoption would be void even if authority had been given to Chhaya Kumari, as Nilkanta's natural mother could not have married Shibaram if she had been a maiden.

The learned Judge in a very comprehensive judgment has dealt with all the matters raised in the suit. He has held, first, that the adoption was valid and, secondly, that the plaintiff is estopped from questioning the adoption of Nilkanta. A large part of the argument has been addressed to us as to whether or not the adoption of Nilkanta was valid.

In the circumstances of the present case we need not enter into this question. For we are of opinion that the plaintiff is estopped from questioning the adoption of Nilkanta. The facts relating to such estoppel may be briefly stated:—In 1878 the plaintiff's late husband brought a suit against Chhaya Kumari and Nilkanta to set aside the adoption of Nilkanta. The suit was decreed in the primary Court, but on appeal to this Court the judgment was set aside, the question of the adoption being left open until the death of Chhaya Kumari. The plaintiff's husband was, therefore, fully aware of his rights. At the end of the year 1895 an application was made to the District Judge under section 31 of Act VIII of 1890 for leave to raise certain moneys to pay off debts due from the defendant No. 1, then a minor. The first proposal was to raise the money by mortgage, but it was subsequently altered to a proposal to grant a putni of a certain portion of the estate. The proposal dragged on for a considerable time. On the application coming on the 2nd of March 1898, the District Judge granted time to enable the husband of the plaintiff to come in as he might contest the validity of the adoption of the father of the defendant No. 1.

On the 10th of March 1898 the plaintiff's husband appeared before the District Judge and expressed his desire to take the putni lease at a premium of Rs. 10,000. The learned Judge sanctioned the proposal, subject to a condition that the plaintiff's husband together with a surety should give security to pay the expenses of any suit (up to Rs. 2,000) which might be brought by any other reversioner to question the title of the defendant No. 1. In pursuance of this order the putni lease (Exhibit D) and the security bond (Exhibit E) were executed. This seems to us to be a clear case of waiver by the husband of the plaintiff. With full knowledge of his rights he obtained the putni (Exhibit D) which recognises the validity of the adoption of Nilkanta and the plaintiff, his widow, is still in possession of the property comprised in the putni. That being so, it is now too late for the plaintiff, who claims through her husband, to question the adoption.

The doctrine of estoppel by conduct has been applied in many cases in India to invalid adoptions. The facts in this case raise a clear case of estoppel against the plaintiff. To hold otherwise would be lamentable. The defendant No. 1 has married the daughter of the plaintiff's late husband. If the plaintiff can question the adoption of Nilkanta, then the marriage of the defendant No. 1 will be invalid and the defendant No. 1 will be left as belonging to no family and with a wife to whom he is not legally married. We agree with the learned Judge in the Court below that the facts proved establish a clear case of estoppel against the plaintiff. Whether the adoption of Nilkanta be or be not valid the plaintiff cannot succeed in this suit. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs. There will be two sets of costs, one to the defendant No. 1 respondent and the other to the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

Pandit Rambhaji Datta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts and genealogical tree of this case are as follows:—

HUKM CHAND = Musammam Amir Devi.

Kahn Chand.

Prithmi Chand
= Musammam Satbharai.

Hukm Chand, having died Kahn Chand took Rs. 3,000 in satisfaction of all claims on the estate and left the family. The estate was then divided between Prithmi Chand and his mother, Amir Devi, each taking $\frac{1}{2}$. This was in 1906. In 1910 Amir Devi died and her share went to her two sons $\frac{1}{2}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$. So Kahn Chand then owned a $\frac{1}{4}$ th share, and Prithmi Chand $\frac{3}{4}$ ths.

In 1911 Kahn Chand (though only owner to the extent of $\frac{1}{4}$ th) mortgaged $\frac{1}{2}$ of three shops and a haveli, which formed a part of the estate in favour of plaintiff, who now sues for Rs. 1,579-3-3, principal and interest, and claims a lien on the mortgaged property and other property of the mortgagor.

After the mortgage there was a suit between the co-sharers, which was settled by arbitration. The $\frac{1}{2}$ share which was left by Musammam Amir Devi was valued at Rs. 9,880, so Kahn Chand's share was priced at Rs. 4,940, and as it was found that he had already disposed of parts of the estate valued at Rs. 4,000, his remaining share was valued at Rs. 940 in lieu of which two kholas were awarded to him, the rest of the estate being made over to INDRA NARAIN SARKAR v. BEDESWARI DASSYA.

Prithmi Chand. It may be noted that Prithmi Chand had effected a sale in favour of his wife Musammât Satbharai, apparently both the brothers were profligate.

The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 1,579-3-3, against Kahn Chand, executable against his share of the estate as it stood at the date of the mortgage, leaving it to the executing Court to determine what that share was. The learned Divisional Judge on appeal held that the estate was at the date of the mortgage the estate of a joint Hindu family, and that one member could not pledge any of the estate without the consent of the others. So he reduced the decree to a simple money-decree against Kahn Chand.

The plaintiff appeals, asking for a decree with lien on the mortgaged property.

We think the Divisional Judge is undoubtedly wrong in regarding the family as a joint Hindu family at the time of the mortgage. There had clearly been a rupture before then, Kahn Chand leaving the family, and Prithmi Chand and his mother taking shares, the share of the mother descending to the two sons $\frac{1}{2}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ on her death. The property, no doubt, was not divided till after the date of the mortgage, but there was no joint Hindu family in existence. But by the subsequent partition the mortgaged property fell to the share of Prithmi Chand, Kahn Chand getting only 2 kholas, and the question now is whether the mortgagee can still claim a lien on the mortgaged property. For the plaintiff it is urged that he was no party to the partition. For Prithmi Chand and his wife it is urged that they were no parties to the mortgage, and reliance is placed on the Privy Council ruling reported as Byjnath Lall v. Ramooodeen Chowdhry (1) and followed in Beli Ram v. Musammât Shahzada Begam (2). These rulings clearly lay down that in the absence of fraud a mortgagee can only pursue his remedy against that portion of the estate which has on partition fallen to his mortgagor. These rulings are applicable to the present case, and we have no hesitation in following them. For the plaintiff it is urged that the partition in the present case was fraudulent, but this is a totally new plea, which we cannot entertain at this stage of the proceedings. It is also urged that the plaintiff has never admitted the partition. But the partition was distinctly alleged by the defendants and never denied by the plaintiff. The only point argued in the lower Courts was whether a partition subsequent to the mortgage was binding on the mortgagee. The only part of the estate, therefore, against which the mortgagee can proceed is that which fell to the mortgagor on partition. But Counsel for plaintiff frankly says that he does not want a decree against that part of the estate, as such a decree would be useless, Kahn Chand having since sold two kholas which fell to his share on partition. We are, therefore, unable to give the plaintiff any further relief, though he has our sympathy. We dismiss the appeal, but pass no order as to costs.

IKRAM ULLAH-KHAN v. MUHAMMAD YUNIS ALI KHAN.

Babu Kali Kinkar Chakravarti, for the Appellants.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought upon a mortgage. Amongst other defences, a plea was taken that a certain sum specified had been paid; it was admitted, however, that there was a balance due.

The first Court found that the sum alleged to have been paid had not been paid. On appeal, the District Judge, on the ground that the plaintiff had not produced the original deed upon which it was alleged that an endorsement of payment had been made, dismissed the suit.

It is conceded that this was an error, it being admitted that as there was some money still outstanding on the mortgage, the suit should not have been entirely dismissed. Had the matter rested there, it might have been possible for us to have dealt with the question ourselves. But on reading the judgment I think it would be advisable that we, while setting aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Courts, should send the case back for re-decision. The onus of proving the payment alleged by the defendant was upon her. The first Court in the first instance found that the evidence of payment which she had produced was untrustworthy; and the lower Appellate Court does not appear to have dealt at all with this first part of the case, and it merely rested its decision upon the fact that the plaintiff had not produced his deed. Under these circumstances, we set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and remit the case to the District Judge for a fresh decision on the facts.

The appellant in this Court will be entitled to his costs of this appeal.

Decree set aside ; Case remanded.

Party wall—Tenant-in-common entitled to build without consent of other tenants-in-common.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Budaun.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shafi-uz-zaman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent, in which he asked the Court for a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with his building a certain wall. The parties are owners of adjoining houses. The plaintiff wished to build an upper storey on the room which is marked (A) in the plan attached to the plaint. The defendant objected. Hence the suit. The plaintiff was desirous of building on the two walls running west and east and north and south which divide the two houses. There were other reliefs and other matters in the suit with which, however, we are not concerned on appeal. The question before me is whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to raise the party walls in dispute without interference on the part of the defendant. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed. His case was that the party walls belonged entirely to himself and that he had a right to build upon them. The lower Appellate Court found, as a matter of fact, that the party walls belonged to the plaintiff and the defendant jointly. To use the lower Court's own expression it found that they were joint owners of these party walls. This is a clear finding that the parties are tenants-in-common of the walls. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff would be entitled to build on that half of the wall which is towards his own house, and it, therefore, decreed the suit accordingly. The defendant has appealed. Two points are pressed, first of all that the question of the ownership of the wall is res judicata by reason of a previous decision and the second is that on the findings of fact arrived at by the Court below the plaintiff is still not entitled to build upon the party walls without the defendant's consent. In regard to the question of res judicata there is no force in the plea, for the simple reason that the portion of the wall now in dispute between the parties was not in dispute in the former litigation, and, therefore, the decision in the latter cannot operate as res judicata. But the defendant, in my opinion, is entitled to succeed on the second plea raised before me. The question of the right of one tenant-in-common of a party wall to build upon the wall or to interfere with it is one which is covered by decisions. The case of Watson v. Gray (1) clearly lays down on principle that in such a case as this, one of the tenants-in-common is not entitled to interfere with the party wall without the consent of the other tenant-in-common. The same point was decided in the case of Kanakayya v. Narasimhulu (2). In that case one of two tenants-in-common of a party wall raised the height of the wall with a view to raise a superstructure of the wall. The other tenant-in-common, who had not consented to the alteration in the wall but had suffered no inconvenience therefrom, sued to enforce the removal of the newly erected portion. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought and the ruling in Watson v. Gray (1) was followed. From the principle laid down in these decisions it is clear that the plaintiff is not entitled to build upon the party walls in suit without the consent of the defendant and that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in issuing an injunction to the latter to prevent him from interfering with the building of the superstructure which the plaintiff wished to raise on the party wall. The appeal is, therefore, allowed. The plaintiff has filed objections against the finding of the Court below that the walls belonged jointly to the parties in suit. The decision is on a question of fact and no error in law has been laid down before me to vitiate that decision. The objections are, therefore, disallowed with costs. The plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts. The original Court dismissed the suit in toto. The plaintiff in his appeal to the Court below only pressed the question of his right to build on the party wall.

Appeal decreed.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Small Cause Court, dismissing a suit for limitation, should not be set aside.

The case is one which clearly falls under section 22 of the Limitation Act; and the question is whether it can be said that a pro forma defendant, who was joined at the institution of the suit and who is made a plaintiff after the period of limitation, can be brought within the meaning of section 22 of the Limitation Act as a new plaintiff. authority of several cases, first of all the case of Nagendrabala Debya v. Tarapada Acharjee (1), then that of Husainara Begum v. Rahmannessa Begum (2) and lastly that of Narsinha Krishnaji v. Vaman Vankatesh Deshpande (3), we are of opinion that the rule, that a party transferred from the side of the defendants to that of the plaintiffs is not a new party to whom the provisions of section 22 of the Limitation Act apply, is an absolute rule and cannot be distinguished in the way in which the learned Pleader for the opposite party has sought to distinguish it upon certain remarks in the case of Nagendrabala Debya v. Tarapada Acharjee (1). No such limitation was placed upon it by the Judge who presided over the Bench which issued the Rule in delivering the judgment in the case of Husainara Begum v. Rahmannessa Begum (2). On the contrary, he pointed out that the person who was transferred from the category of defendant to the category of plaintiff could not have maintained the action at the time the suit was instituted; and in the Bombay case Narsinha Krishnaji v. Vaman Vankatesh Deshpande (3) the rule is stated without any qualification whatever.

With regard to the case of Nagendrabala Debya v. Tarapada Acharjee (1) to which one of us was a party, we certainly did not intend to lay down that the circumstance mentioned, namely, that the original plaintiff had a right to enforce his interest as co-sharer, should in any way affect the rule which we laid down in the same terms as it was laid down in the subsequent cases.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute. The case will be remanded to the lower Court for a decision on the merits.

The petitioners are entitled to the costs of this hearing, which we assess at two gold mohurs.

Appeal against the decree of the Assistant Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Mathradas Ramchand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kimatrai Bojraj, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—The appellants purchased hides in Hyderabad and consigned them to respondent No. 2, Shamsudin, for sale at Amritsar. In order to purchase the hides they took advances from the People's Bank at Hyderabad and gave the Bank hundis drawn on Shamsudin. The Railway Receipts for the consignments of hides were made out in the name of the Bank as consignee and were also given to the Bank. The Bank sent the hundis and receipts to its agent at Amritsar who endorsed the Railway Receipts to Shamsudin on his honouring the hundis.

Three hundis, one for Rs. 2,500 and two for Rs. 2,000 each, were given to the Bank together with three Railway Receipts. By mistake the Bank's agent delivered three receipts to Shamsudin although he had only paid the amount of one hundi for Rs. 2,500. Shamsudin then refused to honour the other two hundis aggregating Rs. 4,000.

JOGENDRA NATH SAHA v. COLLECTOR OF FARIDPUR.

The Lower Appellate Court has held the appellants liable for this amount to the Bank. The appellants' contention in this second appeal is that either by mercantile usage or by specific instructions the Bank was under a duty to the appellants not to part with the receipts until the hundis had been honoured.

But the District Judge has found as a fact that there were no such instructions and the Pleader for the appellants has been unable to point to any authority for or evidence of the alleged mercantile usage.

The hundis were given to the Bank either:—

A. As agent to collect the amount from the drawee, or

B. as security for the money advanced by the Bank.

If the transaction has been A, it is conceivable that the Bank were under an obligation not to part with the Railway Receipts until the money was paid. But the lower Court has found as a fact that the relation was not one of agency. The very fact that the money was paid in advance by the Bank negatives the suggestion that the Bank was agent. The transaction was, therefore, B. i. e., the hundis were given to the Bank as security for the money advanced.

The Railway Receipts were given not for the protection of the appellants, but as security to the Bank for the acceptance of the hundis by the drawee, Shamsudin. The Bank's mistake deprived it of the benefit of part of this security. But the loss of this collateral security in no way affects their right to recover on the hundis under section 30 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, for a collateral agreement may not be set up as a defence to a claim under section 30.

I would confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

FAWCET, A.J.C. — I concur. There are, no doubt, cases where a creditor having control of a security is chargeable with what he might have received from it but for his neglect or wilful default [cf. Peacock v. Purcell (1) and section 141 of the Contract Act]. But in this case it is clear that the relations of the appellants and the Bank were not such as would make the above principle applicable.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Wills and Intestacy Regulation (V of 1799), s. 7, scope of—District Judge's jurisdiction—Gift, claim under, if valid.

Section 7 of the Bengal Wills and Intestacy Regulation empowers a District Judge to assume jurisdiction only when two facts are established, (1) that the person has died intestate, and (2) that there is no claimant to the personal property left by him. [p. 37 col. 1.]

The claimant mentioned in the section does not only mean an heir of the deceased. A person who claims personal property of the deceased, under a gift from the intestate, is a claimant within the meaning of section 7 of Regulation V of 1799. [p. 37 col. 1.]

Civil Rule against an order of the District Judge of Faridpur, dated the 10th June 1914.

Babu Surendra Kumar Bose, for the Petitioner.

Babu Ram Churn Mitra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to consider the legality of an order made ostensibly under section 7 of Regulation V of 1799. It appears that one Soudamini Peshakar, a woman of the town, died leaving personal property of some value. The Police appeared on the scene immediately after her death. The petitioner claimed the property in dispute, on the allegation of a gift to him by Soudamini who was in his keeping. The Police submitted a report to the Magistrate; he, thereupon, directed the matter to be placed before the District Judge, who initiated the present proceedings under section 7 of Regulation V of 1799. The District Judge has taken evidence and has overruled the claim, on the ground that the gift was in the nature of a donatio mortis causa and was not operative in law. On behalf of the petitioner it has been contended that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to take proceedings under section 7. We are of opinion that this contention is well founded and must prevail. That section is in these terms: "The Judges of the Zilla Courts, on receiving information that any person within their respective jurisdictions has died intestate, leaving personal property, and that there is no claimant to such property, are to adopt such measures as may be necessary for the temporary care of the property." It has been contended by the learned Government Pleader that the claimant mentioned in the section is a person who claims the property as an heir of the deceased. We are not disposed to put such a narrow interpretation upon the section. There was undoubtedly a claimant in this case, namely, the petitioner, whose claim was found to be prima facie good by the Police officer. Before the District Judge can assume jurisdiction under section 7, two facts must be established, namely, first, that the person has died intestate, and, secondly, that there is no claimant to the personal property left by him. The second condition has obviously not been fulfilled. The Rule must consequently be made absolute and the order of the Court below discharged. The petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Court. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Rule made absolute.

I, Art. 182—Application for execution without obtaining leave of Court under section 16 (2) of Provincial Insolvency Act, if legal.

A obtained a money-decree against B and C on 10th April 1903, B and C were adjudged insolvents on 1st June 1910 under the Provincial Insolvency Act and by orders of the Insolvent Court on 11th November 1912 and 26th February 1913, respectively, their discharge was suspended till 11th November 1913. On 12th October 1914, A applied for execution of his decree against B and C relying for the purpose of saving limitation on a prior execution application by him on 7th June 1913 while the discharge of B and C remained suspended. It was contended on behalf of B and C that A's application of 7th June 1913, having been made during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings and the leave of the Court not having been obtained, was not an application in accordance with law and was barred by section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Held, that the phrase ‘pendency of the insolvency proceedings’ in section 16 (2) must be construed with reference to the object of the enactment, which was to prevent a general scramble of creditors for the assets, that this object was achieved when the assets were collected and distributed in an orderly manner by the Receiver and that the final dividend having been declared and distributed before the 7th June 1913, the insolvency proceedings were no longer pending so as to operate as a bar under section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 38, col. 1.]

Held, also, that as the leave referred to in section 16 (2) could be granted after the application was filed and would relate back to the date of the application, the Court might have received the application and then granted the leave, and that as the application also prayed for a relief that the Court was competent to give, it was in accordance with law. Messrs. Raymond and Lobo, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for execution of a decree made on the 10th April 1908 in favour of plaintiffs against three defendants for the payment of money. The present application is dated the 12th October 1914 and relief is sought against the 2nd and 3rd defendants only. These defendants were adjudged insolvents on the 1st June 1910. Order was made on the 27th February 1913 suspending the discharge of defendant No. 2 until the 11th November 1913, and on the 11th November 1912 suspending the discharge of the 3rd defendant for one year.

Various applications were made from time to time to execute the decree and the only one for consideration now is an application made on the 7th June 1913. If this is an application in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, the present application is in time. If it is not, the present application is time-barred.

MADHU SUDAN PATITUNDA v. RASH MOHAN SEN PODDAR.

It is contended that the application of the 7th June 1913 is not an application in accordance with law and it is barred by section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, in that insolvency proceedings were then pending and the leave of the Court had not been obtained.

There is no direct authority as to what constitutes the pendency of the insolvency proceedings referred to in section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. I feel sure that the mere fact of the insolvent not being absolutely discharged does not constitute a pendency of an insolvency proceedings. If that were so, the insolvent who never applied for a discharge would gain this advantage that no suit or execution proceedings could ever be filed against him without the leave of the Court. The phrase must be construed with reference to the object of the enactment. The object was to prevent a general scramble of creditors for the assets. This object is achieved when the assets have been collected and distributed in an orderly manner by the Receiver. When the Receiver has declared a final dividend and the distribution of all available assets is complete, there is no longer any reason for preventing creditors from seeking to enforce their rights by suits or execution applications. When a final dividend has been declared and distributed, the insolvency proceeding is no longer pending so as to operate as a bar under section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It is admitted that this stage had been reached before the orders were made with reference to the discharge of the defendants, i.e., before the 11th November 1912 and the 26th February 1913. The execution application of 7th June 1913 was, therefore, not made during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings.

But even if it were otherwise, I should still hold that it was an application in accordance with law. I do not concur in the finding of Davar, J., reported in a foot-note in Lalchand v. Balkrishna (1) that the leave referred to in the section must be leave granted before the suit or application is filed. It seems to me that leave could be granted after the application was filed and that it would relate back to the date of the application. Section 4 of the Pensions Act (Act XXIII of 1871), "No Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension, etc.," enacts a prohibition which seems to more directly affect the jurisdiction of the Court than section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Nevertheless the Privy Council in Mahammad Azmat Ali Khan v. Lalli Begum (2) held that the Collector's certificate might be filed after the suit was instituted.

So here the Court might have received the application and then granted the leave. The application was, therefore, also praying for a relief that the Court was competent to give and was, therefore, in accordance with law.

I, therefore, order writs of attachment to issue and allow this application with costs.

Application allowed.

Babu Jatindra Nath Fose, for Babu Sa at Chandra Dutt, for the Petitioner.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order for rateable distribution of assets held by the Court below. The circumstances under which the order has been made are not in controversy and may be briefly stated.

The petitioner, Madhu Sudan Patitunda, on the 13th July 1914, instituted a suit against his debtor, Pranballabh Poddar, for recovery of money due. The suit was decreed on the 10th August 1914. Two days later the decree-holder applied for attachment of moveable properties belonging to his judgment-debtor. On the 17th August the attachment was effected and the moveables were brought into Court. On the 4th September 1914, the Sens, who are the opposite parties to this Rule and were also creditors of Pranballabh Poddar, instituted a suit for recovery of money due from him. The Sens obtained an order for attachment before judgment in their suit and the attachment was effected on the 8th September 1914. The two suits were instituted before the same judicial officer, with this difference that in one case he exercised the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge and in the other that of a Munsif. On the 9th September 1914, the moveables were sold at the instance of Patitunda. The Sens obtained a decree in their suit on the 24th October following, and on the 10th November, they applied for execution of the decree they had obtained, by rateable distribution of the assets realised by the sale held at the instance of Patitunda. The question in controversy is, whether an order for rateable distribution can rightly be made. The Court below has held, on the authority of the decision in Bulloo Khan v. Gomani Singh (1), that it is competent to the Court to allow rateable distribution in the events mentioned, and has ordered accordingly. That order is now challenged before us on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction.

It is plain that an order for rateable distribution cannot possibly be made in this case under sub-section (1) of section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section applies only where an application for execution has been made before the assets have been realised. In the case before us, the assets were realised on the 9th September 1914. The application for execution by the Sens was not made till the 10th November 1914. In fact it was not competent to them to apply for execution on the 9th September 1914, when the assets were realised, as they did not obtain their decree till the 24th October 1914. It is thus indisputable that an order for rateable distribution could not be made in their favour under section 73. The Court below, however, has held that section 73 is not exhaustive and that it has inherent power to make an order of this description. In our opinion, there is no room here for the application of the doctrine of inherent powers of a Court which is recognised by section 151 of the Code. We have here, not only an express provision of the law which admittedly does not cover the case of the Sens, we have also an express provision which negatives their claim. Rules 5 to 12 of Order XXXVIII of the Code deal with the subject of attachment before judgment. Rule 10 is in these terms: "Attachment before judgment shall not affect the rights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant from applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree." It is well settled, as was ruled by this Court in the cases of Sewdut Roy v. Sree Canto Maity (2); Basiram Malo v. Katyani Debi (3) and Jogendra Nath Chatterjee v. Manmatha Nath Ghose (4), that attachment before judgment does not, by itself, create any interest in the property attached. In the case before us, in view of the provisions of rule 10 of Order XXXVIII of the Code, it was manifestly open to the petitioner to apply for sale of the properties attached by him in execution of his decree and his right in this respect was in no way restricted by the attachment before judgment effected at the instance of the Sens. In our opinion, it is perfectly plain that the Court below was not competent to make an order for rateable distribution. The decision in Butloo Khan v. Gomani Singh (1) is clearly distinguishable. In that case, the attachment before judgment had been effected at the instance of four plaintiffs. Three of them obtained an order for rateable distribution under section 73 of the Code; the fourth challenged the propriety of that order. It was ruled by this Court that section 73 did not apply to the case and that the Court below was not competent to make an order for rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds amongst the decree-holders in three of the suits in disregard of the order of attachment in the other suit. In that case, the four rival decree-holders were precisely in the same position, and yet it was held, at the instance of one of them, that the other three could not claim the benefit of section 73. In the case before us, there is a competition between an attachment effected in execution of a decree and an attachment before judgment. The distinction between these two classes of attachments was explained by this Court in Basiram Malo v. Katyani Debi (3), which is an authority for the proposition that a person who has obtained an attachment before judgment cannot restrict the rights of an attaching creditor who has previously obtained his decree. The case of Jogendra Nath Chatterjee v. Manmatha Nath Ghose (4) further shows that a person who has effected an attachment before judgment is not competent to apply for reversal of an execution sale under rule 90 of Order XXI of the Code; and the express provision of that rule shows that, in this respect, a person who is entitled to obtain an order for rateable distribution is in the same category as a person whose interest has been affected by the sale. The conclusion appears to us irresistible that the order of the Court below cannot possibly be supported.

(1) 3 Ind. Cas. 836; 13 C. W. N. 1177,

MADHU SUDAN PATITUNDA v. RASH MOHAN SEN PODDAR.

This, indeed, has been fully realised on behalf of the opposite party, and the only argument seriously addressed to us has been that the order of the Court below involves an error of law and cannot consequently be revised under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is obviously no force in this contention. The order of the Court below is, no doubt, erroneous in law; but the error of law has induced that Court to assume a jurisdiction which it did not possess. It is unquestionably competent to this Court to interfere with an erroneous order of a Subordinate Court, when as a result of that order, though erroneous in law, that Court has assumed a jurisdiction which it did not possess or declined a jurisdiction which was vested in it by law: Manisha v. Siyali Koya (5); Vishvambhar v. Vasudev (6); Jogodanund v. Amrita Lal (7).

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order for rateable distribution made by the Court below discharged. The petitioner is entitled to his costs both here and in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—High Court's powers of interference—Pleadings—New plea set up at close of case—Amendment of plaint—Procedure.

The power of superintendence and the powers given by section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code are intended to give the High Court power to see that the proceedings before lower Courts are properly conducted and the High Court should not refuse to set right matters if by doing so, it would save unnecessary expense or delay or a multiplicity of proceedings. [p. 44, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, in a suit brought to enforce the terms of an agreement entered into by the defendants with the plaintiff's husband, the plaint proceeded upon the footing that it was a valid, subsisting and enforceable contract, and at the close of the arguments the plaintiff's Vakil in reply suggested that even if the contract was void, section 65 of the Contract Act applied, and the Court thinking that the contention was raised in the pleadings directed the defendants to file an additional written statement:

Held, (1) that the Court had no jurisdiction to direct the defendants to file an additional written statement to meet allegations not contained in the plaint and which could, by no stretch of imagination, be held to be covered by the allegations in the plaint; [p. 43, col. 1.]

(2) that the proper course for the Court to adopt was to direct the plaintiff to amend the plaint, then to decide whether the amendments should be allowed, and if allowed to direct the defendants to file written statements, settle proper issues and then proceed to decide the case. [p. 42, col. 2; p. 43, col. 1.]

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 15 of the Charter Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 10 of 1913.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and T. R. Kri naswami Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. Narayanamurti (with him Messrs. D. Appa Rao, T. Ramachandra Rao and B. Somayya), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition filed by the 2nd defendant to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam in Original Suit No. 10 of 1913, wherein he held that the plaintiff was entitled to claim an alternative relief not claimed in the plaint as filed and directed the defendants, after the case was closed and arguments almost over, to file an additional written statement without requiring an amendment of the plaint. Original Suit No. 10 of 1913 was filed by the widow of the Rajah of Tuni against the defendants to enforce the terms of an agreement entered into with her husband (who financed the litigation in connection with the Vizianagram Estate), whereby the plaintiff's husband was entitled to a certain share in the decree that may be passed in the Vizianagram suit either after contest or on compromise. The whole plaint proceeded upon the footing that there was a subsisting, valid and enforceable contract between the parties, under the terms of which the plaintiff was entitled to the relief claimed. Paragraph 35 of the plaint sets out that out of the properties secured by the compromise decree between some of the defendants and the Rajah of Vizianagram the plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 1,68,629 and also to certain shares in the annuity and the house given to defendants Nos. 2, 5 and 6. Paragraph 37 of the plaint sets out the details. There is not a word in the plaint as to the contract having become void or impossible of performance, as to the plaintiff being entitled to any relief under section 65 of the Contract Act. Upon this plaint, written statements were filed and various defences were raised. For the purpose of this petition it is sufficient to refer to two of them. The first defence was that the plaintiff's husband committed a breach of contract and wrongly refused to finance the suit and that consequently he was not entitled to any share in the decree amount as provided for by the agreement. In paragraph 25 of the written statement the defendants also stated that the plaintiff was not even entitled to a refund of the money actually advanced, as her husband wrongly discontinued to make payments which he was bound to make under the agreement. It is also contended that the contract being indivisible and not being in the nature of a loan intended to be repaid, a mere part performance by the plaintiff's husband would not entitle her to any relief whatever even in respect of the part performed by her husband. It is clear from the pleadings that the case, that the contract had become void or become impossible of performance and that consequently plaintiff was entitled to a return of the money actually advanced under the provisions of section 65 of the Contract Act, was never raised or was in the contemplation of the parties. Upon these pleadings issues were settled and one of the issues, was whether the suit agreement provided for the contingency that actually happened; if not, what is the plaintiff's remedy. I find it difficult to see how, having regard to the pleadings and the issues which were presumably settled with reference to the allegations therein, this issue can be said to cover the question as to whether the contract had become void or impossible of performance and whether by reason thereof the plaintiff was entitled under section 65 of the Contract Act to the recovery of the amount actually advanced.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, who appeared for the defendants in the lower Court, states that till he commenced his arguments after plaintiff's Vakil closed his and after all the evidence was taken, neither the Judge nor the parties had the remotest idea that a claim was being made on the footing that the contract had become void or impossible of performance and that the 7th issue above referred to was intended to cover such a claim. Though the practice has been discountenanced by the High Court, the Subordinate Judge asked the parties to file written arguments and written arguments were presented by the plaintiff and defendants. In the written arguments of the plaintiff the contention that the contract had become void or impossible of performance was never raised by her Vakil. When the defendants' Vakil began his reply, he argued that the plaintiff was entitled to no relief under the contract because the compromise was not one effected in pursuance of the terms of the contract, since both the persons whose consent was necessary before the compromise could be legally effected, namely, plaintiff's husband and the late Hon'ble Mr. V. Krishaswami Iyer, were dead at the date of the compromise. After

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar closed his arguments, plaintiff's Vakil in reply suggested that, even if the contract was void, the plaintiff would be entitled under section 65 of the Contract Act to a return of the money actually advanced. The Subordinate Judge at this stage of the proceedings was of opinion that the contention put forward in reply by the plaintiff's Vakil was one which was raised in the pleadings and that the plaintiff was entitled to a relief on this ground. He gave the defendants leave to file an additional written statement and allow both parties to adduce evidence on the question.

It seems to me that the procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge is, to say the least of it, opposed to all rules of practice and procedure. The plaintiff came to Court with an allegation that the contract was a subsisting and enforceable contract and that she was entitled to a certain share in the amount decreed by the compromise decree in the Vizianagaram suit.

There was not a whisper anywhere that she was entitled to any alternative relief. It is clear that till Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar began his arguments after all the evidence was closed on both sides, nobody even thought that such a claim was going to be put forward or was intended to be made. The Subordinate Judge seems to have thought that, because an argument was put forward by the plaintiff's Vakil in reply to the arguments of the defendants' Vakil, which by some stretch of language might be brought under one of the issues raised in the pleadings, it was open to him to call on the defendants to file an additional written statement in the absence of any amendment to the plaint. Assuming that the argument of the plaintiff's Vakil in reply amounts to a statement made by him that his client wanted to raise an alternative ground that the contract was void and, therefore, she was entitled to the benefit of the amount actually advanced, the proper course for the Judge would be to direct the plaintiff to amend her plaint by setting forth clearly the alternative relief which she seeks and the grounds on which she seeks it and after the amendment has been made to allow the defendant to file an additional written statement, and to decide first of all as to whether the amendment ought to be allowed and if allowed, to raise additional issues and post the matter for further evidence.

Order VI, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, enacts that no pleading shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same. There can be little doubt that a claim on the footing that the contract is void, is certainly a new ground in a suit filed to enforce the terms of the contract. It does not follow from the statements made in the plaint that the contract is not subsisting and is not enforceable. It seems to me that the Court has no jurisdiction to direct the defendants to file an additional written statement to meet allegations not contained in the plaint and which could, by no stretch of imagination, be held to be covered by the allegations in the plaint. The difficulty was pointed out by the 2nd defendant in his additional written statement which he filed pursuant to the order of the Court. In paragraph 2, he states that the plaintiff is entitled to no relief under section 65 of the Contract Act as she did not ask for it in the plaint and that, having regard to the fact that no amendment of the plaint was asked for, the defendant had considerable difficulty in knowing what particular case he had to meet. One would have thought that these objections were perfectly reasonable. The Subordinate Judge on reading the written statement expunged the paragraphs on the ground that they were prolix and unnecessary. The position, therefore, is, the Judge has, without any allegations being made in the plaint, resolved to proceed with the case on the footing that the plaintiff claimed an alternative relief and directed the defendants to file an additional written statement stating their objections to the cause of action not set out in the plaint. He pressed into service an issue which neither party ever thought covered the question and proceeded with the trial. Such a procedure is, in my opinion, not only unwarranted, but likely to prejudice the defendants. It is not open to the plaintiff, who has not amended the plaint or set out the specific facts and grounds under which she claims the alternative relief, to go on adding to her contentions orally as arguments in the suit proceeded on the merits. I have come to the conclusion that the procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge is irregular and likely to prejudice the defendants. I do not wish it to be understood that the Subordinate Judge has no power to grant an amendment. Cases have been quoted where parties have been allowed to amend the plaint by asking for alternative reliefs, and when the plaintiff has amended the plaint setting out the reasons for asking for same, the Subordinate Judge might well grant the amendment on such terms as to costs or otherwise as he may think necessary.

It has been argued by the Vakil for the respondents that, even if there was an irregularity, the procedure of the Subordinate Judge is one which may be remedied in the appeal against the final decree that may be passed by the Subordinate Judge and that the High Court ought not to interfere in revision. This raises the question of the power of the High Court to interfere in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and section 15 of the Charter Act. Section 115, Civil Procedure Code, empowers the High Court to call for any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto and if such Subordinate Court appears to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, to make such order in the case as it thinks fit. Section 15 of the Charter Act gives the High Court superintendence over all the Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction.

My attention has been called to cases in some of which High Courts have interfered and in some of which they have declined. For the petitioner reference has been made to several cases. In Veerabadrán Chetty v. Nataraja Desikar (1) it was held that the High Court had under section 15 of the Charter Act power to set aside the order of a Subordinate Judge refusing to grant a commission. A similar view was taken in Somasundaram Chettiar v. Manicka Vasaka Desika Gnana Sammanda Pandara Sannidi (2). In Nagaraja Pillai v. Vythinatha Iyer (3), it was held that section 15 of the Charter Act is sufficiently wide to empower the High Court to interfere even though the case may not fall under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. In Subramania Pattar v. Narayana Pattar (4), Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar was disposed to give a more liberal interpretation to the powers of the High Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. In Venkatachallam Pattar v. Parasu Pattar (5), Mr. Justice Oldfield was of opinion that errors of law or procedure may be set right by the High Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

The judgment of Justice Mukerjee in Rai Yatendra Nath v. Hari Charan (6) refers to several decisions of the Calcutta High Court and supports the view that a more liberal interpretation ought to be given to the powers of the High Court both under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 15 of the Charter Act, and that in exceptional cases the High Court has power to interfere and set matters right by the reversal of interlocutory orders. In the particular case the order of the Subordinate Judge directing the trial of certain issues before evidence being let in was set aside. For the respondent, reference has been made to cases where the High Court declined to interfere. In Ramamurthi v. Kunchuwarthy Venkata Sitaramachandra Row (7), Justices Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer held that the Court could not interfere in revision when the aggrieved party has a remedy by suit and doubted the correctness of the decision in Rudrappa v. Narasing Rao (8) and in Venkata Subbia v. Seshachalam (9), it was held that the Court will not interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code with an order refusing an amendment even though the order was erroneous. In Chidambaram Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty (10), the Court refused to interfere under section 115 as the aggrieved party had a remedy by way of appeal. A similar view was taken by Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in Jagannatha Mudaliar v. Vathiyar Appasawmy Mudaliar (11) and Gaeble v. Ramayi Ammal (12).

It is difficult to reconcile all the observations made by the learned Judges who took part in the cases above referred to. In case of discretionary powers vested in Courts, I do not think any hard and fast rules can be laid down so as to fetter that discretion in advance in all cases that may arise in future. The observations of Jenkins, C. J., in Hume v. Poresk Chunder Ghose (13), that a discretion given in the widest terms by the Legislature ought not to be crystallised or restricted by a series of cases but should remain "free and untrammelled to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case," may well be borne in mind. It seems to me that the power of superintendence and the powers given by section 115 were intended to give the High Court jurisdiction to see that the proceedings before lower Courts were properly conducted, and I see no reason why the High Court should refuse to set right matters if by doing so it would save unnecessary expense or delay or a multiplicity of proceedings. There may be a right of appeal, but it may be unnecessary to drive a party to the expense and trouble of an appeal by timely interference. Speaking for myself, it seems to me that grave injustice might occur in particular cases if the High Court should decline to interfere where patent irregularities in procedure are brought to its notice and should leave the suit to take what is in its opinion a wrong course, simply on the ground that after all the mischief has been done, the Court can remedy the evil by its appellate judgment. While on the one hand Courts will not generally interfere in revision where an equally efficacious remedy is open to the party by way of appeal, the Court, on the other hand, has to be satisfied that having regard to the facts of each particular case, the remedy by way of appeal would give the party as complete and efficacious a relief as interference at the stage when the High Court has become aware that the lower Court has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

I set aside the order of the Sub-Judge and direct that he proceed with the suit on the lines indicated by me above. He will first direct the plaintiff to amend the plaint as advised, then decide whether the amendment should be allowed after hearing the defendants, and if he allows the amendment he should direct written statements to be filed on the amended plaint, settle proper issues and proceed with the final disposal.

The respondent should pay the appellant's costs of this revision petition. Costs in the lower Court will be at the discretion of the Subordinate Judge.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r. 1, (d)—Appeal against order dismissing for default application to set aside ex parte decree, maintainability of.

Under clause (d) of rule 1 of Order XLIII of the Code of Civil Procedure an appeal is competent against an order of summary dismissal for default of an application to set aside an ex parte decree.

Civil Rule against an order of the District Judge of Barisal, dated the 8th December 1914, refusing to hear an appeal against an order of the Munsif of Perozepur, dated 7th November 1914.

Babu Soresh Chandra Bose, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the District Judge has refused to entertain an appeal against an order by which the Court of first instance dismissed for default an application to set aside an ex parte decree in a mortgage suit. The petitioner, who was the defendant in that suit, applied to have the ex parte decree set aside. The application was fixed for disposal on the 7th November 1914. On that date an application was made on his behalf for adjournment. The Court held that the application was frivolous and refused to grant time; thereupon, the Pleader intimated to the Court that he had no further instructions. The application was accordingly dismissed for default. The petitioner then appealed to the District Judge; the result was that the following order was recorded: "No appeal lies; summarily dismissed." It is clear that under clause (d) of rule 1 of Order XLIII of the Code, the appeal was competent. The order assailed by way of appeal was an order under rule 13 of Order IX; it was immaterial that the application to set aside the ex parte decree had been dismissed, not on the merits, but for default. The District Judge has clearly declined to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order of the District Judge set aside. The records will be returned to him in order that the appeal may be heard on the merits.

Rule made absolute.

In clause (3) of rule 2 of Order XXI, the term 'certified' refers to clause (1) and the term 'recorded' to clause (2). [p. 46, col. 2.]

A judgment-debtor does not lose his protection, merely because the Court fails to perform the duty cast upon it, viz, to make a record that the payment or adjustment has been certified by the decree-holder. [p. 46, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge of Jessore, dated the 2nd April 1914, affirming that of the Munsif of Magura, dated the 4th December 1913.

Babus Sib Chandra Palit and Sasadhar Ray, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order by which the District Judge, in concurrence with the Court of first instance, has refused an application for execution of a decree. The judgment-debtor pleaded that the decree had been satisfied by payment out of Court and that the satisfaction had been notified to the Court by the decree-holder. The decree holder objected that no notice could be taken of the alleged payment, as the record of the Court did not show that it had been certified under clause (3) of rule 2 of Order XXI of the Code; and he denied that the decree had been satisfied or that he had ever admitted satisfaction in any petition filed by him in Court. The Courts below have found that the payment was in fact made as stated by the judgment-debtor and a petition was filed in Court by the decree-holder notifying that the decree had been satisfied in full. But this petition has not been traced and there has been much speculation as to how it has disappeared. We are not concerned with these hypotheses; the fact remains that the payment was made, that it was notified to the Court by the decree-holder, and that the latter has taken advantage of the disappearance of the petition to deny falsely that the decree had been satisfied. Under these circumstances the question arises, whether there is any substance in the argument of the decree-holder that the payment was not certified as required by law because it was not recorded by the Court. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention.

Clause (1) of rule 2 of Order XXI provides that where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly. It is worthy of note that there was no provision in section 258 of the Code of 1882 which required the Court to record the payment or adjustment. Clause (2) then deals with the case in which the judgment-debtor intimates the fact of payment or adjustment to the Court, and provides that if, after such intimation has been given and a notice has been served upon the decree-holder, the latter fails to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly. Clause (3) finally provides that payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree. A comparison of this clause with the corresponding paragraph of section 258 of the Code of 1882 shows that the words 'or recorded' have been introduced for the first time into clause (3) of rule 2 of Order XXI. It is plain, from clause (3) of rule 2, that a payment or adjustment shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree, unless it has been either certified or recorded. This does not require that the payment or adjustment must be both certified and recorded. It is also clear that in clause (3) of rule 2, the term 'certified' refers to clause (1) and the term 'recorded' to clause (2). Consequently, it cannot be reasonably contended that the judgment-debtor loses his protection, merely because the Court fails to perform the duty cast upon it, namely, to make a record that the payment or adjustment has been certified by the decree-holder. The decree-holder, at any rate, is not prejudiced by the omission of the Court to make the record. He has received the payment or has entered into an adjustment with the judgment-debtor. He has notified the fact to the Court; he has done his duty, as the Code does not provide for any special form to be adopted for the purpose. The failure of the Court to make the record does not surely entitle him to take advantage of the omission to the detriment of the judgment-debtor. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the view taken by the District Judge is correct and his order must be affirmed.

Where a property which stands in the names of A and B is jointly mortgaged by A and B to X, on the allegation that A and B are proprietors in respect of the shares for which they are registered, it is futile for A or his successors to contend subsequently, as against X or his representatives that B had no title to the property and that A was the sole owner.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against the decree in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The plaintiff-respondent claims title by purchase at a sale held in execution of a mortgage-decree. The mortgage was created by the representatives of four branches of a Mitakshara family. The appellant was entitled to one-sixth share of the properties given by way of security; another of the mortgagors was ostensibly entitled to a half share and two others were entitled to one-sixth share each. The appellant now contends that the mortgagor whose name stood registered in respect of one-half share and who joined in the mortgage as owner of that share, was not really interested in the property at all, he was merely a benamidar for the appellant and that, consequently, the purchaser in execution of the mortgage-decree has not acquired a valid title to that share. The Subordinate Judge has overruled this contention on the ground that the evidence establishes that the property was really owned by all the persons in whose name it stood. The reasons given by the Subordinate Judge for his conclusion are prima facie sound, and no serious attempt has been made in this Court to controvert that finding. Apart from this, it is plain that the appellant is not entitled to challenge the title of the mortgagee. According to him the property was acquired by his father in the name of Babu Ojha. Assume that the allegation is proved. As Babu Ojha was the ostensible owner of the property, the title of the mortgagee from Babu Ojha is not liable to be impeached either by the father of the defendant or by the defendant himself as his successor-in-interest. If A and B jointly mortgage to X a property which stands in their names, on the allegation that they are proprietors in respect of the shares for which they are registered, it is futile for A or his successor to contend subsequently as against X or his representative that B had no title to the property, and that A was the sole owner: Ramcoomar Koondoo v. McQueen (1), Euchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (2); Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (3). Consequently, the question raised by the appellant cannot possibly be decided in his favour.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed in so far as this point is concerned and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 202, applicability of—Agricultural holding—Grove.

Section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act. II of 1901, applies only to agricultural holdings and not to groves. [p. 49, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge of Aligarh, dated the 29th of July 1914.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs brought a suit in the Civil Court for the issue of an injunction restraining the defendants from cutting trees and for damages. The defence was that the defendant was the owner of the grove and that it was his sir. One of the issues framed was: "Has the defendant lost his ex-proprietary right?" The Court of first instance decreed the suit. In appeal before the District Judge it was contended that the Munsif ought to have asked the defendant to institute a suit in the Revenue Court under the provisions of section 202 of Act II of 1901. The lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant:—There being a distinct issue in the Court of first instance as to whether the defendant was a tenant of the plaintiffs, it was the duty of the Civil Court to act under the provisions of section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The question was raised in the grounds of appeal also. I rely on the case of Kuar Dirghibjai Singh v. Musammat Indar Kuar (1).

In that case the defendant was absent and an ex p rte decree was passed against him and even then it was held that the Court ought to have acted according to the provisions of section 202.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan (with him Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal), for the Respondents:—The defendant in his written statement never pleaded that he was a tenant. His case was that he was the proprietor. The Court, under these circumstances, could not of its own motion refer the dispute as to tenancy to a Civil Court. Moreover, the present dispute relates to a grove, while section 202 speaks of an "agricultural holding". It cannot, therefore, be said that section 202 is applicable.

There is another point also to be considered. The Courts below have found that even if the defendant was an ex-proprietary tenant, his rights were extinguished under section 79 of the Tenancy Act. In this view of the case the Courts below were perfectly within their rights to decree the plaintiffs' claim.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant-appellant was the owner of half the khewat No. 2. In execution of a decree against him his share was sold and purchased by the plaintiffs-respondents on the 20th of March 1908. In the sale certificate the description of the property sold is given which includes a beri grove. On the 8th of April 1914, the plaintiffs-respondents brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, for a declaration that they were the owners and proprietors of the beri grove situate on plot No. 380 and for an injunction against the defendant-appellant restraining him from interfering with their possession. They said that the defendant-appellant a short time before the institution of the suit had without any right wrongfully cut down two trees of the grove in question. They asked for Rs. 30 as damages for the price of the trees cut down by the defendant-appellant. The latter resisted the suit by denying the title of the plaintiffs-respondents to the grove. He said that it was excepted from the sale and that it was his sir. The learned Munsif decreed the claim. On appeal his decree was confirmed. The defendant-appellant comes here in second appeal and contends that as he raised the question of ex-proprietary tenancy in respect of plot No. 380 on which the grove is situate, the Courts below were not competent to dispose of that question under section 202 of Act II of 1901. On reference to the record it appears to me that no specific plea was taken by the defendant-appellant to the effect that after the sale of his zemindari share he became an ex-proprietary tenant of the plot on which the grove is situate. He did say that the said plot was his sir, and in connection with that statement the first Court discussed the question whether he was an ex-proprietary tenant of that plot. It came to the conclusion on the evidence in the case that even if the defendant-appellant was an ex-proprietary tenant of that plot, he had lost his right by his having been out of possession for more than six months. The same view was taken by the learned Judge on appeal. It cannot be said on the pleadings in the case that the question now raised was agitated in the Courts below. But apart from that I do not think that the provisions of section 202 of Act II of 1901 are applicable to the present case. The plot in suit, that is, No. 380 on which the grove is situate, is not an agricultural holding and the provisions of section 202 of Act II of 1901 apply only to agricultural holdings. The objection of the appellant to the decree passed against him, therefore, fails and the appeal is dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73, scope of—Rateable distribution—Two decree-holders against one judgment-debtor—Restitution—High Court, power of, to direct restitution of money withdrawn by decree-holder.

A, a decree-holder against C, the judgment-debtor, sought to satisfy his dues by the sale of an occupancy holding of C. C objected that the holding was not transferable and could not be sold in execution of a decree for money. The objection was overruled and the execution was allowed. B another decree-holder against C applied for execution of his decree by sale of the same holding and in the alternative prayed for rateable distribution if the holding was sold in execution of A's decree. C again objected that the holding was not transferable and this time his objection was allowed. The holding, however, was sold in A's decree.

Held, that B was entitled to rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds. [p. 50, col. 1.]

No valid claim for rateable distribution can be laid under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure if, in an application for execution of the decree, it has been held that the decree has been satisfied, or is barred by limitation, or if such application has been dismissed. [p. 50, col. 2.]

If pursuant to an erroneous order of a subordinate Court money has been paid out to a litigant, it is competent to the High Court to direct that person to bring back the money into Court when such erroneous order is set aside. The Court has inherent power to direct such restitution to enable it to do effective and complete justice between the parties. [p. 50, col. 2.]

To bring a case under section 73, it is necessary to establish that more persons than one have made an application to the Court for execution of decrees for payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, before the receipt of the assets in respect whereof rateable distribution is claimed. Rule against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca dated the 3rd September 1914.

Babus Basant Coomar Bose and Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the Petitioners.

Babu Sarat Chandra Mookerjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The property brought to sale is an occupancy holding owned by the Pals. Two sets of decree-holders, the Boses who are the petitioners in this Court and the Dutts who are the opposite parties to this Rule, sought to satisfy their dues from the Pals by the sale of this property. The Dutts applied for execution of their decree for money against the Pals. The Pals objected that the holding was not transferable and could not be sold in execution of a decree for money. This objection was overruled by this Court on the 24th June 1912, when it was held that the holding was transferable by custom and was liable to be brought to sale in execution of a money decree. On the 15th March 1913, the Boses applied for execution of the decree for money which they held against the Pals. They stated that an application for execution had already been made at the instance of the Dutts and the 9th April 1913 had been fixed for the sale of the property. They prayed in the alternative that if the property was sold at the instance of the Dutts, they might be allowed rateable distribution under section 73 of the Code; if, on the other hand, the property was not brought to sale by the Dutts, they themselves might be permitted to attach and sell it. For some reason not explained, the property was not actually sold on the 9th April 1913. The Pals then objected to the attachment of the property by the Boses, and this time they were more fortunate than they had been with their objection against the attachment and sale of the property at the instance of the Dutts. The Court held that the holding had not been established to be transferable by custom and ruled on the 9th March 1914, that it could not be attached by the Boses. Their application of the 15th March 1913, in so far as it related to the prayer for rateable distribution, however, remained on the file, and the Court directed it to be heard along with the execution case initiated by the Dutts. The property was sold at the instance of the Dutts on the 16th March, 1914. The Boses then prayed that they might be allowed to share rateably in the sale-proceeds. The Dutts objected that as the Boses had failed to attach the property, they could not be allowed rateable distribution under section 73. The Court adopted this view and on the 3rd September 1914, disallowed the prayer of the Boses for rateable distribution. On the very next day, the sale-proceeds were paid out to the Dutts. The Boses now invite this Court to set aside the order of the 3rd September 1914, on the ground that the Court should have held that they have a locus standi to make the application for rateable distribution. The Dutts contend that the Rule should be discharged on two grounds: first, that inasmuch as they have already withdrawn the money from the Court, there can be no order for rateable distribution; and secondly, that as the Boses failed in their application for attachment of the holding, they cannot be permitted to claim rateable distribution under section 73. In our opinion, both these objections are unsustainable.

As regards the first objection, it is obviously open to this Court, should the order of the 3rd September 1914 prove erroneous, to direct the Dutts to bring back into Court the money they had withdrawn on the basis of that order. It is well settled that if pursuant to an erroneous order of a subordinate Court money has been paid out to a litigant, it is competent to this Court to direct that person to bring back the money into Court when such erroneous order is set aside. The Court has inherent power to direct such restitution to enable it to do effective and complete justice between the parties. This fundamental principle is amply supported by the decisions of Mrinalini Dasi v. Abinash Chunder Duth (1), Nobin Kali Debi v. Banalata Debi (2), Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Yakub Ali (3). If the contrary view were taken, the result would be that this Court would find itself helpless when its interference was imperatively needed in the interests of justice. In the present case, it may be observed that the withdrawal of the money was so expeditious that the petitioners had no opportunity whatsoever to apply to this Court to obtain an ad interim order for stay of proceedings and for retention of the money in Court. The first objection to the Rule consequently fails.

As regards the second objection, it is plain that to bring a case within the scope of section 73, it is necessary to establish that, before the receipt of the assets in respect whereof rateable distribution is claimed, more persons than one have made an application to the Court for execution of decrees for payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof. In the present case, an application was made by the Boses for execution and rateable distribution on the 15th March 1913; that application was still pending on the 16th March 1914, when the assets were realised. It may be conceded that if on an application for execution, it has been held that the decree has been satisfied or is barred by limitation, or if such application has been dismissed and is not pending at the time when the assets are realised, no valid claim for rateable distribution can be laid under section 73. But the case before us is of an entirely different description, for on the 9th April 1913, the Court had expressly directed that the prayer of the Boses for rateable distribution be considered along with the execution case initiated by the Dutts, and such claim for relief still awaited investigation when the assets were realised at the instance of the Dutts. Reliance has, however, been placed on behalf of the Dutts upon the decision of Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (4), which was distinguished by this Court in Ramjash Agarwala v. Guru Charan Sen (5). There it was found that one of two decree-holders had attached the interest of the judgment-debtor in a joint Mitakshara property. Before the other decree-holder could attach that property, the judgment-debtor died, and it consequently became impossible for him to proceed against an interest in joint property, which had become vested by survivorship in the other members of the joint family. In these circumstances, it was ruled by Strachey, C. J., that as the decree-holder had lost his right to attach the share of the judgment-debtor who had died before attachment could be effected, he could not claim rateable distribution. We have here to deal with an entirely different set of circumstances; but it is worthy of note that Banerjee, J., did not rest his decision on the same ground as Strachey, C. J., whose view is not quite in harmony with the decision of the Bombay High Court in Sorabji Edulji Warden v. Govinda Ramji (6). It is needless for us to pronounce an opinion upon the precise question raised in Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (4); it is sufficient to hold that it is clearly distinguishable and does not apply to the facts of this case. Here the property has been held by the Court to be a saleable occupancy holding; it has actually been brought to sale as such and converted into money at the instance of the opposite party. They, however, argue that the petitioners are not entitled to rateable distribution, because they were unsuccessful in their allegation that the property was saleable. This contention is clearly untenable. Nor can we accede to the suggestion that it was the imperative duty of the petitioners to come to this Court and have the erroneous order against them set aside before they could claim rateable distribution.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order of the 3rd September 1914 set aside. The Court below will make an order for rateable distribution, and the Dutts will bring back into Court, within such time as may be prescribed by that Court, so much of the money withdrawn by them as is necessary for payment to the Boses. The petitioners are entitled to their costs both here and in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Sukkur-Larkana.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. R. Bugtani, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant seeks to execute an instalment decree passed on the 26th May 1905 for Rs. 550 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. His application for execution is dated the 7th March 1912 and is admittedly time-barred, unless it is held that a payment on account of interest made by the judgment-debtor in May 1910 perates under section 20 of the Limitation Act to extend the period of limitation prescribed by Article 182. A previous application for execution had been made on 3rd April 1908, so that the payment in question was made before the expiration of the period of three years prescribed under head 5 of Article 182.

The question has not been considered by the lower Appellate Court, which overruled other contentions for appellant that have not been urged before us. But the Subordinate Judge's Court held that as his payment had not been certified under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, it could not [under sub-rule (3) of that rule] be recognised for any purpose whatever, even for extending the period of limitation. We agree with his view that an uncertified payment cannot under the present Code be recognised by any Court executing the decree for any purpose whatever, and that the present law overrides the decisions that there was nothing in the corresponding provisions of section 258 of the Code of 1882 to prevent an uncertified payment from operating as a part-payment within the meaning of section 20 of the Limitation Act, so as to prolong the period of limitation for applying for execution under that Act. This clearly follows from the omission of the words "as a payment or adjustment of the decree" which followed the word "recognised" in paragraph 3 of section 258 of the former Code. A similar view has been taken by the Calcutta High Court in Kutubullah Sarkar v. Durga Charan Rudra (1) and by the Allahabad High Court in Radri Narayan v. Kunj Bihari Lal (2) and two cases reported as Gokul Chand v. Bhika (3) and Bhajan Lal v. Cheda Lal (4).

Mr. Isardas for appellant contends, however, that the payment in question was sufficiently certified to the Court by its mention in the application for execution of 7th March 1912, and in support of this relies on the remarks of Farran, C. J., on this point in Tukaram v. Babaji (5). An application for execution has under Order XXI, rule 11 (2) (e), to contain a statement whether any, and (if any) what, payment or other adjustment of the matter in controversy has been made between the parties subsequently to the decree, and as no particular form or manner is prescribed for certifying payments under Order XXI, rule 2, there appears to be no valid reason why they should not be certified to the Court in this manner. It is also true that no period of limitation is prescribed within which a decree-holder should certify a payment or adjustment and that it has been held that he may, therefore, apply at any time for having it certified. But this does not dispose of the question before us. It still remains to be considered whether a payment which is not certified "before the expiration of the prescribed period" is an effectual payment for the purpose, and within the meaning of section 20 of the Limitation Act.

The general test as to what constitutes a good payment under that section is, that it must be of such a nature that it would be an answer to a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the amount, see Kollipara Pullamma v. Maddula Tatayya (6) and Kariyappa v. Rachapa (7). The same principle (which follows the corresponding English Law) is clearly approved by the Privy Council in Sukhamoni Chowdhurani v. Ishan Chunder Roy (8), where the case of Kollipara Pullamma v. Maddula Tatayya (6) was cited in argument (p. 849) and the payment in issue was held to be one contemplated by section 20, because it was "a payment in exoneration pro tanto of the liability of the person liable to pay."

In the present case, the appellant could have filed an application for execution of the decree and sought to recover this particular sum, among others claimed as due under his decree, at any time after its payment upto the expiration of the prescribed period in 1911. As soon as the 90 days allowed for a judgment-debtor's application under Order XXI, rule 2 (2), had elapsed, the payment in question could not be pleaded by the judgment-debtor as an answer to appellant's claim, because it had not been certified. It only becomes a good answer and an exoneration pro tanto of the judgment-debtor's liability on being certified to the Court. Under section 20 of the Limitation Act the payment must be made "before the expiration of the prescribed period." But no payment towards a judgment-debt is (on the view taken above) a payment within the meaning of section 20 unless it has been certified. It follows that a payment, which is not certified till after "the expiration of the prescribed period", is insufficient to operate for the benefit of the judgment-creditor under that section.

As a somewhat analagous case, reference may be made to Venkaji Babaji Naik v. Shidramapa Balapa Desai (9). In that case it was held that where apart from a document which is inadmissible in evidence, for want of registration, the receipt of certain sums as interest cannot be proved, the receipt of the amounts cannot save the suit from limitation. The fact that the requirements of the law relating to registration had not been complied with by the plaintiff, prevented the payment being available for his benefit under section 20. An uncertified payment is under Order XXI, rule 2 (3), on a somewhat similar footing. The mere payment is not sufficient: there is a statutory requirement to be satisfied to make it a valid payment, so far as regards any Court executing the decree: and until that requirement is satisfied it does not become a payment of the kind contemplated by section 20 of the Limitation Act. The payment and certifying must, therefore, both be made "before the expiration of the prescribed period."

The above view has also been adopted in Bhajar Lal v. Cheda Lal (4), but it is not necessary to go so far as to lay down that a decree-holder cannot (if he wants to) certify a payment made to him out of Court after the decree has become barred by limitation. The head-note to the effect probably goes further than what the learned Judge really meant, viz., that if the decree-holder does certify a payment after the decree has become time-barred, that is ineffectual to save limitation under section 20.

It may be added that the above view is also one which follows the general rule that "it is the duty of the Judge to make such construction as shall suppress all evasions for the continuance of mischief." Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, page 157. Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, imposes a statutory obligation on the decree-holder to certify all payments or adjustments out of Court, and this obligation will perhaps be less evaded than it is, if decree-holders understand that they stand to lose something by not certifying a payment or adjustment, at any rate before the execution of a decree becomes time-barred. The contrary view, that a decree-holder can certify at the last moment and still get the benefit of section 20 of the Limitation Act, would practically make Order XXI, rule 2 (1), a dead letter, unless and until it suited the decree-holder to certify a payment for his own benefit. But this is plainly opposed to the whole object of that rule, which is intended for the protection of the judgment-debtor and not for the decree-holder's benefit.

To apply the remarks made in Venkaji v. Shidramapa (9), the case, no doubt, is one of hardship, so far as appellant cannot now execute his decree, but the hardship has arisen from his neglect to comply with the provisions of a statutory law which we should be straining and not giving effect to, if we allowed this appeal. It must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the purchaser at a revenue sale to eject the defendants from the lands held by them. The area of the land in dispute in this suit is about 7 cottahs 7 dhurs and 7 powas. The defendants have been found by the lower Appellate Court to hold 3 cottahs and 7 dhurs as a lakheraj tenure from a time before the Permanent Settlement. It has, therefore, held that the plaintiff is not entitled to eject them. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has stated that the claim for khass possession by the plaintiff and for the ejectment of defendants is dismissed.

The plaintiff appeals and on his behalf it has been argued (1) that as the learned Judge has found that only 3 cottahs 7 dhurs was the area of the defendants' lakheraj tenure, the plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to a decree for khass possession of the remaining 4 cottahs 7 powas; (2) that the finding of the Subordinate Judge as to the 3 cottahs 7 dhurs being a lakheraj tenure is wrong; (3) that the entry in the thak map is not admissible in evidence; and (4) that the lower Appellate Court has misconstrued section 6 of Regulation XIX of 1793.

We think that the first of these pleas must prevail. The defendants are in occupation of 7 cottahs 7 dhurs and 7 powas of land. The lower Appellate Court has found that the defendants are protected to the extent of 3 cottahs and 7 dhurs. Therefore, the plaintiff is decidedly entitled to eject the defendants from the remaining 4 cottahs and 7 powas of land in respect of which the defendants are obviously trespassers. We must, therefore, modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court to this extent with costs in proportion.

We see no reason, however, to interfere with the findings of the lower Appellate Court as regards the 3 cottahs 7 dhurs of land which the Subordinate Judge has held to constitute a lakheraj tenure existing from before the Permanent Settlement. The learned Pleader for the appellant contends that the finding has been wrongly arrived at because the entry in the thak map is not admissible in evidence. The thak map was made in 1856-57, that is, about 60 years ago. That entry is, in our opinion, admissible in evidence. This has been pointed out in several cases, namely, in the cases of Maharaja Jagadindra Nath Roy Bahadur v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) and Abdul Hamid Mian v. Kiran Chandra Roy (2). The learned Pleader for the appellant relies upon the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Fazal Ali (3). But that case has been discussed and distinguished in the case of Abdul Hamid Mian v. Kiran Chandra Roy (2). The entry in the map was, therefore, admissible in evidence and was good evidence of possession and the lower Appellate Court was justified in presuming that the lakheraj tenure existed from before the Permanent Settlement. This being so, the defendants cannot be ejected from this land, because it is not an incumbrance which the plaintiff can annul. The learned Pleader for the appellant maintains that the lower Appellate Court has misconstrued the provisions of section 6 of Regulation XIX of 1793. We, however, do not think that he has done so. In 1793 the Government resumed all classes of invalid tenures but it did not think it necessary to resume lakheraj tenures of insignificant area. That being so, the lower Appellate Court was entitled to presume that the disputed land was one of those tenures of insignificant area, which the Government did not think it worth while to resume and, therefore, to hold that the defendants' tenure is a tenure dependent upon the estate of which it is a part. We, therefore, see no reason to interfere with the decree of the lower Appellate Court as regards 3 cottahs 7 powas of land and accordingly affirm it to this extent. As regards 4 cottahs 7 dhurs, as already mentioned, we decree the appeal with costs in proportion.

Section 17 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, VI of 1876, as amended by Act V of 1884 and rule 16 of the rules framed thereunder, which require the sanction of the Commissioner as regards leases of immoveable property belonging to owners incapacitated thereunder for terms over four years, do not lay down that in cases in which it is affirmatively established that a transaction itself in all its essential particulars has obtained the sanction of the Commissioner and in which it is requisite that the transaction be carried into effect by the preparation of the appropriate deeds, the document ultimately prepared should again be submitted for sanction. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Quere:—Whether a sanction given to the grant of a putni in favour of R. W. and Company could validate a grant in pursuance thereof in favour of R. W. and Company Ltd., as being to a different persona and whether a change in the lessee or putnidar ought to be treated as a change in essentials? [p. 57, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree and judgment of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 28th April 1910, affirming those of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, dated the 25th November 1907.

FACTS.—The suit was for a declaration that a putni lease, dated 29th June 1890, was ultra vires and invalid as containing terms not intended to be contained therein and as not being sanctioned by the Commissioner as required by law, inasmuch as it related to an encumbered estate governed by the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act VI of 1876, and the rules framed thereunder, and by Act V of 1884. The Courts below upheld the putni. The plaintiff, thereupon, appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. Uppjohn, K. C., and Dunne, for the Appellants:—The putni is ultra vires and not binding on the appellant, as the intention of the parties was that the ijara of 27th February 1883 was to be the basis thereof but was really in excess of it. Further the putni is illegal, inasmuch as it has not been sanctioned by the Commissioner as required by the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, VI of 1876, as amended by Act V of 1884, section 17 and rule 16 framed under the powers vested under section 19. The case of Gulabsingh v. Gokuldas (1) is distinguishable, inasmuch as there the sanction of the executive head of a Province was required and it could not be expected that he would go into details. Further the sanction is to R. Watson & Co. and the putni is granted to quite a different persona, viz., R. Watson & Co., Ltd. It being also a condition precedent that the salami payable under the putni was to be paid before the end of March 1890, the putni is invalid as the salami was paid only in June 1890. The breach could not be waived.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Bengal, dated the 28th April 1910, affirming a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, dated the 25th November 1907, dismissing the suit with costs. The main object of the suit was to obtain a declaration of the nullity of a putni lease, dated the 29th June 1890. The other demands in the plaint were consequential upon such a declaration of nullity being obtained. The only question argued in the appeal was whether the putni lease was ultra vires and invalid.

The facts are briefly these. The first appellant, the plaintiff, is the son and successor of the late Raja Broja Kishore Singh Deb Darpashaha, the owner of the Barabhum Estate. In 1883 the Raja borrowed Rs. 60,000 from Messrs. Robert Watson and Company on a mortgage of his estate, and on 27th February of that year he executed an ijara lease in their favour. This lease contained a condition that if the Company should desire to take a putni lease of such portions of 84½ villages as were treated in the ijara as ghatwali lands, the Raja would grant such a putni on certain terms. On 8th March 1885 this putni was granted. Four years thereafter, viz., on 6th March 1889, the affairs of the Raja being deeply embarrassed, the estate was placed under the protection of Government by virtue of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876.

There were apparently considerable difficulties in arranging for the liquidation of the debts. After negotiations it was agreed that the remaining portions excluded from Messrs. Watson and Company's former putni lease should be demised to these creditors for a sum of Rs. 30,000. Their Lordships have considered the documents and have no hesitation whatsoever in accepting the view that the true, and, in fact, only meaning of the transaction was that expressed in the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur's letter of the 20th February 1890, in which he sanctioned "the proposal to grant them a putni lease of the 84½ villages excluded from the present putni."

The elements of the transaction being thus settled and the amount of the premium arranged, what remained to be done was to have the actual deed drawn up and executed. This was done. It has been argued before the Board that the putni lease which was sanctioned was to be a lease containing the terms of the ijara lease. The Board cannot assent. These two contracts are essentially different in character, the latter being of a temporary character, containing provisions and reservations suitable to a lease for a short duration. Their Lordships have no hesitation in accepting the judgment of the High Court which is thus expressed on this point:—

"The fact that the Raja had granted a previous putni lease was known to the Commissioner, and was, in fact, referred to in his sanction. * * * It is * * * reasonable to assume that the Commissioner understood its character when he was asked to sanction a similar putni. It would have been inconvenient that the subsequent putni should be on any different terms from the first, because, as pointed out in the course of the correspondence, the proposed new putni was in respect of villages which were scattered about in the area covered by the earlier putni, and the object of the second putni was to round up the estate. I do not think, therefore, that this ground has been made out."

Apart from the point just dealt with, the putni lease actually granted is now challenged. The grounds of challenge may be compendiously and conveniently stated as follows:—

(1) It is said that the sanction was, upon a sound construction of the letter of 20th February 1890, merely a sanction of a proposal to grant a putni. Their Lordships think the objection to be trivial. This proposal had been made, it had been accepted, a contract was accordingly completed on the subject, and it was that contract so completed that was sanctioned.

(2) It was said that the sanction contained the clause "provided that the amount be paid before the end of March 1890." In the course of carrying out the bargain some delay, not very great, occurred. There was an exchange of views as to the actual wording of the draft putni, but the document was finally settled by both parties, and on the 25th June 1890, Messrs. Watson and Company paid the salami of Rs. 30,000 to the official manager of the estate, viz., the Deputy Commissioner. This being done, it does not appear to their Lordships that it would have been open thereafter for a challenge to be made, even by the Deputy Commissioner himself, or for the Commissioner's sanction to have been withdrawn. A fortiori there appears no ground for sustaining such a challenge when put forward after a considerable lapse of years on behalf of the successor of the debtor.

• RAMKANAI SINGH v. MATHEWSON.

(3) The last objection is of a two-fold character. It is urged that the sanction of the Commissioner, being a statutory requisite in virtue of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act of 1876, of the rules thereunder, and of the Act of the Governor-General, V of 1884, such sanction was not given to the final and actual putni lease itself. This depends upon a construction, especially, of rule 16, which is in the following terms:—

"The power to lease under section 17 of the Act shall be subject to the following provision:—'No lease shall be given for any term exceeding three years without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner, or exceeding four years without the sanction of the Commissioner.'"

Upon this point their Lordships are of opinion that when it is affirmatively established that a transaction itself in all its essential particulars has obtained the sanction of the Commissioner, and when it is requisite that the transaction be carried into effect by the preparation of the appropriate deeds, a challenge merely on the ground that the document ultimately prepared had not been submitted for sanction cannot be sustained. In administrative and departmental action it must necessarily be the case that formal details may have to be entered upon in order to carry into practical effect, and put into legal shape, the arrangement to which sanction was adhibited. The first head of this objection accordingly fails. And it was further urged that in any view the transaction which was sanctioned was a transaction of a grant of a putni lease to Robert Watson and Company, in other words, to a firm of individual men and not to Robert Watson and Company, Limited, v.e., a different and incorporated persona. This demands careful consideration. There is this to be said for the objection, that the persona in the latter case is different from the persona in the former, and that a change in the lessee or putnidar ought to be treated as a change in essentials. It may be added that a putni lease of land, an agreement of an important and wide-reaching character, might demand separate consideration, and point to a different conclusion when this essential was altered. Questions might arise, and difficulties suggest themselves, with regard to a limited Company against whom legal remedies at law might not be the same as in the case of individuals, and public and administrative considerations might come into play operative either in the way of restriction or refusal on account of a change in persona in the lessee. In the opinion of their Lordships, it is not necessary to pronounce any judgment upon this point in the present case. For, their Lordships are of opinion that when the negotiators in the course of correspondence mentioned in their letters Robert Watson and Company, they did in fact mean and were perfectly understood to mean Robert Watson and Company, Limited, the fact of the incorporation of the limited concern being well known; and, indeed, one of the principal documents of the case is the petition, dated 14th May 1889, being the petition of Messrs. Robert Watson and Company, Limited, filing the account of the money due to them. It may be true that the limited concern is a different one from the previous and unincorporated firm, but in the language of the judgment of the High Court:

"The misdescription does not, under the ordinary principle applicable to such matters, affect the validity of the sanction or the lease. Though there was such a misdescription, it is perfectly clear what was intended by the sanction, and that it was intended that the lease should be given and taken by the persons who are properly described as Messrs. Robert Watson and Co., Limited."

A point was taken to the effect that the putni transaction could not be held to have been ratified, seeing that it had not specifically taken into account the existence of khoorpoosh or maintenance rights over the property sold. These could in no view have been affected, for the simple reason that the interests of third parties properly secured over the properties were in no respect prejudiced. And as to the further point that in the event of the discontinuance of these rights a certain reversion would follow to the zemindar, their Lordships are of opinion that this reversionary right not being in fact embraced within the grant, no prejudice to any such rights has occurred. The point accordingly fails.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgments of the Court, below are correct, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the landlord-defendant in a suit commenced by the tenant-respondent under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair rent. The landlord defended the suit on the allegation that the plaintiff was not his tenant. It was established, however, that in 1895 the plaintiff got a lease for a term of six years, from the mother of the defendant while the latter was an infant. It has been argued that this lease was not binding upon the appellant; inasmuch as his mother, though his certificated guardian, had not obtained the sanction of the District Judge. This contention is of no assistance to the appellant, because even if it be assumed—as the matter has not been investigated—that the lease had not been sanctioned by the District Judge, it was merely voidable at the instance of the defendant. No question, however, can now arise as to the avoidance of the lease. The original term of the lease has expired, and the plaintiff has been allowed to hold over ever since 1901. Even if the lease had been for five years or for a shorter period, and the plaintiff had held over after the expiry of the term, as he has done, he would have by this time acquired the status that he has actually attained. The real question in controversy consequently is, what is the status of the plaintiff in view of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act? Upon that matter, there is no room for controversy. On the 10th December 1891, that is, six years before the grant of the lease to the plaintiff, sections 20 and 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act were extended to the district in which the disputed land is situate. The result of that extension was to make section 6 of Act X of 1859 inapplicable, as laid down by this Court in the case of Brahmanunda

* MOTILAL SHIVLAL v. BOMBAY COTTON MANUFACTURING CO. LTD.

Mahapatra v. Arjun Raut (1), which was accepted as good law in Rafiuddin Mahomed v. Iswar Raut (2). It was not till the 21st August 1906 that section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was extended to this district. In the interval the plaintiff had been in occupation for a period of nine years and had acquired the status of a non-occupancy raiyyat. That status could not obviously be retrospectively affected by the subsequent extension of section 116. The plaintiff is thus a non-occupancy raiyyat under the defendant and is entitled to have fair rent assessed under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decree of the Special Judge must consequently be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

THE BOMBAY COTTON MANUFACTURING COMPANY, LTD.—PLAINTIFFS

Company—Manager or Managing Director, power of, to purchase liability of stranger or partner.

The Manager or Managing Director of a Mill Company has no implied authority to purchase on behalf of his Mill the liability of a stranger and still less that of its own Manager or Manager's partner in a private transaction of his own. [p. 61, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree and judgment of the Bombay High Court, dated 20th August 1912, affirming those of Beaman, J., dated 4th March 1912, in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the said Court.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs-respondents sued the defendant-appellant, a money-lender, to recover a certain sum of money which, it was alleged, was paid by the plaintiff Company on the 21st April 1909 to the defendant under circumstances which entitled the plaintiff Company to recover it as money had and received. The plaintiffs pleaded that the defendant obtained the payment of the sum from them by a fraudulent scheme concocted by his munim, Dani, and Dwarkadas Dharamsey, one of the agents of the Company, or that the payment of the sum was obtained from the plaintiffs without consideration.

The defendant denied the alleged fraud and want of consideration; and pleaded that the sum of money paid to him by the plaintiff company was in re-payment of a loan which, Dwarkadas had represented was required for the use of the plaintiff Company.

The issues material for the purpose of this report were as follows:—

(1) Whether a fraudulent contrivance was devised by J. Dani, the munim of defendant, and Dwarkadas Dharamsey to secure to the defendant the re-payment of Rs. 50,000 as alleged in paragraph 5 of the plaint.

(2) Whether a payment of Rs. 50,000 by the plaintiffs to defendant on 27th April 1909 was caused to be made by Dwarkadas Dharamsey and was procured by J. Dani fraudulently as alleged in paragraph 7 of the plaint?

(3) Whether defendant obtained payment of the said sum of Rs. 50,000 odd by fraud of his agent and whether he is responsible for the same, as alleged in paragraph 9 of the plaint?

(4) Whether the defendant obtained payment of the said sum from the plaintiff Company without consideration, as alleged in paragraph 9 of the plaint?

Beaman, J., who tried the case, found on all the issues in the affirmative, and decreed the suit with costs. The Court of Appeal (Scott, C. J., and Chandavarkar, J.) affirmed this decree. The material part of their judgment was as follows:—

“That the onus lies upon the defendant appears from the following passage in Smith's Mercantile Law, Volume I, 11th Edition, page 35: ‘The following statement of the Law, from earlier editions of the work, has received high judicial sanction. The unexplained fact that a partnership security has been received from one of the partners in discharge of a separate claim against himself is a badge of fraud, or of such palpable negligence as amounts to fraud, which it is incumbent on the party who so took the security to remove, by showing either that the partner from whom he received it acted under the authority of the rest or at least that he himself had reason to believe so. Later authorities, however, appear to regard the issue that arises in circumstances of this nature being not one of fraud, but simply as one of authority. The onus, however, remains the same. The party alleging the fraud or the authority must establish it; and, in our opinion, this statement of the law with regard to the partnership dealings is equally applicable to circumstances such as we have here, where transactions are effected by the Agents of the Company and it is sought to bind the Company by their sayings and doings.

"There being, then, no proof that Dani had good reason to believe that Dwarkadas in this matter was acting on behalf of the plaintiff Company, the only alternative which remains open to the defendant is to show that there was a valid and binding novation effected by Dwarkadas Dharamsey on the 14th April by which the liability of Purshotam Jiwandas was transferred with the consent of the Company to the plaintiffs. There is, however, no evidence that Dwarkadas had any authority on behalf of the Company to accept for them a liability which had been taken upon himself by Purshotam, one of the Agents. The defendant has been unable to show by reference to the Company's books or to his own that the Company got any benefit from the loan of Rs. 50,000 on the 13th February. The transaction, if we hold the representation of Vallabh not to be proved, was a transaction simply between the defendant and Dwarkadas Dharamsey, and in the absence of evidence of authority to effect a novation we could not saddle the liability for the transaction upon the plaintiff Company."

The defendant, thereupon, appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., Messrs. Brown and Raikes, for the Appellant:—The receipt for the amount was signed by the Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents of the plaintiff Company, which must be held bound thereby.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—The appellant has to show affirmatively that the Company authorised the agents to borrow the money.

The mere fact that the agents had signed the receipt does not prove such authority.]

It was not disputed that the agents had full power to execute in the ordinary course such receipts.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., and Dunne, for the Respondents, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

SIR GEORGE FARWELL.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated 20th August 1912, of the High Court of Bombay, affirming a judgment and decree of the High Court in its original jurisdiction, made on 4th March 1912.

In 1909, the date of the transactions in question in this appeal, the appellant was a banker and money-lender in Bombay, having as his business Manager there one Dani. At the same time the respondent Company had as its Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents the firm of Jiwandas & Co., consisting of two partners, Dwarkadas Dharamsey and Purshotam, and Dwarkadas was also Agent and Managing Director of the Tricundas Mills Company and the Lakmidas Mills Company; both of these Companies were then quite insolvent, while the respondents were perfectly solvent.

On the 13th February 1909, Dwarkadas applied to Dani for a loan to himself or either of the two mills of Rs. 50,000; Dani refused to make the advance to Dwarkadas but agreed to make it to Purshotam, and accordingly, on a receipt signed by Purshotam for Rs. 50,000 bearing interest at 8 per cent., Dani, on behalf of the respondents, paid the sum of Rs. 50,000 to Dwarkadas, who at once applied it for his own use and benefit by reducing his own indebtedness to the Tricundas Mills. On due date, the 14th April 1909, Dani, by his son, applied for payment to Purshotam who referred him to Dwarkadas. Dwarkadas was quite unable to pay, and thereupon Dani, Dwarkadas and Purshotam prepared a number of documents and paper entries in the books of the respondent Company and the Tricundas Company for the fraudulent purpose of transferring the liability to pay the amount due on the receipt from Purshotam and the Tricundas Company to the solvent respondent Company. A receipt for Rs. 50,666-10-8 was signed by Purshotam on behalf of the respondents and was given to Dani in discharge to the bill then due, and entries were made in their books by Dwarkadas and Purshotam, crediting the said sum to the appellant as received from him and debiting Rs. 68,666-10-8, which included this Rs. 50,666-10-8. Various other entries were made in the books of the Tricundas Mills and in those of Dwarkadas and of the respondents, but both Courts below agree in regarding them as fraudulent and there is no question left for their Lordships' consideration except that of authority of the respondents' agents. It is said that the liability of Purshotam was duly transferred to the respondents by Dwarkadas as their agent. Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that Dwarkadas had no such authority: it is not suggested that he had express authority, and the Manager or Managing Director of a Mill Company has no implied authority to purchase on behalf of his mill the liability of a stranger and still less of their own Manager or Manager's partner in a private transaction of his own.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), ss. 68, 72, 83, 120, 152 (b), scope of—Record of Rights, entry made in correctness of—Civil Court, jurisdiction of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 14, 120, applicability of—Deputy Commissioner, power of, to give effect to decree.

A suit under section 83 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act is governed by Article 120, and not by Article 14, of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1908. [p. 62, col. 2.]

Where a dispute related to an entry made by a Settlement Officer in a Record of Rights prepared under Chapter VI of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act and the appellants were described as shikmi gaontias or permanent tenants under the plaintiffs, who were the gaontias of the village, and a suit was instituted by the plaintiffs under section 83 of the Land Revenue Act to have the entry amended so that the appellants might be described as mortgagees and not as permanent tenants:

Held, that the Settlement Officer acted either under section 69 or section 72 of the Act in deciding the question between the parties or in making the disputed entry in the Record of Rights, and that under section 83, the Civil Court had jurisdiction to review his decision or the entry. [p. 63, col. 1.]

The provision of section 120 shows that a suit under section 83 is in the nature of a declaratory suit and that in spite of the express provisions of the section, a Civil Court can only declare that an entry is erroneous and how it should be amended, but it cannot execute its decree by bringing the Record of Rights into Court and altering it. The decree has to be taken to the Deputy Commissioner. This conclusion is confirmed by section 152, clause (b), which deprives the Civil Court of jurisdiction over certain matters including correction of entries or revision of records under sections 120, 121 and 122. JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Sambalpur, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the same district.

The land in dispute is situated in the District of Sambalpur and in matters pertaining to the land revenue is governed by the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881). The dispute relates to an entry made in a Record of Rights prepared under Chapter VI of that Act. The entry describes the appellants as shikmi gaontias or permanent tenants under the plaintiffs, who are the gaontias of the village. At this stage of the litigation it is very properly conceded that if it is open to the plaintiffs to contest the correctness of the entry, the entry is wrong, the lease granting the appellants a permanent tenancy having been judicially set aside. On the other hand it is not denied that the appellants are entitled to possession as mortgagees. In substance, therefore, the plaintiffs seek to have the entry amended so that the appellants may be described as mortgagees and not as permanent tenants.

The suit was instituted by the plaintiffs and dealt with by the Courts below as a suit under section 83 of the Land Revenue Act. On that footing the principal question which arises is, whether a suit under section 83 is subject, as regards limitation, to Article 14 or to Article 120 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. Article 14 applies "to suits to set aside any act or order of an officer of Government in his official capacity" and the period of limitation provided is one year from the date of the act or order. Under the omnibus Article 120 the period of limitation is six years from the time when the right to sue accrues. Section 83 enables a suit to be brought to have entries in the Record of Rights relating to certain specific matters "cancelled or amended." We are not concerned with the rest of the enabling clause or with the two provisos. For the appellants it is contended that an entry in a Record of Rights is an "act" or "order" of a Government officer and that as section 83 in effect authorises the Civil Court to set aside such act or order in certain cases, the present suit, if it falls within the section, must be governed by Article 14. The argument is directed to the distinction suggested by reported cases between a power on the part of the Civil Court to make a decree which is merely declaratory of the plaintiff's rights and a mere basis for further proceedings before some Revenue or other officer and a power to make a decree which positively sets aside and nullifies something which an officer of Government has done. In illustration reference may be made to Agin Bindh v. Mohan Bikram Shah (1) and Parbati Nath v. Rajmohun Dutt (2). The appellants would have it that the decrees made below are decrees of the latter class, and if it be assumed that the disputed entry is an "act" or "order" which has been set aside, the language of section 83 lends some colour to the contentions advanced. But section 83 must be read, in my opinion, as the lower Courts have read it, with sections 120 and 152. The Record of Rights in question has been made over to the Deputy Commissioner and section 120 gives the Deputy Commissioner power in such case to correct any entry on certain grounds of which one is the following:—

"(b) that by a decree in a suit brought under section 83, it has been declared to be erroneous."

This provision shows that a suit under section 83 is in the nature of a declaratory suit and that though the section speaks of a suit under it as a suit to have an entry cancelled or amended, the Civil Court can only declare that the entry is erroneous and how it should be amended, but cannot execute its decree by bringing the Record of Rights into Court and altering it. The decree has to be taken to the Deputy Commissioner. This conclusion is confirmed by section 152, clause (b), which deprives the Civil Court of jurisdiction over certain matters including "12) correction of entries or revision of records under sections 120, 121 and 122."

No case precisely in point was cited at the Bar, but perhaps the most in point is that of Faki Ghulam Mohidin v. Sajnak (3). In my opinion the suit is not governed by Article 14 but by Article 120 and is within time.

A further point however was taken before us. It was not taken in the Courts below but as it raises a question of jurisdiction we have to notice it. It is now suggested that the suit is not within section 83 at all and that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction. Under section 83 a Civil Court has jurisdiction in respect of entries as to any matter referred to in section 78. Section 78 again relates back to a number of sections of which sections 68 and 72 may be mentioned. Section 68 directs the Settlement officer to ascertain the persons who are in possession as proprietors of each mahal. "By definition the word 'proprietor' includes for most purposes a 'gaontia' [section 4 clause 8 (a)], and is also to 'be deemed to include an assignee of proprietary rights' (Explanation II of section 4 A). An "inferior proprietor is not, as such, a tenant" (section 4, clause 14). Now, if a permanent tenure-holder such as a shikmi gaontia is in respect of his tenants a proprietor, though, it may be, an inferior proprietor, the question whether the defendants are in possession as permanent tenure-holders or merely as mortgagees, is apparently within the scope of section 68. It seems reasonable prima facie that the section should extend to the ascertainment of the character of the proprietary possession and the language seems sufficiently wide to admit of a construction which would bring such a question within its scope. Under section 72, again, "the Settlement Officer is to ascertain and record for each mahal the status of all tenants occupying land therein, the lands respectively held by them, the conditions on which they respectively hold such lands, and the rents (if any) payable by them respectively." Under this section the question whether a particular person is or is not a tenant is a question which must be open to the Settlement Officer in connection with the entries which the section 72 requires to be made. The determination of that question is a necessary preliminary. If, therefore, a permanent tenure-holder is qua the superior landlord a "tenant," the Settlement officer had jurisdiction to decide for the purpose of the preparation of the Record of Rights whether the defendants could properly lay claim to such a status. The conclusion is that in deciding the question between the parties or in making the disputed entry in the Record of Rights the Settlement Officer acted either under section 68 or section 72 and his decision, or the entry, was open to review by the Civil Courts under the terms of section 83. The contention on the contrary urged for the first time in this Court, therefore, fails.

The decrees of the Courts below are in a proper declaratory form and in the result this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Executors—Suits, inter se, of devastavit, if maintainable in India—English Common Law Rule against maintainability, if applies to Indian Courts—Forms of action, if exist in India.

Unlike in England, there are no forms of action within one of which every suit must be brought in Indian Courts and consequently the rule of English Common Law which forbids an action of devastavit being brought by one executor against another, has no application to India. [p. 64, col. 1.]

In the absence of any direction in the testator's Will, an executor is not entitled to lend money without security to another executor. [p. 64, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair, dated the 2nd of March 1914, passed in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

FACTS.—By his last Will and testament one Purushothama Chetty appointed the plaintiff and the defendant and one Nalam Venkataratnam as his executrix and executors respectively, and appointed the plaintiff also as his legatee. The plaintiff and the defendant both joined in taking out Probate of the Will. The defendant mismanaged the property and lent a sum of Rs. 8,500 to Nalam Venkataratnam without any security whatever. The latter having become insolvent, the plaintiff sued the defendant for a devastavit. His Lordship Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair, who heard the case sitting on the original side, held that the defendant was liable to account for the sum of Rs. 8,500 lent out to Nalam Venkataratnam and gave the necessary directions for the filing of accounts, etc. Against the said decision, defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyengar (with Messrs Venkatasubba Rao and Radhakrishnayya), for the Appellant:—The action sounds as an action of devastavit. Such an action is not maintainable by one executor against another. The Will authorises the lending of money without security.

KHIRODA SUNDARI DASÍ v. NABIN CHANDRA SAHA.

In any view the plaintiff is jointly liable with the defendant as she had consented to the loan.

Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Respondent:—The rule of English Law forbidding actions by executors, inter se, is based upon the peculiar procedure of that law as regards forms of action within which every suit must be brought. The freedom of litigants in India is not circumscribed by any such forms of action. The Will does not empower the executor to lend without security. There is no ground raised as to the plaintiff's consent to the loan and further that point has been specially reserved by the learned trial Judge.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The appellant, 1st defendant, is one of the two executors who took out the Probate, Exhibit A, and accepted the office of executor. The testator's name is Purushothama Chetty. The plaintiff is the other executor who took out Probate A third executor, Nalam Venkataratnam, is an insolvent and it does not appear that he joined in the Probate. The learned trial Judge held the 1st defendant liable to account to the estate in respect of a sum of Rs. 8,500 (eight thousand five hundred rupees) which belonged to the estate and which he lent out to the third executor. The Judge directed the 1st defendant to file the necessary accounts and also gave the usual further directions. The first contention in appeal (if I understood it right) is that one executor cannot file an action at common law, according to English practice, against another executor, that the present action is an action of devastavit, which is a common law action, and hence that this suit must be dismissed.

The short answer is that there are no forms of action within one of which every suit must be brought in Indian Courts and that the records show that this action was brought on behalf of the estate for establishing all necessary reliefs for the benefit of the estate.

Then it is contended that the 1st defendant was entitled to lend the money without security to Nalam Venkataratnam. A perusal of the testator's Will clearly shows that this contention also is untenable.

Lastly, it is argued that, in any event, the plaintiff is jointly liable with the 1st defendant, as she consented to the loan made to Nalam Venkataratnam. In the first place this is not stated as one of the grounds of appeal in the appeal memorandum, which only says that because the plaintiff was wrong-doer herself, she could not call upon the 1st defendant to answer. In the next place, the learned Judge says: "It is unnecessary for me to determine at this stage whether the plaintiff consented to it or not." I have, therefore, no doubt that the questions whether the plaintiff consented to the making of the loan to Nalam Venkataratnam, and if so, whether she is jointly liable with the 1st defendant for the loss incurred by the estate or even whether she, as executor-legatee, is liable in a greater degree than the 1st defendant—all these questions were left to be decided in later stages of the suit, and we must presume that the final decree in the suit would have been passed after a consideration of these points.

I would, therefore, dismiss the present appeal with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I concur.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 20th January 1913.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Upendra Lal Roy, for the Appellants.

Dr. Sarat Chunder Basak, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of refusal of the Court below to set aside an ex parte decree. The respondent instituted a suit against several persons to recover a large sum of money alleged to be due from them as members of a partnership concern. The suit was decreed ex parte. Two of these defendants, now appellants before us, made an application to set aside that decree on the ground that they had no knowledge of the suit and could not appear to defend it. The Subordinate Judge has held that no case has been made out to justify an order to set aside the ex parte decree. On the present appeal, the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on two grounds; namely, first, that the summonses in the suit were not duly served upon the appellants; and, secondly, that they were, at any rate, prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing.

With regard to the first branch of the contention of the appellants, it is necessary to bear in mind that they are pardanashin ladies and are the widows of one Peary Mohan Shah who is alleged to have been a member of the firm. According to their case, they lived separate from the other members of the family to which their husband belonged, and neither their husband nor they themselves had any concern with the partnership. The return of the peon was to the effect that as they could not be found and as there was no authorised agent to receive summonses on their behalf, the copies of the summonses and plaint were affixed on the main gate of their dwelling house. The peon has been examined and his deposition in Court is substantially to the same effect. On behalf of the appellants, it has been contended that there was no valid service of summons upon them; and in support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Clark v. Rouplaul Mullick (1). Our attention has also been invited to rules 12, 15, 17 and 20 of Order V of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. Rule 12 provides that wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient. In the case before us, it was not practicable to effect service on the appellants in person; as by the custom of the country, the serving officer could not obtain access to them; nor had they an agent empowered to accept service. Consequently it was impossible to comply with the requirements of rule 12. Rule 15 provides that where, in any suit, the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him. There has been considerable discussion at the Bar as to the meaning of the expression "where the defendant cannot be found" and we have been asked to determine whether the expression can be appropriately applied to a case where the serving officer is not able to obtain access to a pardanashin lady, who, it is known, resides in a particular house. We shall presently deal with this question in connection with rule 17. But, apart from this point, it is plain that rule 15 has no application to the circumstances of the present case. The appellants had no agent empowered to accept service of summons on their behalf, nor was there any adult male member of their family who resided with them and could accept service on their behalf. We next come to rule 17 which is in these terms: "Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the defendant, and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was issued with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed." The service, in the case before us, was effected in accordance with rule 17, and the question for consideration is, whether that was valid service. The first portion of rule 17 clearly has no bearing upon the case before us. There was no refusal on the part of the appellants or their agent or any male member of their family to sign the acknowledgment; no question of refusal arises, till the serving officer has delivered or tendered a copy of the summons under rule 16 to the defendant personally or to his agent or other person competent to accept service on his behalf. The question consequently narrows down to this. Is this a case where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, "could not find the defendant?" In our opinion, rule 17 is applicable to a case of the description now before us, where the serving officer is not able to obtain access to the purdanashin lady who has to be served and cannot deliver or tender a copy of the summons to her. There is no decision in Indian Courts directly in point, and the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Clark v. Roupland Mullick (1) is of no real assistance in the solution of this problem. In the first place, the order given in that case was for service upon an agent of the lady concerned, in conformity with the provisions of sections 13 and 15 of Regulation III of 1803. In the second place, there is no special provision in the present Code of Civil Procedure for service of summons on purdanashin ladies as there was in the Regulation mentioned. In our opinion, where it is impossible for the serving officer to obtain access to the person to be served, either by reason of the custom of the country or for any other reason, the case may, without undue stretch of language, be held to be covered by the description "where defendant cannot be found by the serving officer." This view is in accord with the decision in Carter v. Youngs (2). The defendant was confined to his house with illness and his wife refused to permit the officer to have access to him. It was ruled that the case was one in which "the defendant could not be found," and substituted service was ordered. To the same effect is the decision in MacCarthy v. MacCarthy (3), where the father of the lady to be served would not allow her to appear before the serving officer. The case of LeGrand v. Fairall (4) is clearly distinguishable; there, the statutory provision required that service could be effected by leaving a copy of the summons only if the defendant could "not be found within the country of his residence"; the lady to be served was sick and the serving officer could not see her; it was ruled that the substituted service could not be allowed. We are not unmindful that this view of the law may in some instances render the service practically infructuous and defeat the very object of the service of summons upon the defendant, namely, to apprise him that a suit has been instituted against him in a Court of Justice: Hope v. Hope (5); Kistler v. Tettmar (6). The class of cases we have in view is of the description now before us, namely, where a purdanashin lady is not able to accept service personally, has no agent empowered to accept service on her behalf, and has also no adult male member in her family upon whom service may be effected. In such a case as this, valid service is effected under the provisions of rule 17 if the serving officer affixes a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the lady ordinarily resides, and yet the result may be that the person served is really never apprised of the suit. It is plain, however, that a narrow construction cannot be placed upon the terms of rule 17, so as to restrict their operation and to exclude cases clearly covered thereby. But it is worthy of note that there is no real danger of injustice, if the provisions of rule 19 are strictly carried out by the Court. That rule imposes upon the Court the duty to satisfy itself that service has been properly effected, and the Court is authorised either to declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit. Consequently, it is open to the Court, even where there has been a technical compliance with the provisions of rule 17, to order service in another mode if the Court thinks fit to do so, in the interests of justice. The Court may, in a case of this description, direct the issue of summons to purdanashin ladies by means of notice sent by registered post, so that the cover may in due course reach the lady herself. In this view, we are of opinion that the case before us is covered by rule 17 and that as the requirements of that rule have been fulfilled, the appellants cannot succeed on the ground that the summonses were not duly served on them within the meaning of rule 13 of Order IX of the Code. With regard to the second branch of the contention of the appellants, namely, that they were prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, it is material to state that they were examined on Commission, when they pledged their oath that they had no knowledge of the suit and consequently could not defend it. The respondent decree-holder seeks to meet this allegation by proof that the ladies must have known of the suit, as they appeared in Court through a Pleader to oppose his application for attachment before judgment. This contention is rested on a vakalatnama which purports to bear the signature of one of the appellants, Golap Sundari Dasi. It was also signed on behalf of the other appellant, Khiroda Sundari Dasi, by her officer Kamikhaya Ranjan Dutt. The decree-holder, however, did not take steps in the Court below to prove what purports to be the signature of Golap Sundari Dasi on the vakalatnama; nor did he establish that Khiroda Sundari Dasi had authorised Kamikhaya Ranjan Dutt to sign the vakalatnama on her behalf. As the ladies were examined on Commission, it was a singular omission on the part of the decree-holder that the vakalatnama was not put to either of them. But even if this defect in proof had been remedied, the question would require investigation, under what circumstances and on what representation was the vakalatnama signed, and what information, if any, was received by the ladies in respect of the suit instituted against them. The evidence has not been directed to elucidate these vital points, and we have accordingly been pressed by the respondent to allow additional evidence to be taken at his instance at this stage. We are clearly of opinion that we should not accede to this request, as the respondent had ample opportunity to substantiate his case in the Court below. The position consequently is, that the respondent has failed to rebut the allegation on oath made by the ladies that they had no knowledge of the suit. The truth of their assertion appears extremely probable when we remember how the summons is said to have been served on them. There is further the significant circumstance that the ladies had successfully contended before Mr. Justice Fletcher in another proceeding that they were not partners of the firm; and there is considerable force in the argument that if they had been apprised of the proceedings in this suit, they would undoubtedly have repeated the defence which they had previously taken so effectively. The surrounding circumstances all point to the conclusion that the appellants never received actual intimation of the suit.

Finally, it has been argued on behalf of the respondent that as Kamikhaya Ranjan Dutt, an officer of Khiroda Sundari Dasi, was aware of the suit, the ladies had constructive notice thereof. No such contention was raised in the Court below and no foundation has been laid in the evidence for any possible ground on which constructive notice could be imputed to the appellants. We hold accordingly that the ladies have established that they had no knowledge of the suit and that they were prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when it was called on for hearing.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Court below is discharged and the application to set aside the ex parte decree granted. Under the proviso to rule 13 of Order IX, we direct that the ex parte decree be set aside only as against the two ladies who are the appellants before us; the decree will stand as against the other defendants. They will have opportunity to file written statements and the case will be tried out in due course. The appellants are entitled to their costs of these proceedings both here and in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 26th November 1913, upholding the order of the Assistant Collector, Sitapur, dated 7th July 1913.

Babu Hargobind Das, for the Appellant.

FACTS.—The landlord issued a notice of ejectment against the tenant which was written in Kaithi and Urdu, and the tenant contested it on the ground that the notice was bad as it was not written in Hindi and Urdu as provided by section 55 of the Oudh Rent Act. The lower Court found that the figures used in Hindi and Kaithi were the same, that their alphabets, although somewhat different in character, were much akin to each other; that the patwaris in several villages keep their JUDGMENT.—There is nothing in this appeal. After hearing appellant's Counsel I dismiss the appeal. Respondent is not represented by Counsel and I give no costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 163, 164 (1), 165, object of—Tenure, sale of, effect of—Bid, if not sufficient to satisfy decree and costs—Sale, independent of value of bid.

The intention of the Legislature, as can be gathered from sections 163, 164 and 165 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is to entitle a decree-holder, if he so desires, to proceed under section 165 in the event of the sale on the first notification not realising a sum sufficient to liquidate the amount of the decree and costs. [p. 70, col. 1.]

It is not obligatory upon him, however, in this contingency, to avail himself of the provisions of section 165; he may nevertheless be content with the sale under section 164 and if the sale is held under that section, the result described therein follows, viz., the purchaser becomes entitled to annul all encumbrances other than registered and notified encumbrances, provided he follows the procedure prescribed in section 167. [p. 70, col. 1.]

The consequence of the sale does not depend upon the amount of the bid offered by the successful purchaser, it is independent of the value of the bid. [p. 70, col. 1.]

Section 165 was enacted solely for the benefit of the decree-holder; if the bid is not sufficient to satisfy his decree and costs, it entitles him to have the property sold, with power to annul all encumbrances, but it is not obligatory on him to adopt this extreme measure and he is not in peril if he decides not to pursue this special remedy. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for declaration of title to land and for recovery of possession thereof. The plaintiffs are the superior landlords of a nim osut taluk. The talukdars defaulted to pay rent, with the result that they were sued and a rent-decree was obtained against them on the 7th April 1909. On the 5th August 1909, the plaintiffs applied to execute the decree in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act; five days later, an order was made for the simultaneous issue of the writ of attachment and the sale proclamation under sub-section (1) of section 162. The sale was held under sub-section (1) of section 164 on the 23rd September, when the decree-holders themselves purchased the defaulting tenure. The sale was confirmed in due course and symbolical delivery was made to the purchasers. They could not, however, obtain actual possession of the land, as they were resisted by the defendants who set up under-tenures in the property sold. The plaintiffs thereupon took proceedings under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the requisite notices for the annulment of the alleged encumbrances were duly served. On the 18th April 1911, the plaintiffs commenced this action to eject the defendants. The Court of first instance found that the decree was for arrears of rent, that it had been executed in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that at the sale held under sub-section (1) of section 164, the purchasers had acquired the tenure with power to annul the encumbrances thereon other than registered and notified encumbrances, and that steps had been taken in conformity with section 167 to annul the encumbrances set up by the defendants. In this view the Court decreed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision on the ground that the sale, though held under the Bengal Tenancy Act, operated only as a sale under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the decree-holders auction-purchasers, had acquired nothing beyond the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors. This decision is based on the ground that as the sum, realised at the sale, was not sufficient to liquidate the amount of the decree and costs, the sale must be decreed to have been held, not under sub-section (1) of section 164, but under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Subordinate Judge, in this view, has dismissed the suit. On the present appeal, it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge as to the effect of the sale held on the 23rd September 1909 is erroneous and that the purchaser at that sale acquired the defaulting tenure with power to amend all encumbrances other than registered and notified encumbrances. This view has been controverted by the respondents, on the authority of the decision in Banbihari Kapur v. Khetra Pal Singh Roy (1). It has been, indeed, broadly argued on their behalf that a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent operates as a sale under sub-section (1) of section 164, only if the sum realised at the sale is sufficient to liquidate the amount of the decree and costs. We feel no doubt that this contention is erroneous and is not supported by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Section 159 formulates the fundamental principle that where a tenure or holding is sold in execution of a decree for arrears due in respect thereof, the purchaser shall take subject to the interests defined as protected interests, but with power to annul the interests defined as encumbrances. Section 163 provides that when the decree-holder makes the application for execution mentioned in section 162, the Court, if it admits the application and orders execution of the decree as applied for, shall issue simultaneously the order of attachment and the proclamation required by rules 66 and 70 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. Sub-section (2) of section 163 lays down that the proclamation shall announce that the tenure or holding will first be put up to auction, subject to the registered and notified encumbrances, and will be sold subject to those encumbrances, if the sum bid is sufficient to liquidate the amount of the decree and costs, and, that, otherwise, it will, if the decree-holder so desires, be sold on a subsequent date of which due notice will be given, with power to annul all encumbrances. Sub-section (1) of section 164 provides that when a tenure has been advertised for sale under section 163, it shall be put up to auction, subject to registered and notified encumbrances; and if the bidding reaches a sum sufficient to liquidate the amount of the decree and costs including the costs of sale, the tenure shall be sold subject to such encumbrances. The respondents argue that if the bid does not reach a sum sufficient to liquidate the amount of the decree and costs, the sale, if concluded, operates only as a sale under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, with the consequence that the purchaser acquires merely the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. We are clearly of opinion that this contention is not well-founded. If we were to accept the contention of the respondents, we would have to read into sub-section (1) words which are not to be found there. The intention of the Legislature, as can be gathered from sections 163, 164 and 165, is to entitle the decree-holder, if he so desires, to proceed under section 165 in the event of the sale on the first notification not realising a sum sufficient to liquidate the amount of the decree and costs. It is not obligatory upon him, however, in this contingency, to avail himself of the provisions of section 165; he may nevertheless be content with the sale under section 164; and if the sale is held under that section, the result described therein follows, namely, the purchaser becomes entitled to annul all encumbrances other than registered and notified encumbrances, provided he follows the procedure prescribed in section 167. The consequence of the sale does not depend upon the amount of the bid offered by the successful purchaser; it is independent of the value of the bid. It is obvious that section 165 was enacted solely for the benefit of the decree-holder; if the bid is not sufficient to satisfy his decree and costs, it entitles him to have the property sold, with power to annul all encumbrances; but it is not obligatory on him to adopt this extreme measure, and he is not in peril if he decides not to pursue this special remedy. We have been pressed, however, to adopt the contrary view on the strength of some observations in the case of Banbihari Kapur v. Khetra Pal Singh Roy (1), which support the contention of the respondent. With all respect for the learned Judges who decided that case, we are unable to accept their view as a correct exposition of the law on the subject. But we do not think it necessary to refer the matter for decision to a Full Bench, because the observations mentioned were not necessary for the purpose of the decision of that case. It further appears that in that case the sale certificate stated that the purchaser had acquired merely the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, while in the case before us the sale certificate shows, on the face of it, that the purchaser acquired the defaulting tenure itself which had been brought to sale. In our opinion, the view taken by the Subordinate Judge cannot possibly be supported.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. This order will carry costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern the other appeals, viz., Nos. 2698 to 2707 of 1912 and similar decrees will be drawn up in each case.

Second appeal from the District Judge of Benares, dated April 24th, 1914.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kulindi Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the tenant of an occupancy holding executed a mortgage in favour of the defendants in September 1901, that is, after the passing of the present Tenancy Act. The mortgage was, therefore, invalid. The plaintiff, who is the zemindar, might have taken action under section 31 of the Tenancy Act, but he did not do so. He accepted rent from the so-called mortgagees for several years and he has now brought this suit to have them ejected from the holding. Meanwhile in 1911 the occupancy tenant relinquished his holding. According to the decisions of this Court the occupancy tenancy has come to an end. The defendants are certainly not occupancy tenants and it appears to me that they cannot call themselves mortgagees. In the events which have happened, it appears to me that the defendants are the tenants of the plaintiff and may be ejected by him. I was referred to two cases supposed to bear more or less on the present case, namely, Ram Sarup v. Kishan Lal (1) and Brij Kumar Lal v. Sheo Kumar Missir (2). Neither of these cases applies to the present case. The latter had to do with a mortgage made before the passing of the present Tenancy Act. In my opinion the decision of the Court of first instance was correct and should not have been disturbed. I allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi and Lala Radha Kishan, for the Appellants.

Mr. Broadway, Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain and Lala Shib Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are appellants in this Court, sued for possession of a plot of land belonging to one Hamida, and their suit has been dismissed by the learned Divisional Judge as barred by time under Article 144 of the Limitation Act. The question for the determination is whether the defendants have succeeded in proving that they had held the land adversely to the plaintiffs for twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. We have heard arguments on both sides, consulted the law bearing upon the issue before us, and have arrived at the conclusion that the bar of limitation has not been made out and that this appeal must succeed.

NIAMAT ALI v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

The facts which are relevant to the question of limitation are simple and do not admit of any dispute.

Hamida, the original proprietor of the property, murdered his wife in 1891 and absconded during the Police investigation. Proceedings, under sections 87 and 88, Criminal Procedure Code, were thereupon taken against him and his estate was finally sold by the Court on the 8th October 1895 to certain persons who are now represented by defendants Nos. 2 to 7. The vendees paid the price on the 9th April 1896 and took possession of the property more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. Hamida was afterwards arrested, tried, convicted, and hanged on the 22nd September 1898.

In 1908 a Full Bench judgment of this Court, reported as Sadhu Singh v. Secretary of State (1), was published and the plaintiffs, who are collaterals of Hamida, instituted on the 22nd August 1908 the present suit, alleging on the strength of that judgment that, under the Customary Law of the Punjab, the sale of ancestral land made in 1895 must be regarded as having conveyed the rights of Hamida only and that, as those rights came to an end on his death in 1898, the sale did not prejudicially affect the right of inheritance of his reversioners.

This contention is undoubtedly borne out by the above-mentioned judgment and, whatever our view may be on the subject we are bound to follow the proposition of law laid down therein. We must, therefore, hold that the sale transferred only the personal rights of the convict and did not confer absolute ownership on the vendees. The question then arises, whether they have perfected their title by efflux of time.

The learned gentlemen who have argued the case before us for the parties, are agreed that the only provision of the Limitation Act applicable to the case is Article 144, and according to that Article the period of limitation begins to run from the date on which the possession of defendant becomes adverse to plaintiff. We have, therefore, to decide whether the defendants had held the land adversely to the plaintiffs for 12 years before the 22nd

August 1908, the date on which the suit was instituted. It is clear that if the terminus a quo for adverse possession is the date of Hamida's death, the present suit is within time.

It is equally clear that if the defendant's possession is regarded as adverse from the date on which they obtained possession under the sale, the claim is barred by limitation. The issue is thus narrowed down to the determination of the date from which possession of the vendees should, under the law, be regarded as adverse qua the collaterals of Hamida.

The solution of the matter depends upon whether the possession of the defendants during the life-time of Hamida could be considered adverse to the latter's collaterals. We may say at once that it was certainly adverse to Hamida and if the plaintiffs in the present case derive their title to sue for possession from or through Hamida, then, by reason of the definition of the word "plaintiff" contained in section 2 of the Limitation Act, the present plaintiffs would be identified with Hamida and the possession which was adverse to him would be adverse to the plaintiffs.

But can it be said that the collaterals derive their title to sue for possession of ancestral land from or through the male proprietor who is for the time being in possession thereof? The answer to this question has been repeatedly given in the negative and it is only necessary to cite two Full Bench judgments in support of this view. In Roda v. Harnam (2) Mr. Justice Rivaz, speaking with respect to the right of a collateral to sue for possession of ancestral land alienated by the proprietor governed by Customary Law, made the following observations:—

"But does he derive his right to sue for possession from or through such person? In our opinion, he does not, inasmuch as his right to sue for possession, in spite of the last owner's act of alienation, is derived from no individual, but from the customary rule which places a restriction upon the owner's powers of disposition of ancestral property, and renders him liable to be controlled in that respect by his collateral heirs. Such a right never accrued to the alienor himself, and is, therefore, it seems to us, one that cannot be passed on to his successor. The "right to sue" for possession appears to us clearly to import something more than the right to possession, and a simple test appears to us to be this,—could the donor in his life-time have sued to recover possession of the property on grounds similar to those which are the foundation of the present plaintiff's claim? In our opinion, he clearly could not have done so, and we cannot, therefore, affirm that the plaintiff has derived his right to sue from the donor."

(2) 18 P. R. 1895 (F. B.).

* LALTA PRASAD v. BARMHA DIN.

To the same effect is the judgment of the Full Bench in Sundar v. Salig Ram (3), where it was ruled that possession adverse to a reversioner entitled to possession of property after the death of a widow cannot be adverse to the reversioner next in succession, until after the former reversioner's death. The principle of that judgment appears to us to apply a fortiori to the present case in which the plaintiffs had no possible right to possession at the time of the alienation.

It has been pointed out by Mr. Justice Markby in the well-known judgment reported as Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kally Prosonno Mookerjee (4), that adverse possession means "possession by a person holding the land, on his own behalf, of some person other than the true owner, the true owner having a right to immediate possession."

In the present case, the plaintiffs were, as stated above, not entitled to possession at the time of the sale and the vendees could not, therefore, be regarded as holding adversely to them. We are unable to accede to the contention that the involuntary sale of Hamida's land in 1895 had the effect of improving the position of the collaterals and giving them a right of immediate possession. No authority has been cited in support of it and the general principles of Customary Law are decidedly opposed to this proposition. The cases cited by the learned Counsel for the respondents do not apply to the present case inasmuch as, (3) 9 Ind. Cas. 309; 26 P. R. 1911 (F. B.); 34 P. L. R. 1911; 33 P. W. R. 1911.

in those cases, the true owner was entitled to immediate possession and, therefore, possession in derogation of his rights was obviously adverse to him.

It follows from the above discussion that the period during which the vendees held adversely to Hamida cannot be availed of against the plaintiffs. The conclusion, therefore, at which we arrive, is that the Statute of Limitation began to run against them from the date of Hamida's death in 1898, when their right to possession accrued, that the adverse possession of the defendants which began in that year had not ripened into ownership on the date of the suit and that the claim is, therefore, within time. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, to that Court for decision on the merits. The Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal shall be refunded; other costs to be costs in the case.

SRIKANGA CHARARIAR v. PRANATHARTHIHARA CHARARIAR.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur in a suit which was brought for partition of what was alleged to be joint family property. The plaint was filed on a ten rupees stamp, and a preliminary issue was raised by reason of the plea taken by the defendant to the effect that the plaint was insufficiently stamped and that the property being valued over Rs. 90,000 an ad valorem Court-fee was leviable. This preliminary issue has been decided by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiff. The view of the law taken by the Subordinate Judge and for which he cites various authorities, including a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court reported as Tara Chand v. Afzal Beg (1) is to the effect that for the purposes of determining the Court-fee in a suit all that has to be regarded is what is contained in the various allegations set out in the plaint. We do not understand the Subordinate Judge to have decided that those allegations are true. All that he has done is to find that on assuming them to be true, the Court-fee of Rs. 10 which the plaintiff paid on the plaint was sufficient. We agree with this view of the law. We find no reason for interference in this case. The application is rejected.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Suit to administer inam, when maintainable—Inam to benefit grantees not temple, effect of.

No suit lies under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure to administer an inam granted to certain persons for the performance of the service of Acharyapurusha in a temple when no part of the inam was applicable to the temple but the whole of it was intended to benefit the grantees alone. [p. 75, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1912.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and N. S. Rangasawmy Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. Ramachandrier, T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar and T. M. Krishnasawmy Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit instituted by the plaintiffs under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure against defendants Nos. 1 to 4, in whose family the office of Acharyapurusha in the Tirumalai Tirupati temples is hereditary, and against their alienees, and prays for the removal of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 from the office of trustees of the suit properties, for the appointment of new trustees, a declaration that the alienations of the suit properties by the defendants are void, and an order vesting them in the new trustees. The suit properties are inams confirmed to the defendants' family at the time of the Inam Settlement, and the original grant appears to have included the land itself as well as the revenue thereon. The inam registers state that they had been granted for service as Acharyapurusha in the Tirumalai Tirupati Devasthanam so long as the service should be rendered, and the title-deed, Exhibit B, acknowledges the title of the grantee to a devadayam or pagoda service inam "for the support of the pagoda called service of Acharyapurusha in the said temple." The words "the support of the pagoda called," which do not make very good sense, were probably part of the common form drawn up for the confirmation of devadayam inam and do not add anything to the nature of the grant which, as also appears from the register, was for the service called Acharyapurusha in the said temple and was confirmed so long as the conditions thereof should be duly performed. The defendants denied that the lands so granted are held by them as trustees and contended that the suit was not maintainable under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Subordinate Judge held that the grant was for the benefit of the grantees though possibly burdened with certain trusts to a slight extent, and dismissed the suit apparently on the ground that no sufficient case of breach of trust was made out. It was the practice of former rulers to provide for the support of temple officers by grants of this kind and great numbers of such grants exist not only in connection with this temple, as to which see Exhibit M, but also in connection with other temples throughout the country. Such inams are liable to be resumed under the conditions of the grant if the services provided for are not duly rendered; but it has never yet been suggested that the lands so granted are held by the grantees on trust for the temple which can be administered by the Court, or form the subject of a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

According to the definition of a trust in the Trusts Act, which is equally applicable to a charitable trust unaffected by that Act, a trust is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owners for the benefit of another or of another and the owner. The main object of the grant in this case would appear to have been the support of the temple officer discharging the duty of Acharyapurusha in the Tirumalai temple and the inam title-deed does not state that any portion of the inam was applicable to the temple. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs have failed to show that the grant was given, among other things, for the performance of festivals in the Nadamuni temple below the hill at Tirupati and that the property was held on trust for that temple, as well as for the grantee named. We also think the plaintiffs have failed to show that the property was held on trust for the grantee named and the Tirumalai temple. The fact that, as found by the Subordinate Judge, it is the practice of the defendants to expend small sums on the performance of festivals in the Tirumalai temple itself is not enough, in our opinion, to show that the original grant was made to the grantee for the benefit of the temple as well as the grantee. Reference was made to the provisions in Madras Act VIII of 1869 that nothing in the inam title-deed shall be deemed to affect rights of holders or occupiers of lands from which any inam is derived or to affect the interests of any person other than the inam-holder named in the title-deed, and if it could be shown that under the original grant either of these temples had a beneficial interest in the land itself or even in the revenue thereon, that interest would not be affected by a title-deed issued to a third party in which they were not named, but that is not the case here. In the result, we think that in the circumstances the suit which was filed under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure fails and that the Subordinate Judge was right in dismissing it. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 7—Execution of decree—Joint Hindu family manager's power of discharge—Minor members of family—Limitation.

The manager of a joint Hindu family has a right to execute a decree for his own benefit and that of the remaining members of the family and to give a valid discharge with respect to the execution of the decree, without their concurrence, even though they be minors; and if he fails to exercise such right time does nevertheless run against the minor members. JUDGMENT. —The first point for decision is whether Shambhu Dayal Singh had a right to execute the decree for his own benefit and that of his minor brothers at the time that he made the application of 1908. I find that the objector asserted that Shambhu Dayal Singh was the manager of a joint Hindu family, of which he and his brothers were members, and that the other side, although it had an opportunity of denying this allegation, did not do so. There are other reasons also for finding that he was the manager of the family, and I decide that he was the manager and karta of a joint Hindu family, of which he and his minor brothers were members. He, therefore, had the right to execute the decree in 1908 both for his own benefit and that of his minor brothers. The execution of the decree was not an act which could possibly operate to the disadvantage of other members of the family, and, had he been able to execute the decree and obtain full satisfaction of the decretal amount, it is obvious that it would have been necessary for him to give a discharge to the judgment-debtor. Such a discharge would have been for the benefit of the other members of the family, and in those circumstances, I find that in 1908 Shambhu Dayal Singh had a right to give a valid discharge with respect to the execution of this decree without the concurrence of his minor brothers. My views to this effect are supported by a recent decision of the Bombay High Court in Mahableshwar Krishnapa v. Ramchandra Mangesh Kulkarni (1). Such being the case, time ran against all the decree-holders from a date preceding the date when execution was sought in 1908, and the present application is time-barred.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal. The appellant will pay his own costs and those of the respondent.

Agency Rules r. 10 cl. (2), r. 16—Divisional Assistant, power of—Agent, power of, to hear appeals from orders of Divisional Assistant.

A Divisional Assistant has, on a true construction of rule 10, clause (2), and rule 16 of the Agency Rules, power to decide cases referred to him for disposal by the Agent. [p. 76, col. 2.]

Under the rules the Agent has power to entertain and dispose of appeals preferred in such cases disposed of by the Divisional Assistant. [p. 76, col. 2.] A decree should not be given to the plaintiff in a suit on a promissory note merely on a comparison of handwriting when he himself does not go into the witness-box or give any other evidence. [p. 77, col. 1.]

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein the High Court will be pleased to direct the Agent to the Governor of Madras at Vizagapatam to review his judgment in Appeal Suit No. 3 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the Special Assistant Agent, Koraput Division, in Original Suit No. 15 of 1912.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. Narasimha Rao, and the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was instituted in the Court of the Agent, as the amount claimed was Rs. 10,000 due under a promissory note executed by the predecessor-in-title of the defendant. The suit was referred by the Agent to the Divisional Assistant. It is clear from the language of clause 2 of rule 10 that the Divisional Assistant is to decide the case. Under rule 16, appeals lie from all cases disposed of by the Divisional Assistant to the Agent. There can be no doubt, on the language of rules 10 and 16, that the Divisional Assistant did dispose of the case referred to him. It is somewhat anomalous that the Agent should hear appeals from cases which he alone has power to entertain and which are beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Divisional Assistants. The analogy of the Civil Courts Act in the Presidency is against such a procéduré. But we have to interpret the rules as we find them, however much we may consider that they should have been different. We must overrule Mr. Rangachariar's contention that the Agent had no power to hear the appeal.

Mr. Rangachariar strongly pressed upon us the fact that no orders were passed by the Divisional Assistant on the application of the plaintiff's Pleader to send for additional records and to examine fresh witnesses. A similar application was made to Mr. Duff's predecessor in September and he rejected it on the ground that it was put in too late. The application of the 9th January was presented during the hearing of the case and it must be taken that Mr. Duff saw no reason to differ from his predecessor that the application was not in time. A number of affidavits were filed on either side that during the hearing of the appeal the Agent was asked to remand the case to take the evidence which Mr. Duff should have taken. The affidavits are so contradictory that we do not think it safe to act upon any of them. We hold that there was no irregularity in this respect.

On the merits, the Agent has refused to believe the plaintiff's witnesses. He was largely influenced by the fact that the plaintiff did not go into the witness-box. We see no error in law in his having refused to base his decision solely on the comparison of handwriting. He has come to a definite conclusion on the facts and we see no ground for interfering with his decision.

We dismiss the petition with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r. 15—Order of Privy Council—"Execution," meaning of —Application for restoration of possession—Jurisdiction —Printed judgment of Privy Council, if action can taken on without order in Council.

The word "execution" in Order XLV, rule 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is intended to cover execution of any kind, that is to say, it covers the case of restitution as well as the case of enforcement of a decree for possession or the like passed for the first time in the case on an appeal to His Majesty in Council and a person who desires to obtain execution of any kind, whether by way of rescitution or otherwise, must apply, in the first instance, to the Court indicated by rule 15. JUDGMENT.—This appeal and the connected Appeals Nos. 246, 263, 264 and 359 of 1914 arise out of proceedings taken by Birj Lal, one of the parties to the case of Birj Lal v. Musammat Inda Kunwar (1), in connection with the order of His Majesty in Council in that case. As the report shows, there were two suits of which one (No. 62 of 1907) was brought by Inda Kuar for possession of a 10-biswas share in a village and the other (No. 63 of 1907) was brought by Het Ram and others for possession of the other 10-biswas share in the village. The Court of first instance in Suit No. 62 gave Inda Kuar a decree for a 2-biswas share on certain terms and dismissed her claim for the remaining 8 biswas. Suit No. 63 was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. On appeal this Court passed decrees in favour of the plaintiffs in both suits. Birj Lal, a defendant in both suits, appealed to His Majesty in Council. The two appeals were consolidated in an order by His Majesty in Council dated February 9th, 1914. On March 13th, 1914, Birj Lal presented an application to the Court of first instance in Suit No. 62, praying that he might be restored to possession of the 10-biswas share pending the taking of certain accounts ordered by their Lordships of the Privy Council. suit he presented two applications for re-payment of costs which had been recovered from him by Inda Kuar and a third application, the nature of which need not be specified. In Suit No. 63 Birj Lal applied to the Subordinate Judge to restore him to the possession of the 10 biswas share, inasmuch as the suit of Het Ram and others had been dismissed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Birj Lal presented with his application a printed copy of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council containing their recommendation in the usual form as to the order which should be passed in the case. But he did not file any copy at all of the order in Council. His opponents at once objected that he was not entitled to apply to the Subordinate Judge without first presenting an application to this Court under Order XLV, rule 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure and they professed complete ignorance of the terms of the order of their Lordships of the Privy Council. They pleaded that the printed copy produced by Birj Lal could not be admitted in evidence and, even if admitted, could afford no justification for disturbing their possession. The Subordinate Judge threw out all their objections. Hence these appeals.

Order XLV, rule 15, provides that whoever desires to obtain execution of any order of His Majesty in Council shall apply by petition, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree passed or order made in appeal and sought to be executed, to the Court from which the appeal to His Majesty was preferred, and such Court is required to transmit the order of His Majesty in Council to the Court which passed the first decree appealed from, or to such other Court as His Majesty in Council by such order may direct, and shall (upon the application of either party) give such directions as may be required for the execution of the same. It is contended, first, that Order XLV, rule 15, does not apply at all to the case of a person who is entitled to restitution of the kind described in section 144 of the Code, and, secondly, that even if a person entitled to such restitution may make an application under Order XLV, rule 15, he is not obliged to do so and he may go direct to the Court of first instance under section 144. We are unable to accept either of these contentions. It appears to us that in the absence of Order XLV, rule 15, there would be nothing to show what Court in India is to carry out an order of His Majesty in Council. We think that the word 'execution' in Order XLV, rule 15, is intended to cover execution of any kind, that is to say, that it covers the case of restitution as well as the case of enforcement of a decree for possession or the like passed for the first time in the case on an appeal to His Majesty in Council, and that a person who desires to obtain execution of any kind, whether by way of restitution or otherwise, must apply, in the first instance, to the Court indicated by rule 15. In the present case that was this Court. Further, we are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was not entitled to take any action on the printed copy of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council without proof that an order in Council had followed thereon; for what has to be enforced or executed is not the judgment or recommendation of their Lordships but the order in Council. The result is that Appeals Nos. 135, 263 and 264 are allowed and Birj Lal's applications are dismissed with costs in both Courts. Appeals Nos. 246 and 359 are dismissed with costs.

We have been informed that, since the disposal of the applications referred to above by the Subordinate Judge, an application was made by Inda Kuar to this Court under Order XLV, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, and on her application the order of His Majesty in Council has been transmitted to the Court of the Subordinate Judge in order that it may be executed. We may point out that, as the order in Council has now reached the Court of the Subordinate Judge, it is open to all parties to these suits to apply to the Subordinate Judge for such relief as they may be entitled to without making any further application to this Court, under Order XLV, rule 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4 (2)—Defence open to legal representative as such—Alienation of family property by co-parcener—Suit for possession by alienee—Necessity.

It is open to the legal representative of a deceased defendant to raise a plea which could have been raised by the defendant himself, even though he had omitted to raise it specifically. [p. 79, col. 2.]

The plaintiff-respondent sued for possession of property sold to her by the appellant's father and it was contended that the alienation was for family purposes the money being required to defend a criminal case against the alienor.

Held, (1) that this by itself did not establish legal necessity, the evidence must also have shown that there was no other property by means of which he could have defended himself; [p. 79, col. 2.]

(2) that the Court should see whether at the time the suit was brought, if a partition of the property had been made between the members of the family, the plaintiff properties could have been allotted to the alienor without injustice to the other co-parceners or whether there was other sufficient property to be allotted to him equal in value to the property in suit and which could, therefore, be allotted to the plaintiff. [p. 80, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 347 of 1910, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Poónamallee, in Original Suit No. 349 of 1909.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, with him
Mr. T. R. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 27th August 1914 and having stood over for consideration till the 4th September 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar on behalf of the 7th defendant, the appellant before us, contends that the plaintiff is not entitled to the possession of the properties which she claims under an alienation by the 2nd defendant, the appellant's father. He argues that the plaintiff is only entitled to bring a suit for partition of all the properties which belong to the family of the 2nd defendant, and if the properties in suit are allotted to the 2nd defendant, she might be entitled to get them or she might be entitled to properties equal in value to the plaintiff properties out of the properties which might be allotted to the 2nd defendant. In reply it is contended on behalf of the respondent, the plaintiff, that as the 7th defendant, the appellant before us, was made a party only as the representative of the 2nd defendant, it is not open to the 7th defendant to raise any defence which is not appropriate to his representative character under Order XXII, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, and as the 2nd defendant did not and could not raise this plea, it is not open to the 7th defendant to raise this contention. But we are of opinion that it was open to the 2nd defendant himself to raise the plea in this case that the sale, though binding on him to the extent of his share, is not binding upon his son, the 7th defendant, and it was, therefore, open to the 7th defendant to raise the same plea, though it is true that the 2nd defendant omitted to raise it specifically.

The next contention is that the alienation by the 2nd defendant was for family purposes. It is said that the money from the disputed sale was taken to defend a criminal case against the 2nd defendant. The Judge holds that there is good evidence that the 2nd defendant came into good property when he came of age and he squandered practically the whole within a few years and that this, therefore, negatives the plea of justifying necessity. This finding, in our opinion, is insufficient. The Judge does not find that at the time the 2nd defendant had to defend himself, if he had to do so, in the criminal case brought against him, there was family property out of which he could have defended himself. We must, therefore, ask for a finding on this point.

The Judge also finds that at the time the alienation was made there was other ancestral family property in the hands of the 2nd defendant, and it is quite possible that the plaint property might have been allotted to the share of the 2nd defendant if a partition had been asked for. The question is, whether, at the time the suit was brought, if a partition of the family properties had been made between the members of the family, the plaint properties might have been allotted to the 2nd defendant without injustice to the other co-parceners; or whether there was other sufficient property to be allotted to the 2nd defendant, equal in value to the properties now in suit and which might, therefore, be allotted to the plaintiff. On this question also there is no finding by the District Judge.

We, therefore, direct the District Judge to return findings on the following questions :—

1. Whether there was a criminal case against the 2nd defendant and whether he received the money from the vendee to defend himself in that criminal case;

2. whether it was necessary for him to raise this amount at that time;

3. if it was not necessary for him, whether the alienee acted bona fide and in good faith after making due inquiry;

4. at the time the suit was brought if a partition had been made between the members of the family, whether (a) the plaint properties or (b) properties of the same value might have been allotted to the share of the 2nd defendant.

The findings should be submitted within six weeks from this date, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections. Further evidence may be received.

In compliance with the order of this Court contained in the above judgment, the District Judge, Chingleput, submitted the following

FINDING.—The High Court has called for findings on the following four issues:—

(1) Whether there was a criminal case against the 2nd defendant and whether he received the money from the vendee to defend himself in that criminal case?

(2) Whether it was necessary for him to raise this amount at that time?

(3) If it was not necessary for him, whether the alienee acted bona fide and in good faith after making due inquiry?

(4) At the time the suit was brought, if a partition had been made between the members of the family, whether (a) the plaint properties or (b) properties of the same value might have been allotted to the share of the 2nd defendant?

2. Issues (1) and (2).—The allegation that the 2nd defendant spent a portion of the consideration under Exhibit B was not started by the plaintiff in the first instance. It was made for the first time during the remanded trial before the District Munsif by D. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3, apparently under the impression that such expenditure is illegal or immoral, and that the son of a Hindu father is not liable to pay a debt incurred for such a purpose. This suggestion appears to have been adopted in the course of argument by the plaintiff's Pleader, first in the District Munsif's Court and then on his behalf in the High Court, to show that the expenditure in connection with a criminal case is a perfectly legal purpose and that, therefore, the sale is valid and binding on the 7th defendant.

3. The evidence as to whether there was a criminal case against the 2nd defendant is most flimsy. D. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3 in the District Munsif's Court deposed that the 2nd defendant told them he had received money from the 1st defendant for expenses in connection with a criminal complaint against him and for such other purposes. Both these witnesses gave no details regarding the criminal case. When the case came up for trial on remand in this Court, both sides disclaimed the suggestion that there was a criminal case against the 2nd defendant and the only witness who refers to that point is D. W. No. 3 (already examined as D. W. No. 2 in the Munsif's Court). He says: "There was a case of assault in the name of Kanniah Naidu in the Poonamallee Magistrate's Court. I do not know how much he spent for it. It was a trivial case." Then he says that the 2nd defendant told him that it was thrown out. He adds that the case was such that it did not require the raising of money by selling property. In my opinion this story of a criminal case is a pure myth. I find, therefore, issues Nos. 1 and 2 in the negative.

4. Issue 3.—There is no evidence that the 1st defendant made any inquiries when he purchased the suit property from the 2nd defendant. I, therefore, find issue (3) in the negative.

5. Issue 4.—The 2nd defendant, as the adopted son of one Abbi Naidu, inherited lands in Nemum and Kuttambakkam villages to the extent of about 50 acres. The evidence adduced on behalf of the 7th defendant shows that the 2nd defendant sold from time to time lands in both these villages. For the 7th defendant it is contended that the sales were not for the benefit of the family. The 2nd defendant's father-in-law (D. W. No. 1 in this Court) says that the money was squandered away as the 2nd defendant was leading a life of dissipation, but he admits that he has no personal knowledge in the matter. The Vakil for the 7th defendant urges that, if a partition was effected on the date of suit, the lands sold away by the 2nd defendant prior to it, should be regarded as having fallen to his share; but in the absence of any specific evidence this contention cannot be upheld. The evidence on both sides tends to show that the 2nd defendant was in possession of about 20 acres besides a house worth about Rs. 1,500 on the date of suit. The witnesses do not agree as to the value of the lands, but I think the general effect of their evidence is that excluding the suit property, the lands and the house would be worth about Rs. 9,000 on the date of the suit.

6. It is next alleged on behalf of the 7th defendant that the 2nd defendant incurred debts which were not for the benefit of the family and that they should be debited against him in the partition. There can be no doubt that the 2nd defendant left a large amount of debt on the date of his death. Some of the debts have been partially discharged by his widow with the assistance of her father. Under Exhibit III, all the family properties have been mortgaged to raise a loan of Rs. 4,000 from D. W. No. 2 in this Court. Besides the debts recited in Exhibit III several promissory notes purporting to have been executed by the 2nd defendant have been produced on behalf of the 7th defendant, and it is said that they have been discharged either by cash payment or by execution of fresh promissory notes. It is contended on behalf of the 7th defendant that if the amount of these debts is deducted from Rs. 9,000, the total value of the family properties exclusive of the suit property, a very small margin would be left for division between the father and the son and that, therefore, the suit property could not have been allotted to the 2nd defendant.

7. Exhibit III is as recent as 23rd September 1914, subsequent to the remand, and there is nothing to show that the debts recited in it are not binding on the 7th defendant. The first item of debt in Exhibit III is Rs. 1,464-2-0 to one Kondal Naidu and this is admitted by the plaintiff.

Item (2) is Rs. 800 to Chengama Naidu, the 2nd defendant's father-in-law. There is no document for it.

Item (3) This is long after date of suit and, therefore, cannot be taken into consideration.

Item (4). This is also long after date of suit.

Item (5) was incurred by the 7th defendant's mother, but a portion of it, Rs. 400, which was raised to discharge the debt due to one Kondal Naidu, must be taken into account.

Item (6) There is no document for it.

Item (7) consists of cash received by the 7th defendant. This, of course, is not a debt of the father. The valid items, therefore, are:—

Item (1) Rs. 1,464-2-0 and Rs. 400 out of item (5)—say roughly Rs. 2,000.

8. Regarding the promissory notes produced, only one witness gives evidence. They were produced at a late stage. They are Exhibits VI, VII, VIII and IX. It cannot be said that these have been proved. These debts are said to have been discharged, either by payment or by execution of fresh promissory notes. Some of these debts were time-barred, when fresh notes were executed. As to this, the 7th defendant's Vakil argues that on the date of suit, these promissory notes were not time-barred and, therefore, were enforceable against the 2nd defendant. Even allowing for these, I consider that this total indebtedness of the 2nd defendant was not more than Rs. 2,500 on the date of suit. If this is deducted from Rs. 9,000, the balance is Rs. 6,500. The suit property was worth on the date of suit, according to the evidence, about a thousand rupees. Therefore, if a partition was effected on the date of suit, the suit property might have been allotted to the 2nd defendant. I accordingly find issue (4) in the affirmative.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of 24-Perganas, dated September 30th, 1912.

Babu Brajendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order made in the course of a proceeding under the Provincial Insolvency Act. On the 1st August 1912, the respondent, Khitish Chandra Banerjee, applied to be adjudicated an insolvent. The order was made on the 30th September 1912. Meanwhile on the 2nd September 1912, the District Judge had appointed an interim Receiver under section 13, clause (2). Notice was issued at the same time to the Examiner of the Eastern Bengal State Railway to pay into Court what was due from the Railway authorities to the insolvent. Before this intimation reached the Railway authorities, the sum in their hands, which had been attached in execution of a decree obtained by the appellant against the applicant in insolvency, was paid into the Court of the Munsif of Goalundo. The money has subsequently been transferred by the Goalundo Court to the Court of the District Judge of the 24-Perganas, and is now in the hands of the Receiver appointed after the adjudication order. The question in controversy is, whether the appellant, as a creditor who had attached this sum before the estate of the insolvent vested in the Receiver appointed after the adjudication order, is entitled to apply it exclusively in satisfaction of his claim. The answer must depend upon the effect of the order for the appointment of an interim Receiver.

Section 13, clause (2), of the Provincial Insolvency Act provides that the Court at the time when the insolvency petition is admitted or at any subsequent time before adjudication may, of its own motion or on the application of any creditor, make an order for the appointment of an interim Receiver of the property of the debtor or any part thereof. The object of the appointment is clear from the proviso to the section, in which it is stated that an order for the appointment of an interim Receiver shall not be made unless the Court is satisfied that the debtor, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors or to avoid any process of the Court, has absconded or has departed from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court or has failed to disclose or has concealed, destroyed, transferred, or removed from such limits any documents likely to be of any use to his creditors. It is plain that an order for the appointment of an interim Receiver of the property of the debtor is made for the protection of the estate of the debtor for the benefit of the entire body of creditors. At the stage when the ad interim Receiver is appointed, no question arises as to the distribution of the property of the debtor amongst the creditors or as to preference amongst them. This view is not opposed to the decision in Ex parte Fox, In re Smith (1). It was there held, with reference to the terms of section 40 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, (46 and 47 Vict. C. 52) that the period of four months before the receiving order, for which the wages or salary of any clerk or servant in respect of services rendered to the bankrupt is entitled to priority over all other debts, includes not merely the four months before the date of the receiving order but also the four months before the date of the order of appointment of an interim Receiver where such appointment has been made. It is plain from an examination of the judgment of Cave, J., that such construction was adopted with a view to afford protection to clerks and servants of the insolvent whom it was obviously the intention of the Bankruptcy Act to save. In our opinion, the money under attachment in execution of the decree obtained by the appellant against the applicant in insolvency is still available for the satisfaction of his claim. We may add that the appellant is also entitled to the benefit of clause (1) of section 34 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which restricts the operation of section 16, clause (6), and is in the following terms: "Where execution of a decree has issued against the property of a debtor, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Receiver except in respect of assets realised in the course of execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the order of adjudication." In the present case, the sum in question had been realised before the date of the order of adjudication. It had in fact been transferred by the Railway authorities to the Goalundo Court where the execution proceedings initiated by the appellant were pending at the time. From this point of view, the appellant is exclusively entitled to the benefit of this money.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, and the order of the District Judge made on the 30th September 1912 set aside in so far as it affects the appellant. The appellant will be entitled to take this money in satisfaction of his decree. The money will be returned to the Goalundo Court in order that it may be paid out to the appellant and satisfaction entered on his decree.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals, Nos. 2548 of 1913 and 3830 of 1913, may be heard together. The first appeal refers to a purchase of a part of a non-transferable holding and the second to a purchase of the whole of such holding. The landlord brought a suit for rent against the recorded tenants, the purchasers not having been recognised by him. In that suit he brought the property to sale, purchased it and took possession. Thereupon the purchasers of the part and of the whole of the holdings respectively brought two suits to recover possession, and the Court below held that the purchasers of a non-transferable holding were not entitled to maintain these suits to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud.

In the first case the learned Vakil for the appellant relied upon the Full Bench decision of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhuri (1), which held that "the transferee of a holding not transferable by custom can, by a suit, recover possession from the landlord who had forcibly dispossessed him." That may be so; but that is not the case before us. If the tenant is upon the land, then his possession protects the party to whom he has transferred a portion of his interest. That is not the case here. The tenant is no longer on the land after the holding has been sold, and what was the property of the original tenant is now the property of the landlord. Now nothing in the decision of the Full Bench shows that the Court below was not correct in holding that the purchasers of a non-transferable holding can, after the holding has been sold and the original tenant is no longer on the land, be a party to a suit for recovery of possession from the landlord. So I hold that this appeal fails.

As regards the second appeal, an argument was based on the ground of estoppel. It is said that after sale, the appellant made a deposit which was withdrawn by the landlord, and he cannot now say that the transferee was not recognised by him. There may be circumstances under which such estoppel may arise. Now, what we have to do is to look at the facts, and we find, as established by the first Court's judgment, that when the appellant sought to make the deposit, the landlord objected to its being made on the ground that the appellant had no locus standi to make the deposit. That objection was overruled by the Court below and the landlord withdrew the money inasmuch as the Court allowed the deposit. To my mind it appears that this does not amount to an estoppel, since the landlord objected and acted in accordance with the order of the Court. There was no duty on the landlord to proceed by way of an appeal to have it established that the transferee has no right to make the deposit.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for Rs. 5,634 on account of principal and interest upon a book account (ba-rue buhi khata are the words at head of plaint). Defendant, relying on Pala Mal v. Tulla Ram (1), pleaded (or rather argued at the eleventh hour, when the case was, except as regards final arguments, finished) that the suit did not lie; and the lower Court, in a judgment marred by inconsistent findings*, in the end found in favour of defendant's contention and dismissed the suit with costs.

Plaintiff in appeal here has satisfied us that the aforesaid contention is unsound; that the ruling quoted has no real bearing on the case; and that the decision of the lower Court on the point must be set aside. This done, we find ourselves in a position to dispose of the case as a whole, and we find we must give plaintiff a decree with costs for his full claim.

MAKHAN LAL V. GANESHI LAL.

The defendant's point is that the suit is based on a mere balance and so does not lie—Pala Mal v. Tulla Ram (1). We have no quarrel with that ruling; but there is much force in plaintiffs' Counsel's contentions:—

(a) that the specific objection to the form of the suit was taken so late by defendant that the lower Court should have passed it by;

(b) that the suit, as a matter of fact, was not intended to be based on the balance of 29th November 1904, but on the whole account;

(c) that, if it be taken in law that the suit was based on the balance, then a correct interpretation of the entry shows that it imports a promise to pay and is not a mere acknowledgment;

(d) that in any case, if all these contentions are overruled, in view of the lateness of the raising of defendant's objection plaintiff should have been allowed to amend his plaint and should even now be allowed to do so.

We are inclined to think that each and every one of these contentions might, if the rest were ignored, be established from the record, but it is enough to say that the third (c) seems to us fully made out on the authorities. The balance is signed by the defendant, and it states as payable a rate of interest, and that rate different (8 annas instead of 12 annas) from that usually charged in the previous accounts. These circumstances show at once how dissimilar this case is from Pala Mal v. Tulla Ram (1),* where no rate of interest was mentioned in the document in suit. No further discussion from this point of view is required: we hold that this document was an "agreement" and so a new contract, and the defendant's contention, successful in the lower Court, falls to the ground.

There should have been an eight-anna stamp on the entry. This will be now levied from plaintiff with a penalty of Rs. 5.

The respondent's way of meeting the above requires only a very few words. He points out that on 20th May 1911 (page 19, paper-book) plaintiff said no penalty should be taken as "no agreement as to payment is entered." Plaintiff did say this; but we think he is no more bound by this than is defendant by his Pleader's statement immediately preceding (page 18) that, inasmuch as the balances contain entries about interest, they cannot be admitted in evidence without payment of penalty. Thus the dicta in Satyabhama Dassee v. Krishna Chander Chatterjee (2) and in many other rulings, confining parties to their pleadings, here cut both ways.

Then it is argued that the suit is time-barred by Article 85, Limitation Act, Schedule I; but in our opinion Article 64, as altered in the Punjab Loans Limitation Act, really applies, and the term is six years and not three.

Then it is said that defendant could prove that some of the items in the account are wrong: as to this we need only refer to the absence in his pleas of particulars of this sort and to Daya Ram v. Chundar Bhan (3).

It has not been pressed in argument before us that any of the transactions were badni in their nature. Probably this is because Ganeshi Lal, witness for defendant and a near relation of his by marriage, had to admit (page 23, line 5) that badni transactions were "never made by the plaintiffs' firm," such transactions not being "made at their shop."

The appeal is accepted. Plaintiffs are given a week to make good stamp and penalty as aforesaid, after which decree will be drawn up in their favour for Rs. 5,634 and costs in both Courts.

Appeal accepted.

Revision, application for, maintainability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIV, r. 1—Pauper, leave to appeal as, refusal of, when open to revision.

An order of a lower Appellate Court rejecting, under Order XLIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, an application for leave to appeal as a pauper, is not open to revision by the High Court, although the former Court has formed an erroneous opinion regarding the merits of the judgment of the first Court, unless it is shown to have exercised its jurisdiction with some illegality or irregularity.

Application against the order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 19th August 1914.

Syed Ali Muhammad, for the Applicant.

Babu Putlu Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application for revision must be dismissed. The applicant is one Mir Ahsan Ali, who obtained leave to sue in forma pauperis. His suit was dismissed by the first Court. He made an application to the District Judge for permission to appeal in forma pauperis and the Judge taking action under the provisions of Order XLIV, rule 1, of the Code held, after perusing the petition and the judgment of the first Court, that there was no ground on which it could be held that the decree of the Court below was contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law or was otherwise erroneous or unjust. I fail to see how it can be contended that this order of the District Judge is open to revision. It is not made to appear that the Judge acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction with any illegality or irregularity. All that the Code required him to do was to peruse the judgment of the first Court and the application which was put in by the applicant. It is nothing to the point to say that the Judge has formed an erroneous opinion regarding the merits of the judgment of the first Court. That has got nothing to do with the case so far as this matter of revision is concerned. The Judge had jurisdiction to decide either rightly or wrongly and it may be that his opinion is wrong, but with that I have nothing to do. I am satisfied that no application for revision can be maintained. The application is dismissed with costs.

Ejectment, contesting notice of—Statutory period, fresh, commencement of, plea as to—Lease, new, at enhanced rent—Enhancement, illegal—Tenant's action, effect of—Estoppel.

A tenant is estopped from pleading, in ejectment proceedings against him, commencement of a fresh statutory period from the date when a new lease was granted to him, if he does not pay the enhanced amount of rent entered therein, although the enhancement was illegal. [p. 87, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 1st September 1914, reversing the order of the Assistant Collector, Lucknow.

FACTS.—The plaintiff-tenant held certain plots at an annual rent of Rs. 49. After the expiration of his statutory period a fresh lease for the same holding was granted to him by the defendant-landlord at an annual rent of Rs. 98. But the tenant did not pay more than Rs. 49 as the annual rent even after the execution of the fresh lease. The landlord thereupon served the tenant with a notice of ejectment, which the latter contested on the ground that he was holding the land on a fresh lease although he did not pay the enhanced amount of rent as entered in the lease, inasmuch as the enhancement was illegal and excessive and was agreed upon to be only to the extent of 2 annas a rupee on the old rent, the entry in the lease having been fraudulently made in his ignorance. The Court of first instance cancelled the notice, considering the lease as null and void. The Commissioner on appeal reversed this order, saying that the new lease created a "fresh admission" and that the most which the landlord could do was to sue the tenant for arrears of rent.

Babu Lachhman Prasad Varma, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—(February 4th, 1915).—I am unable to agree with the Commissioner in this case. Respondent repudiated the terms of the lease, and not only did not pay the rent entered in it, but did not even pay at the enhanced rate which he himself admits having agreed to. Having resiled from the lease, I think he is now estopped from pleading that he is holding under an unexpired lease. Further, the enhancement shown in the lease having been found, and being palpably, illegal the whole lease is null and void. In my opinion respondent is clearly liable to be ejected.

I would, therefore, set aside the Commissioner's order and restore the order of the Court of first instance.

I would let parties bear their own costs in all Courts.

HOLMS, S. M.—I agree that in the circumstances it is not proved that any change has been made by the landholder in the rent of the holding, as the tenant did not abide by the terms of the lease. But I feel some doubt as to my colleague's opinion that the lease is null and void on account of the enhancement of rent shown in it being illegal, though it might be voidable.

I concur, however, in the order proposed.

Karim Bakhsh v. Subhan Ali, 6 P. R. 1891, referred to.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Multan, dated the 9th October 1912.

Mr. Rustomji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Fazal Elahi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The history of this long-standing dispute is as follows:—

In or about 1875 (the precise date is not material and cannot be given by Counsel), the plaintiffs' mother mortgaged 394 kanals, by way of lekha mukhi, to the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 who subsequently sub-mortgaged to defendants Nos. 6 to 10. In June 1907 the plaintiffs instituted the present suit as one for redemption of the land at Rs. 110, or whatever sum might be found due by the Court. The original mortgage was an oral transaction and Rs. 562 is said to have been advanced by the mortgagees, and from the written statement of defence filed by the defendants this may be taken to be correct. The conditions of a lekha mukhi mortgage are explained in paragraph 151 of Rattigan's Customary Law.

No proper account of produce receipts and interest charged has been kept up by the mortgagees, and the parties on the 18th November 1907 referred the whole question to arbitration. The reference provided that each side should appoint one arbitrator and that in case of disagreement the Court should appoint an umpire whose decision would be accepted.

On the 3rd February 1908 the defendants' umpire filed his award that redemption should be allowed at Rs. 3,855, unless the suit should be held by the Court to be time-barred. On the 20th February 1908 the plaintiffs' arbitrator filed his award to the effect that the account worked up to a large surplus in the hands of the defendants, and that the plaintiffs should now be given possession of the land without payment of any sort. The Court then appointed Budh Singh, Sadr Kanungo, to act as umpire, and on the 8th May 1908 he filed his award that the defendants were entitled to Rs. 2,364-11-0, saying nothing about the costs of suit. On the 23rd July 1908 the District Judge set aside the umpire's award on the ground of technical misconduct, and on the 14th November 1908 he decreed in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of the land without payment, leaving the parties to pay their own costs.

On the 12th April 1910 the Divisional Judge dismissed an appeal by the defendants, holding that he had no jurisdiction to consider the correctness or otherwise of the intermediate order, dated the 23rd July 1908, which annulled the arbitration proceedings. The dispute then came before the Chief Court as Civil Appeal No. 853 of 1910* which was dealt with as an application for revision.

By its order of 21st May 1912, the Chief Court held definitely that the suit was not time-barred, and also expressed an opinion that the lower Courts were entitled to their conclusion that the entire mortgage-debt had been paid off with interest from the produce of the land. The Court, however, went on to say that the Divisional Judge had wrongly declined to consider the order of the 23rd July 1908, and the case was therefore, remanded on that ground, saying that no other point in the case was to be re-opened. These are the terms of the judgment, but we infer that the Court left open the question whether the umpire was right in requiring Rs. 2,364-11-0 to be paid by the plaintiffs on redemption. The Divisional Judge (Mr. Parker) then decided on the 9th October 1912 that the District Judge had rightly imputed a technical misconduct to the umpire, and had rightly annulled the arbitration. He accordingly declined to interfere and again dismissed the defendants' appeal to his Court. The case is now again before the Chief Court as a second appeal from this decree of the 9th October 1912.

There are some curious misapprehensions in Mr. Parker's judgment. In the first place, he has misquoted the reference to arbitration as meaning that the umpire was bound to agree with one or other of the arbitrators and that the decision would be according to the majority. He failed to notice that the words "ba kasrat rai" were cut out from the agreement on which the reference was made, and it was obviously impossible to have the case satisfactorily decided on the supposition that the umpire was obliged to agree with one or other of the arbitrators without giving his own opinion on the merits.

We must hold that as the arbitrators disagreed, the umpire was entitled to settle the matter in any way he thought proper. The learned Judge has gone on to misapply the ruling [Karim Bakhsh v. Subhan Ali (1)] upon which he has relied in support of his view that the umpire was wrong in not conferring with the arbitrators. The effect of the ruling quoted is the precise opposite, and the umpire was here under no obligation to do more than arrive at what he considered the just decision, without conferring with arbitrators.

Finally, the Judge is clearly wrong in holding that the umpire fell into grave (1) 6 P. R. 189.

KEDAR V. DEO NARAIN.

error in taking Rs. 2,200 as the principal mortgage-debt instead of Rs. 562. The umpire never said anything of the kind. He did not find that the original mortgage was for Rs. 2,200, but that this was the sum which the parties themselves had accepted as representing the outstanding lien on the land in the Settlement proceedings of 1898. In this we think that he was clearly right, and both the lower Courts appear to us to have misunderstood the grounds upon which his award was given.

The umpire's decision is based on the entry of Rs. 2,200 as the outstanding lien in the statement of mortgages with possession prepared at the Settlement of 1898. The statement in question is that prescribed as statement H under No. 86 of the rules framed under section 46 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887. Section 46 occurs in the chapter dealing with Records of Rights, and we take this list of mortgages to be an essential part of the record prepared at a new Settlement. There is a presumption of correctness attaching to any entries in the statement, and it is not to be supposed that the entry of Rs. 2,200 was made without proper care and without the full knowledge of the parties concerned. We think that the Sadr Kanungo was perfectly right in taking this entry as the basis for his decision, and we are unable to agree with the lower Courts that he committed any sort of misconduct, either technical or other.

Looking at the matter in a somewhat different way, we do not consider that the plaintiffs have any real grievance if they are made to pay a substantial sum to the mortgagees in possession, after having looked on for some forty years while the land has been gradually brought under cultivation by the mortgagees. Practically all the land, except some forty or fifty kanals, is now cultivated and in the jamabandi of 1905-06 the revenue assessment is put at the substantial sum of Rs. 54. It appears to us impossible to say that the mortgagees must have recovered their original outlay by the profits of cultivation. In a district like Multan the expense of bringing land under cultivation is considerable, and if the original owners make a belated demand on a lekha mukhi mortgagee, they are bound to pay reasonable compensation for improvements. We can find nothing improper in the Sadr Kanungo's assumption that the lien was taken at Rs. 2,200 in 1898, and we see nothing improper in his final conclusion that the plaintiffs ought to pay Rs. 2,364-11-0 before they can redeem. There was no misconduct on the umpire's part and there is no justification for setting aside his award.

The result is that this appeal by the defendants must be accepted. The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and in place thereof we declare the plaintiffs entitled to possession of the land in dispute on payment to the defendants of Rs. 2,364-11-0 by way of redemption in accordance with the umpire's award. Under Order XXXIV, rule 7 (c), of the Civil Procedure Code, we direct that the plaintiffs shall pay into Court this sum within six months from the date of our decree. If the plaintiffs pay the amount within the period specified or within such further period as the Court may allow under the proviso to rule 8, they will be entitled to possession of the land in suit, and if they fail to make such payment, they will be debarred from all further right to redeem.

As the umpire's award is silent on the point we direct that the parties shall pay their own costs throughout, which appears to us the fairest order to pass under all the circumstances of the case.

Appeal accepted.

NUR AHMAD v. GHULAM HUSAIN.

Held, that the suit was not barred by section 32 of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 90, col. 2.]

Letters Patents Appeal against the decision of Justice Sir George Knox in Second Appeal No. 1591 of 1913, dated 17th of November 1914.

FACTS.—A certain fixed-rate holding consisted of 4 biswas. Out of this, the plaintiffs purchased a 1-biswa share. The defendants owned the remaining 3 biswas. The plaintiffs brought the present suit for possession of the share purchased by them, alleging that the defendants were in possession of the whole holding. The Court of first instance, the lower Appellate Court and a single Judge of the High Court dismissed the suit on the ground that section 32 of Act II of 1901 barred the suit.

Mr. Birj Nath Vyas, for the Appellants:—The present suit has been wrongly dismissed by all the Courts. It is not a suit for the division of a holding. It does not in any way injuriously affect the landlord. The provisions of section 32 of Act II of 1901 do not apply to a case like the present. The ruling relied on, Achhey Lal v. Janki Prasad (1), had no application to the facts of the present case. The ruling has been overruled by the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Najibullah v. Gulsher Khan (2).

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents:—The present suit is in effect an attempt to effect a division of the holding. Section 32 clearly shows that no suit is maintainable in any Civil or Revenue Court which aims at the division of a holding.

Mr. B. N. Vyas was not heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed 1 biswa, which was alleged to be part of 4 biswas which constituted a fixed-rate holding. The lower Courts and this Court have dismissed the suit as being barred by section 32 of the Tenancy Act and as having been concluded by the authority of the case of Achhey Lal v. Janki Prasad (1). Section 32 of the Agra Tenancy Act provides that "No division of a holding or distribution of the rent payable in respect thereof, made by the co-sharers therein, shall be binding on the landholder, unless it is made with his consent." Clause 2 provides that "No suit or other proceeding for the division of a holding or distribution of the rent thereof shall be entertained in any Civil or Revenue Court." It is quite clear that all that section 32 provides against is the splitting up of a holding or the distribution of the rent so as to bind the land-holders. Clause 2 does no more than enact that a suit brought for such a purpose shall not be entertained by a Civil or Revenue Court. In the present case the plaintiff alleges that he has become the owner entitled to possession of a portion of a fixed-rate tenancy and that the defendant is a trespasser. He does not ask for the division of the holding nor for the distribution of the rent. He does not seek to bind the landholder in any way by the suit he brings. It seems to us, therefore, that section 32 does not bar the present suit. We may mention that the case relied upon by the lower Appellate Court and the learned Judge of this Court has been overruled by the Full Bench decision in Najibullah v. Gulsher Khan (2). As the suit was decided on a preliminary point in the lower Courts the case must be remanded. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of this Court and also of both the Courts below, and remand the case to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the file and proceed to hear and determine the same according to law. Costs here and hitherto will be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

ancestral property in the presence of a first cousin even without necessity. [p. 92, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 2nd December 1912.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bahadur Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—By a registered deed, dated the 26th January 1912, one Ghulam Muhammad, a childless Awan, proprietor of Mauza Marir Hasan, Tahsil Rawalpindi, sold a ruined hut (khola) situate in the abadi of the village to Nur Ahmad, a Chauhan of the same village, for Rs 200. The plaintiff, Ghulam Husain, first cousin of Ghulam Muhammad, brought the present suit for a declaration that the sale of the khola in question by Ghulam Muhammad shall not affect his reversionary rights after Ghulam Muhammad's death. The first Court held that the khola in suit was the ancestral property of the vendor and the present plaintiff, that the vendor had not under custom an unrestricted power of alienation in respect of ancestral property, and that the sale in dispute had not been made for legal necessity. Upon these findings the Court gave the plaintiff the declaratory decree prayed for. On appeal the Divisional Judge agreed with the first Court on all the points just referred to and dismissed the appeal.

In this second appeal the concurrent finding of the lower Courts, that the property in suit was ancestral, must be accepted as final, and we must also take it as finally decided between the parties that the sale was not made for legal necessity. The only question for decision in this appeal, therefore, is whether the sale was justified by custom or not.

Upon this point the first Court had laid the onus on the plaintiff, the issue drawn by the Court being in these terms:—"Had not defendant No. 1 (Ghulam Muhammad) full power under custom to make the alienation?" On this issue the conclusion came to by the Court was that the plaintiff had discharged the onus. The learned Divisional Judge, on the other hand, was of opinion that in the present case the onus would be on the vendee to prove the validity of the sale, and he held that the vendee had failed to prove that an Awan in the Rawalpindi District was competent to sell his ancestral property without necessity to a person belonging to another tribe.

We have considered the evidence produced by the parties in this case and have also referred to the rulings cited to us on both sides. The oral evidence is not of much value. The plaintiff produced four witnesses, including the vendee, whose evidence does not throw much light on the question of custom; on the other hand, the defendant-vendee produced six witnesses, one of whom, Muhammad Wali, an Awan of village Marir Hasan, gives several instances of alienations of ancestral land having been made by childless Awan proprietors in his village without objection by their collaterals. These instances have not, however, been properly verified and are of little value for the purposes of the present suit. Some of the vendee's witnesses, no doubt, say that an Awan proprietor can sell his property for necessity, but their statements on this point are not free from ambiguity, and we are not prepared to draw from them the conclusion, which has been drawn by the first Court, that according to those witnesses an Awan owner cannot sell ancestral property, except for legal necessity.

One judicial precedent has been cited by each party in this case. The plaintiff has relied on the case of Nur Muhammad v. Said Alam, decided by the Divisional Judge of Rawalpindi on the 20th August 1903; while the defendant has relied on the case of Amir Hussain v. Nadar, decided by the Divisional Judge of Rawalpindi on the 21st June 1905. The case of Nur Muhammad v. Said Alam related to Mauza Ranjili in Tahsil Pindigheb, and what was held in that case was that an Awan proprietor with sons had no power by custom to sell ancestral property to the prejudice of his sons.

The case of Amir Hussain v. Nadar, cited by the defendant-vendee, related to the village of Marir Hasan, in which the property in suit is situate, and it was held by the Divisional Judge (Mr. H. Scott-Smith) in that case that the nephew of a childless Awan proprietor had no power by custom to contest an alienation of ancestral land made by the latter. This case, relating as it does to village Marir Hasan, obviously is an important piece of evidence in favour of the defendant-vendee.

KUNDAN LAL v. JAGAN NATH.

Bhakra (1); Nura v. Tora (2); Khudayar v. Fatteh (3); Amir Ali v. Baggo (4); Khuda Bakhsh v. Waham Ali (5); Nur Khan v. Sarfaraz (6); Khuda Bakhsh v. Ahmad Khan (7); Lal Khan v. Nura (8). It is unnecessary to discuss these rulings in detail, as it is not disputed that their net result is that the Awans of Shahpur Rawalpindi, Attock and Mianwali possess larger powers of alienation in respect of ancestral property than most of the other agricultural tribes residing in those districts. In Amir Ali v. Baggo (4), upon a full review of the published decisions of this Court relating to Awans, it was held by Johnstone, J., (1) that any interference with the natural rights of sons is jealously resented, and (2) that when there are no sons much freedom is allowed to male proprietors.

In Lal Khan v. Nura (8), it was pointed out that custom recognises a clear distinction between cases where an alienation is by a proprietor who has sons and cases where it is by a sonless proprietor, and that even those tribes who concede very extensive rights to male proprietors differentiate between the powers of a proprietor who has, and a proprietor who has not, sons living at the time of alienation.

In the present case the vendor is a childless Awan proprietor, and in a judicial decision relating to this very village, Marir Hasan, it was held by the Divisional Judge of Rawalpindi in 1905 that a childless Awan landowner had power by custom to alienate his ancestral property to the prejudice of his nephew. No instance to the contrary relating to Tahsil Rawalpindi has been cited before us, and assuming, without deciding, that the onus in this case lay on the vendee to prove the validity of the sale in his favour, we are of opinion that he has discharged this onus.

For the foregoing reasons, we accept the appeal, and setting aside the decree of the Divisional Judge, dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 60, 61—Appropriation—No appropriation of payment either by debtor or creditor—Appropriation to earliest debt.

Where there is no appropriation of payment either by debtor or creditor, the payment must be applied to the earliest debt due by the defendant to the plaintiff. [p. 94, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge of Moradabad, dated 15th April 1914.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought a suit on foot of a simple money-bond. The defendant pleaded payment. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The lower Appellate Court found that the defendant had made a payment by cheque, that the plaintiff had not made any appropriation of the payment which was the bond sued upon, and accordingly the payment should be credited to the earliest debt. It accordingly dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant:—The lower Appellate Court has found that neither party made any appropriation. Consequently it was open to the plaintiff to make his election at any time before suit. The very fact that a suit was brought on the bond shows that the plaintiff did not elect to appropriate the money towards the debt in suit. There is no limit of time prescribed by the Contract Act within which the plaintiff must make his election to appropriate. This view is in accordance with English Law: Seymour v. Pickett (1). Under the Indian Evidence Act, it is for the defendant to prove that he made any payment towards a certain debt.

[RICHARDS, C. J.—The Contract Act seems to have departed from the English rule, otherwise there would be no object in enacting section 61.]

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent:—At the time the Contract Act was framed there was a conflict of authority in the English decisions. The Indian Law adopted one view by enacting section 61. If no time is fixed for the creditor to make his election, section 61 would become meaningless. The creditor must exercise his option within a reasonable time. Clayton's case (2); In re Sherry, London & County Banking Co. v. Terry (3).

Mr. Gokul Prasad, in reply:—Clayton's case (2) has not decided the period of time up to which the appropriation is to be made. The Contract Act has incorporated the meaning of Clayton's case (2) as it was then understood. He also relied on Chitty on Contracts.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit upon foot of a simple money-bond, dated the 10th of September 1910. The defendant pleaded payment. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim. The lower Appellate Court found that the defendant had made a payment by a cheque, that the plaintiff had not made any appropriation of the payment and that accordingly the payment should be credited to the earliest debt then due by the defendant to the plaintiff, which was the bond sued upon. The lower Court says that the way the accounts were kept between the plaintiff and the defendant was that on the one side all advances made by the plaintiff to the defendant were entered and on the other side all the payments that were made to the plaintiff by the defendant. He seems to have been prepared to hold that from the way the account was kept, the plaintiff must be deemed to have from time to time appropriated the payments to the earliest debts. The case, however, was really decided on the assumption that there had been no appropriation by either party and it is on this basis that the case has been argued before us.

Section 60 of the Contract Act is as follows: "Where the debtor has omitted to intimate, and there are no other circumstances indicating, to which debt the payment is to be applied, the creditor may apply it at his discretion to any lawful debt actually due and payable to him from the debtor, whether its recovery is or is not barred by the law in force or the time being as to the limitation of suits".

Section 61: "Where neither party makes any appropriation, the payment shall be applied in discharge of the debts in order of time, whether they are or are not barred by the law in force for the time being as to the limitation of suits. If the debts are of equal standing, the payment shall be applied in discharge of each proportionately."

The learned Additional Judge considered that if there had been no appropriation by either the debtor or the creditor, the payment must be applied to the earliest debt which was the bond in suit.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that a creditor can make his election as to the appropriation of the payments "up to the last moment", and he cites the case of Seymour v. Pickett (1) as showing that the appropriation can even be made when the plaintiff is being examined at the trial of the case. On the other hand the respondents contend that under the provisions of section 61 of the Indian Contract Act where there is no appropriation made by the debtor when paying the money or the creditor when receiving it, the law itself appropriates the payment in the manner provided by section 61. The learned Vakil refers to Clayton's case (2). At page 605 of the report the Master of the Rolls says: "This state of the case has given rise to much discussion, as to the rules by which the application of indefinite payments is to be governed. Those rules we probably borrowed, in the first instance, from the civil law. The leading rule, with regard to the option given, in the first place to the debtor, and to the creditor in the second, we have taken literally from thence. But, according to that law, the election was to be made at the time of payment, as well in the case of the creditor as in that of the debtor, 'in re presenti, hoc est statim atque solutum est:—ceterum, postea non permittitur.' If neither applied the payment, the law made the appropriation according to certain rules of presumption, depending on the nature of the debts, or the priority in which they were incurred. And, as it was the actual intention of the debtor that would, in the first instance, have governed; so it was his presumable intention that was first resorted to as the rule by which the application was to be determined. In the absence, therefore, of any express declaration by either, the inquiry was, what application would be most beneficial to the debtor. The payment was, consequently, applied to the most burthensome debt, to one that carried interest, rather than to that which carried none,—to one secured by a penalty, rather than to that which rested on a simple stipulation;—and, if the debts were equal, then to that which had been first contracted.”

Clayton's case (2) was one in which there was a current account, and it was held that the payments must be appropriated to the debts earliest in date. Clayton's case (2) was discussed in Seymour v. Pickett (1) and also in the case of Cory Brothers & Co. v. The Owners of the Turkish Steamship "Mecca" (4). At page 293 of the report of the last mentioned case Lord Macnaghten says: “In 1816 when Clayton's case (2) was decided, there seems to have been authority for saying that the creditor was bound to make his election at once according to the rule of the civil law, or at any rate, within a reasonable time, whatever that expression in such a connection may be taken to mean.” It seems to us that what the Indian Legislature did by sections 59—61 of the Indian Contract Act was to adopt the rule of civil law with certain modifications. Unless the meaning of section 60 is that the debtor is to make his appropriation (if any) at the time of paying and the creditor to make his appropriation (if any) at the time of receiving the money, it is difficult to conceive what is the meaning of section 61 or how it could be applied. We think that the view taken by the Court below was correct. If by reason of the manner in which the plaintiff kept the account, he is to be deemed to have appropriated the payment to the debt of earliest date, there is an end to the case. If, on the other hand, there was no appropriation by either debtor or creditor, the payment must be applied to the earliest debt due (4) (1897) App. Cas. 286; 66 L. J. P. C. 86; 76 L. T. 579; 45 W. R. 667.

by the defendant to the plaintiff. This was the bond in suit. We dismiss the appeal with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Act (IX of 1908), s. 7.*

Where rent accrued due to the plaintiff during his minority and he filed a suit for its recovery within three years from attaining majority claiming exemption from the bar of limitation under section 7 of the Limitation Act:

Held, (Seshagiri Aiyar, J., dissenting) that the right to sue had become vested in the plaintiff at the time of the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act and was not, therefore, barred having been kept alive under section 7 of the Limitation Act. [p. 96, col. 2; p. 97, col. 1; p. 100, col. 1.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—Where an Act contains provisions for limitation of suits which take away altogether a vested right of suit without providing any equivalent remedy, the provisions must be considered to have been enacted subject to the implied exception that they were not to extend to such vested rights of suit which were to continue subject to the rules of limitation in force at the passing of the Act. Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—It is a well-known rule of construction that retrospective operation ought not to be given to a Statute so as to take away vested rights, unless that effect cannot be avoided without doing violence to the language of the enactment, and that except in special cases the new law ought to be construed so as to interfere as little as possible with vested rights. A Statute of Limitation ceases to be a Statute of mere procedure where it shortens the period and is sought to be used to defeat causes of action which had accrued earlier than the length of time proscribed in the new law. [p. 99, col. 1.]

Though laws affecting limitation might abridge or enlarge periods of limitation in cases of suits or causes of action which were alive at the date when the new enactment came into force and which under the old law would expire afterwards, the change cannot, unless there is a clearly expressed intention to the contrary, either by apt words in the enactment or otherwise, be retrospective so as to destroy rights of suit which were alive on the date. [p. 100, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—A litigant cannot appropriate and reprobate. He cannot claim the advantage which a new law gives without submitting to the restrictions which it imposes. [p. 97, cols. 1 & 2.]

No one has a vested right in any rule of procedure. When a Statute provides for a new procedure for the enforcement of rights, it is always retrospective. [p. 98, col. 1.]

Appeals under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree of this Court, in Second Appeals Nos. 323 and 433 of 1912, reported as 21 Ind. Cas. 595, preferred against the decrees of the District Court of Godaveri, in Appeal Suits Nos. 111 and 79 of 1910, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Deputy Collector of Godaveri, in Summary Suits Nos. 128 and 118 of 1910, respectively.

FACTS.—The zamindar of Pittapur, who attained majority in 1906, instituted suits under section 77 of the Estates Land Act in a Revenue Court for recovery of arrears of rent for Fasli 1315 (1895) within three years after attaining age, that is, in 1909. The Deputy Collector and the District Judge of Godaveri on appeal held that the suits were barred under sections 210 and 211 of the Estates Land Act, as the suits were not brought within three years from the date when the arrears became due and as the provisions of the Limitation Act regarding the minority of the plaintiff did not apply to the Estates Land Act.

In second appeal, which came on for hearing before Sir Sankaran Nair and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., the former held that the suits were rightly held to be barred as the Estates Land Act had a retrospective operation, while the latter held that the section had no retrospective effect as the three years' period provided by the Estates Land Act expired even before the Act came into force. In the result the second appeals were dismissed.

Thereupon the plaintiff preferred these Letters Patent Appeals.

Mr. P. Somayya for Mr. P. Narayanamurthy, for the Appellant:—The question is whether section 7 of the Limitation Act applies to suits instituted under the Estates Land Act.

In Manjuri Bibi v. Akkel Mahmud (1) a similar question arose for consideration. The two years' period expired before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force.

The question is whether the new Act will become applicable only when the two years' period has not expired or the new Act gives a further time. Budhu Koer v. Hafiz Husain (2), Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra (3), Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (4).

The ratio decidendi of all the cases is that the new Act will not apply where its effect will be to confiscate the old right or to extinguish it.

Mr. B. Narasimha Rao and Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondents:—Under section 77 of the Estates Land Act the plaintiff ceased to be a minor on 5th October 1906. The plaintiff merely claims an exemption and not a right. It is a mere personal exemption expressly taken away by the Act. There were no rights of action on the date of the suit. JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—I think that Sadasiva Aiyar, J., was right in following the carefully considered judgment of Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., in Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (11) and that the principle to be applied is that where an Act contains provisions for the limitation of suits which take away altogether a vested right of suit without providing any equivalent remedy, then according to the approved rule of construction, the provisions must be considered to have been enacted subject to the implied exception that they were not to extend to such vested rights of suit which were to continue subject to the rules of limitation in force at the passing of the Act. This rule of construction was adopted to give effect to the presumed intention of the Legislature not to take away vested rights in this fashion. It is recognised in section 8 of the Madras General Clauses Act, 1891, and the provisions now in question must be taken to have been enacted with reference to it. In Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (11), it was held with reference to this Act that the six years' period applicable under Article 116 to a registered contract continued to apply to a suit for rent under the Madras Estates Land Act at a time when the period of limitation presented by it for suits of this nature had already expired. In the present case the claim for rent was not barred at the date of the passing of the Act, as it was kept alive under section 7 of the Limitation Act owing to the minority of the plaintiff. Sections 210 and 211 enact rules of limitation for suits under the Act, and section 211 expressly provides that section 7 and certain other sections of the Limitation Act shall not apply to suits under this Act. Thus the result of the passing of the Act, which came into force two days after it received the Viceroy's assent, was to leave no opportunity for the exercise of the plaintiff's vested right of suit, unless the provisions of section 211 (1) be read subject to an implied exception in cases where these provisions would otherwise absolutely destroy the plaintiff's right of suit, which was in existence when the Act came into force. In addition to the cases cited in that judgment, I may refer to the recent decision of a Full Bench of five Judges of the Calcutta High Court, Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra (3), where Jenkins, C. J., delivering the judgment of the Court after citing Commissioner of Public Works (Cape Colony) v. Logan (12) and Colonial Sugar Refining Company v. Irving (5) and Jackson v. Woolley (13) observed: "Here the plaintiff at the time when the Amending Act was passed had a vested right of suit, and we see nothing in the Act as amended that demands the construction that the plaintiff was thereby deprived of a right of suit vested in him at the date of the passing of the Amending Act."

These observations are applicable to the present case and I think the appeals must be allowed, the decrees of the lower Courts be reversed, and the case remanded for disposal according to law. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs of the appeals. Other costs will abide and follow the event.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—With the greatest reluctance, I have ventured to differ from the conclusion at which the learned Chief Justice has arrived.

The circumstances which raise the question of law are these. Before the passing of the Estates Land Act, suits for arrears of rent were cognisable only by the ordinary Civil Courts. Such suits were governed by the Indian Limitation Act. As a necessary incident of such rights, minors were entitled to institute their suits within three years of their attaining majority, if the cause of action for rent arose during their minority. The claim in the suit now under appeal relates to the arrears which accrued due in Fasli 1315, when the appellant was a minor. He attained his majority in 1906. The Estates Land Act was passed by the Local Legislature in March 1908. In it a provision was inserted that the Act shall come into force on the 1st of July 1908. His Excellency the Governor gave his assent to it on the 25th March 1908. The assent of His Excellency the Governor-General was given on the 28th June. The Act came into force on the 1st of July. Section 189 of the Act enacts that suits for arrears of rent shall be instituted in the Revenue Courts, and removes such cases from the cognisance of Civil Courts. Section 211 provides that certain sections of the general Limitation Act shall not apply to suits instituted under the Act. The minority section (7) is one of them. The present suit was instituted by the appellant in the Revenue Court after the Estates Land Act came into force. It is conceded that the suit would be barred if section 7 of the Limitation Act did not apply. I am forced to the conclusion that the suit is barred. The pre-existing right, which carried with it the benefit of the Limitation Act, was to institute the suit in the Civil Court. That right could not have been sued upon under the old law in the Revenue Court. The new forum is the creature of the Statute. It was designed to afford a speedy remedy to the parties. The plaintiff was chosen to avail himself of that advantage. He is also bound by the disabilities which the law imposes on such persons. I can follow the argument which claims for the plaintiff the right to institute his suit in the ordinary Civil Courts with the attendant advantage of counting in his favour a period of three years after attaining majority. To such an argument, the plea that the Legislature should not be presumed to have deprived parties of their vested rights by post facto legislation may apply. But a litigant cannot approbate and reprobate. He cannot claim the advantage which the new law gives without submitting to the restrictions which it imposes.

The principle that vested rights should not be taken away by implication cannot apply to the present case. Section 211 lays down that the minority section of the Limitation Act shall not apply. There is no room for speculation here. It is an express prohibition. If a suit is instituted under the Act, it is not open to argument that section 211 is not applicable to it. The clear indication of the Legislature is that it takes this case out of the general rule. See per Lord Hatherley in Pardo v. Bingham (14). The closely reasoned judgment of Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., in Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (11) was much relied upon in the course of the argument. I am not differing from the main propositions which that case enunciates. Excepting one matter of detail, to which I shall refer later on, I fully concur in the conclusions therein stated. In my opinion, it is not correct to say that the plaintiff in this case is deprived of his rights by giving retrospective effect to the Estates Land Act. He acquires one of his rights only under the Act, namely, the right to sue in the Revenue Court. He had a vested right for a longer period of limitation before the Act came into force. As has been well stated "a Statute is not retrospective. . . . because a part of the requisites for its action is drawn from time antecedent to its passing," per Lord Denman, C. J., in Reg. v. St. Mary Whitechapel (15). That is the position in the present case. Lord Justice Buckley points out in West v. Gwynne (16) "As a matter of principle an Act of Parliament is not without sufficient reason taken to be retrospective. There is, so to speak, a presumption that it speaks only as to the future. But there is no like presumption that an Act is not intended to interfere with existing rights. Most Acts of Parliament, in fact, do interfere with existing rights." This dictum is specially applicable to enactments which, while taking away some rights, confer others which are no less important. See also Ex parte Dawson; In re Dawson (17). On the ground that section 211 is express and on the further ground that the principle of retrospective extinguishment of vested right does not arise in this case, I hold that the decision in Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (11) does not affect this case. In Manjuri Bibi v. Akkel Mahmud (1), Budhu Koer v. Hafiz Husain (2) and Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra (3) there was no express provision as in section 211 of the Estates Land Act. Moreover in all those cases a completed pre-existing right was sought to be put an end to by implication.

On the other hand, where the Statute provides for a new procedure for the enforcement of rights, it is always retrospective, per Lord Blackburn in Gardner v. Lucas (18). In the present instance it is the procedure by which the arrears are to be recovered that is changed. The plaintiff is directed to seek redress in a Revenue Court instead of in the Civil Court. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (4) lays down that the Limitation Act in force at the time the suit is instituted governs the action and not the one under which the rights accrued. That decision governs the present case. See also Chidambaram Chetty v. Karuppan Chetty (9) and Hope Mills Ltd. v. Vithaldas (10). There is one circumstance which has not been noticed in Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (11). I stated at the outset the material dates regarding the passing of the Act and of the sanction obtained. One underlying principle of the cases which lean against retrospective operation is that if the new Act gives no days of grace for its coming into operation, but makes it law as soon as it is passed, Courts should hold that the Legislature did not intend to interfere with vested rights. But where litigants had previous notice and could have enforced their rights before the Act became law, they cannot claim relief. On the day the Legislature passed the Act it deliberately put off its operation for over three months. It did not say that it shall become law as soon as the Governor-General's assent was obtained. It purposely gave parties a period of grace during which their remedies under the law as it stood could have been enforced. The plaintiff in claiming exception by virtue of an equity should not be heard to say that although he might have enforced his rights between March and July 1908, he can plead that the Act does not apply to him because no time was fixed for its coming into force after the assent of the Governor-General was obtained.

As I feel strongly that the plaintiff has no right to avoid the Statute under which he has come to Court, I respectfully differ from the conclusion at which the learned Chief Justice has arrived and agree with Sankaran Nair, J., in holding that the suit is barred by limitation.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The appellant, who is the Raja of Pittapur and whose estate was under the management of the Court of Wards, attained majority on the 5th October 1906. He filed suits to recover rent due for Fasli 1315 and claimed exemption from the bar of limitation, on the ground that he had under section 7 of the Limitation Act three years from the date of his attaining majority to file suits for arrears of rent accrued due during his minority. The Deputy Collector in whose Court the suits had to be filed under section 77 of the Estates Land Act held that section 211 of the Act applied and that the suits were barred, as the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of section 7 of the Limitation Act. The District Judge taking the same view confirmed the decree of the Deputy Collector. In second appeal Mr. Justice Sankaram Nair held that section 211 of the Estates Land Act applied retrospectively and barred suits which would have been in time but for the Estates Land Act; while Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar was of a contrary opinion.

The question raised in this appeal is, whether section 211 is retrospective and bars suits which would have been in time if the ordinary law of limitation were applied. The point is not free from difficulty, but I am of opinion that both on principle and on the balance of authority the section ought not to be applied so as to kill causes of action that were alive on the date of the passing of the Act.

It is a well-known rule of construction that retrospective operation ought not to be given to a Statute so as to take away vested rights.

unless that effect cannot be avoided without doing violence to the language of the enactment, and that except in special cases the new law ought to be construed so as to interfere as little as possible with vested rights. I need only refer to Reid v. Reid (19), and Lauri v. Renad (20). The same view was taken by the Privy Council in Mohammad Abdussamad v. Kurban Husain (21), Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (5). Section 6, clause (c), of the General Clauses Act and section 8, clause (d), of the Madras Act I of 1891 are statutory recognitions of the same rule.

It is argued that as rules of limitation are rules of procedure and as nobody has a vested right as regards matters of procedure, the plaintiff cannot plead section 7 of the Limitation Act as giving him a longer period of limitation, as at the date of the suit the Estates Land Act had enacted that the section is not to apply to suits for rent. Reference has been made to Arayil Kali Amma v. Pelappakkara Manakal Sankaran Nambudripad (8), Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (4). As observed by Mookerjee, J., in Manjuri Bibi v. Akkel Mahmud (1), a Statute of Limitation ceases to be a Statute of mere procedure where it shortens the period and is sought to be used to defeat causes of action which had accrued earlier than the length of time prescribed in the new law. The distinction has always to be borne in mind between mere matters of procedure and rights of suit which the procedure affects. The effect of the decision of the Privy Council in Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (4), on cases like the present, has been discussed by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra (3), and I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the Full Bench that the provisions of an enactment should not, unless it is absolutely necessary, be construed so as to make it impossible to exercise a vested right of suit. As pointed out by Justice Chatterjee (at page 1129), their Lordships of the Privy Council had not to consider the retrospective operation of special period of limitation provided by a local law coming into operation at once. In Arayil Kali Amma v. Pelappakkara Manakal Sankaran Nambudripad (8), Miller and Krishnaswami Aiyar, JJ., seem to rest their decision on the ground that the new Limitation Act gave time to suitors to make applications under the old Act, as the Legislature postponed the coming into operation of the Act on 1st January 1909. In Sundaram Iyer v. Muthuganapatigal (6), Justice Miller who was a party to Arayil Kali Amma v. Pelappakkara Manakal Sankaran Nambudripad (8) was of opinion that section 210 of the Estates Land Act cannot be retrospective. As the assent of the Governor-General was received only about three days before the Estates Land Act came into operation and as it is doubtful if the public knew of the assent before 1st July 1908, it cannot be said that the public had due notice. It cannot be said that they were bound to assume that consent was a mere matter of form and would be given as a matter of course, especially as petitions had been sent by landlords against the measure.

The question as to the retrospective operation of section 210 was discussed in Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (11), where it was held that the rule of limitation in Madras Act I of 1908 was inapplicable to cases when the period of three years provided by it had expired before the Act came into force. The judgment of Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., deals exhaustively with the whole question and I see no reason to dissent from the view taken by the eminent Judges who decided the case.

I do not think it makes any difference whether the alteration of the period of limitation is due to a special provision in Schedule A to the Act or to a special section in the body of the Act. So far as I can see, there is no difference in principle between the present case and the one reported as Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (11). In both cases the Legislature shortened the period of limitation for suits for rent so far as the plaintiff was concerned and if the three years' rule in Schedule A applied, the suit would have been barred.

SHAHAMAD v. IBRAHIM.

Some considerations were urged during the argument which I think are beside the point. It has been argued that as the Estates Land Act has prescribed a new forum which the plaintiff has elected to sue in he is precluded from seeking the benefit of the exemption conferred by section 7 of the Limitation Act. Section 77 of the Estates Land Act gives the plaintiff no option as to the forum and there is in the present case neither election nor benefit so far as he is concerned. It has also been suggested that the object of the Legislature was to preserve tenants from long standing demands. This may be so as regards causes of action arising after the Act came into force or running at its date, but I can see no grounds for supposing that the Legislature intended to deprive landlords of rents justly due to them at the date of the passing of the Act.

The correct rule seems to me to be that though laws affecting limitation might abridge or enlarge periods of limitation in cases of suits or causes of action which were alive at the date when the new enactment came into force and which under the old law would expire afterwards, the change cannot, unless there is a clearly expressed intention to the contrary, either by apt words in the enactment or otherwise, be retrospective so as to destroy rights of suits which were alive on the date.

I agree with the Chief Justice and would allow the Letters Patent Appeals and reverse the decisions of the Courts below and remand the suits for disposal. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs of these appeals. Other costs will abide and follow the result.

Appeal allowed; Suits remanded.

Shamilat—Sale of khewat land, whether includes shamilat—Intention of parties.

It is a question of the intention of the parties as to whether a sale of the khewat lands includes the shamilat pertaining to the lands, a determination of which depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case. [p. 101, col. 1.]

Where the ancestor of the plaintiffs in 1862 sold to the ancestors of the defendants his entire well with all the culturable and unculturable land attached to it, this being the only property he owned, and after selling it he migrated to and settled in another district, and the shamilat of the village being partitioned in 1905, the plaintiffs sued the representatives-in-interest of the vendees to recover that area:

Held, that the vendor having severed all his connection with his original village and having taken no interest during all these long years in the shamilat area, it was evident that he meant to transfer all the rights he possessed in the village to the vendees and that both the parties to the transaction intended at that time that the vendees should step into the shoes of the vendor. [p. 101, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Shahpur Division, at Lyallpur, dated the 13th January 1913.

Messrs. Fazal-i-Hussain and Bahadur Ghund, for the Appellants.

Mr. Taq-ud-din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, upholding the decree of the Court of first instance dismissing the plaintiffs' suit for a share in the village shamilat. We have heard Mr. Fazal-i-Hussain on behalf of the appellants and, though we agree with him that the reasons assigned by the Divisional Judge in support of his finding are not quite correct, we are nevertheless of opinion that the plaintiffs' suit was rightly dismissed by the Court of first instance and that this appeal must fail.

The sale-deed, dated the 14th June 1862, shows that Jahana, the ancestor of the plaintiffs, sold for a consideration of Rs. 100 to the ancestors of the defendants his entire well called Kasabwala, with all the culturable and unculturable land attached to it. This was all the property the vendor owned, and after selling it he left the village and migrated to, and settled in, the Multan District.

It appears that in 1905 the shamilat of the village was partitioned and the area proportionate to the khevat land sold in 1862 was awarded to the vendees. The plaintiffs have brought the present action to recover that area from the defendants who are the representatives-in-interest of the vendees.

It is true that the shamilat land is not specifically mentioned in the sale-deed but we have, in the circumstances of the case, no doubt whatever that the vendor meant to transfer all the rights he possessed in the village to the vendees and that both the parties to the transaction intended at that time that the vendees should step into the shoes of the vendor.

It is to be remembered that land was not in those days regarded as a valuable property and it is significant that the price for the entire well was, as stated above, only Rs. 100. We fail to understand what possible object there could have been in separating the shamilat from the proprietary holding and reserving the former for the original owner.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has drawn our attention to a judgment of this Court reported as Ahmad v. Ahmad (1), in which a Division Bench decided that the sale in that case did not include a proportionate share of the shamilat. But it seems to us clear that each case of this kind must depend upon its own particular facts and circumstances and it is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule which would be applicable to all cases. That the vendor in this case severed all connection with his original village and that he settled in another district and took no interest during all these long years in the shamilat area, are circumstances which distinguish this case from that cited on behalf of the appellants and we entertain not the slightest doubt that at the time of the sale both the parties fully intended that all the rights of the vendor, whether in the shamilat or in the proprietary holding, should pass to the vendees.

On this ground we have no hesitation in upholding the decree of the learned Divisional Judge. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Widow's estate—Alienation by widow not for necessity—Burden of proof—Reversionary interest whether liable to attachment in execution of decree against husband—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (m).

An alienation by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's property not made for legal necessity is valid only during her life-time. [p. 103, col. 1.]

Singaram Chettiar v. Kalyanasundaram Pillai, 26 Ind. Cas. 1; (1914) M. W. N. 735; 1 L. W. 687, followed.

An absolute estate vested in a widow becomes by her alienation for her own purpose (valid during her life-time) divided into two estates (1) a life estate enjoyable by the purchaser during her life-time and (2) a reversionary estate to be enjoyed after her life-time. The ownership of the latter continues in her as part of the estate which she inherited from her husband and is available to her husband's creditors [p. 103, cols. 1 & 2.]

Such reversionary interest does not come under section 60 (m) of the Civil Procedure Code and is not exempt from attachment where the judgment-debtor is not the presumptive or contingent reversioner but a widow representing her husband's estate fully and the transfer which would be made by the attachment and Court sale of the reversionary interest is not made by any contingent reversioner or of the rights of the contingent reversioner in execution of a decree against him but by the Court acting upon the judgment-debtor's rights and upon the husband's estate vested in the judgment-debtor (widow.) The burden of proving as against a creditor of the husband or as against a reversioner that an alienation by the widow is binding on the reversioner is on the alienee. [p. 102, col. 1.]

SEGU CHIDAMBARAMMA v. SAREDDI HUSSAINAMMA.

Mr. V. C. Seshachari, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 16th July 1914, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge is justified in his view on the burden of proof to this extent, namely, that the burden of proving that the alienation by the widow (1st defendant) to the 3rd defendant was nominal or without consideration, lay on the plaintiff who attached the plaint property for realizing the amount decreed to him as due by 1st defendant's deceased husband. We must accept his finding that the plaintiff has not discharged that burden. But there is the further question whether the alienation by the widow was made for such a necessary purpose as would bind the property after the widow's death and whether the plaintiff is not entitled to attach and bring to sale the said reversionary estate in execution of his decree.

The burden of proving as against a creditor of the husband or as against a reversioner that an alienation by the widow is binding on the reversion is clearly on the alienee.

The learned District Judge says that "the defendants, no doubt, have not satisfactorily proved the necessity for the sale," but we are loath to accept and act upon that finding as the District Munsif had come to a different conclusion and the learned District Judge's above observation appears as a sort of obiter dictum in his judgment.

We shall, therefore, call for a fresh finding on the evidence already on the record on the question whether the alienation by the 1st defendant to 3rd defendant in 1899 was made for purposes binding on the reversionary interest in the plaint property.

The finding should be submitted within six weeks from the date of receipt of records and 10 days are allowed for filing objections to the finding.

In obedience to the above order the acting District Judge of Kurnool submitted the following

FINDING.—A finding has been called for on the following issue:—

"Whether the alienation by the 1st defendant to 3rd defendant in 1899 was made for purposes binding on the reversionary interest in the plaint property?"

2. In order that this issue may be found in the affirmative, it is necessary for the defence side to show that the alienation was for a purpose that comes under the category of legal necessity. For such proof, reliance is placed on the documents Exhibits II and III. Exhibit II is the sale-deed under which the property was sold by 1st defendant to third defendant in 1899, and it recites that the consideration amount was made up of three items:—

Rs. 28-8-0 due on a bond executed to 3rd defendant by 1st defendant's late husband;

Rs. 10 due for miscellaneous items.

Rs. 41-8-0 borrowed for the obsequies of 1st defendant.

Exhibit III is a bond executed for Rs. 25 to the 3rd defendant, on 21st April 1898, and has been produced by 3rd defendant's son, the 3rd defendant having died pending the suit. But there is no proof of this document, which is intended to be evidence of the first item of the consideration amount stated in Exhibit II; and for the other two items that make up the consideration stated in that document there is no evidence at all. The second item of Rs. 10 for miscellaneous items would, it would appear, even if substantiated, have to be ruled out as not being one of necessity.

3. As the burden of proof which is on the defence has not been discharged, I find the issue in the negative.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing on Tuesday the 30th day of March 1915 after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The facts are as follows. The plaintiff is the decree-holder in Original Suit No. 311 of 1901 on the file of the Nandyal Munsif's Court. The judgment-debtor is the first defendant, a Hindu widow who represented her husband's estate fully, and the decree was passed for a debt due by her husband. The plaint property was attached by the plaintiff (decree-holder) as belonging to her husband's estate. The attachment was made on the 11th November 1908, but the widow (the first defendant) had sold the property in 1899 itself to the third defendant, who sold it in his turn to the second defendant in 1905. The widow's sale was not made for necessity and was invalid beyond her life-time.

On these facts the question in second appeal is whether the plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, is or is not entitled to attach and bring to sale in execution of his decree in Original Suit No. 311 of 1901 that portion of the husband's estate which is left unaffected by the sale executed by the widow, that sale-deed, as we said before, not affecting more than that interest in the property which could enure during the widow's life-time. There are no doubt observations in several cases deprecating the description of a Hindu widow's estate as a life-interest, because she fully represents the estate for most purposes and nobody else represents any interest in the estate during her life-time and she is not a trustee for any body (See paragraphs 624 and 625 of Mayne's Hindu Law). My own opinion is that when once it is admitted that she represents the estate fully, some of the Hindu Law texts which direct her not to alienate the estate except for necessary purposes are merely moral admonitions and a sale by her in contravention of those moral precepts does not fail to convey the absolute ownership to the purchaser. But authorities which cannot possibly be got over have held that an alienation not for legal necessity is only valid during her life-time, that is, it conveys to the purchaser only a right to enjoy during the widow's life-time. [See the very recent case of Singaram Chettiar v. Kalyanasundaram Pillai (1).] When the full estate is vested in her and yet owing to the restrictions, which from being moral restrictions have become legal restrictions, she can convey only an interest to last during her life-time by a conveyance not for legal necessity, it seems to me to follow that the absolute estate vested in her becomes by her alienation for her own purposes (valid during her life-time) divided into two estates, (1) a life estate enjoyable by the purchaser during her life-time and (2) a reversionary estate to be enjoyed after her life-time, both of which estates or rather the total of which belonged to her husband at his death. So far as her life-interest is concerned, it became by her alienation not available to the creditors of her husband, but the ownership of the remaining reversionary estate continues in her as part of the estate which she inherited from her husband. That seems to me to be available to her husband's creditors. Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar relied upon the cases which have held that a presumptive reversioner has no interest in the property during the widow's life-time which can be attached by his creditor. [See the latest case of this Court Kakaralapudi Lakshmi v. Rajah Kandukuri Veera Sarahha (2).] In my opinion, these decisions are irrelevant in the consideration of the question whether the widow as heir of her husband has still left in her some property belonging to her husband's estate which could be attached by her husband's creditor after she had made an alienation binding on her during her life-time. No person can claim during the widow's life-time, after the alienation of the widow's life-estate, to be the owner of that reversionary interest, but it does not follow therefrom that no reversionary interest, in property forming part of the husband's estate, is left after her alienation of her life-estate. If an interest belonging to the husband's estate is left, some legal person must be its owner. If a presumptive and contingent reversioner is not the legal person in whom the reversionary right exists, it must be the widow in whom the whole legal estate vested at her husband's death. If so, the decree-holder, who obtained a decree against her as fully representing her husband, must be entitled to attach that reversionary interest remaining in her as part of her husband's estate.

Section 60, clause (m) of the Civil Procedure Code and section 6, clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, are also relied on by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar. Section 60 (m) of the Civil Procedure Code prohibits the attachment of a judgment-debtor's expectancy of succession. Section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act prohibits the transfer of the chance of an heir-apparent's succession by such heir-apparent. These statutory provisions again are, in my opinion, irrelevant to the consideration of the question before us, because the judgment-debtor here is not the presumptive or contingent reversioner but the widow representing her husband's estate fully, and the transfer which would be made by the attachment and Court sale of the reversionary interest is not made by any contingent reversioner or of the rights of the contingent reversioner in execution of a decree against him, but by the Court acting upon the judgment-debtor's rights and upon the husband's estate vested in the judgment-debtor (widow).

I would, therefore, answer the question which I put to myself in the beginning of the judgment in the affirmative, and setting aside the judgments of the lower Courts give a declaration to the plaintiff that the attachment made by him in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 31 of 1901 is valid in respect of the reversionary interest in the properties subject to the life-interest of the widow. The parties will bear their respective costs throughout.

TYABJI, J.—I agree. It seems to me that the widow was a party to the proceedings in two capacities, (1) as to a life-interest in her own absolute right and (2) as to the reversion as the representative of her deceased husband's estate which is to devolve on his reversioner. She had no doubt purported to convey the property in both capacities, but it has been found that in so far as she purported to alienate the property in her latter capacity she had stepped beyond her legal powers and was not competent to bind the reversioner. She was on that account brought on the record so that the reversionary interest of her husband's estate may also be bound. The authorities to the effect that the presumptive reversioner's interest is such a mere expectancy as is referred to in the Transfer of Property Act, section 6 (a), support this view. For, if the reversionary interest in the widow's husband's estate is a mere expectancy so far as the reversioner is concerned, the only person in whom "the legal estate" (I use that expression for brevity perhaps at the sacrifice of accuracy) can be said to be vested must be the widow.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1724 OF 1912.

March 26, 1915.

Present:—Justice Sir Donald Johnstone, Kt., and Mr. Justice Shah Din.

CHUNI LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—

APPELLANTS

versus

BELI RAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Decree for redemption on payment of mortgage-money not executed—Claim to redeem on basis of that decree, whether maintainable—Appeal for reduction of mortgage-money—Court-fee payable.

The sons of a mortgagor brought a suit in 1888 against the original mortgagees for redemption of certain mortgages and obtained a decree for possession of the mortgaged property conditional on payment of Rs. 3,404-3-0. This decree was never executed and the possession remained with the mortgagees as before. On the 18th November 1909 the present plaintiffs, claiming under the original mortgagor, sued for possession of the land by redemption on payment of the decretal amount. Defendants, successors-in-title of the original mortgagees, claimed Rs. 6,947 on the basis of the original mortgage deeds and the lower Courts decreed redemption on payment of this sum. On second appeal to the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that Court-fee was payable on the value of the subject-matter in dispute in this appeal, namely, the difference between Rs. 6,987, the amount fixed by the lower Courts, and Rs. 3,404-3-0, the amount which the plaintiffs were prepared to pay; [p. 105, col. 2.]

(2) that the previous decree not having been executed within limitation had become inoperative so far as the amount of the incumbrance on the land was concerned and a fresh suit for redemption was only maintainable on the basis of the original mortgage-deeds. [p. 105, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jullundur Division, dated the 22nd July 1912.

The Hon'ble Bakhshi Sohan Lal, R. B., for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—By a registered mortgage-deed, dated the 1st May 1871, and by three additional mortgage-deeds, dated the 2nd December 1871, the 15th February 1872 and the 21st July 1879, respectively, one Gonda Mal, predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs, mortgaged the land in suit with possession to Jai Dial and Gopi, under whom the defendants claim, for a total consideration of Rs. 1,799. The first mortgage-deed did not carry interest, but in the three additional mortgage-deeds provision was made for payment of interest on the mortgage-money at the rate of Rs. 1-12-0 per cent. per mensem.

The sons of the original mortgagor, Gonda Mal, who had meanwhile died, brought a suit in 1888 against the original mortgagees for redemption of the mortgage on payment of the principal mortgage-money. On the 13th February 1889 they obtained a decree for possession of the property mortgaged conditional on payment of Rs. 3,404-3-0 to the mortgagees. This amount was made up of the principal mortgage-money Rs. 1,799 and interest thereon amounting to Rs. 1,605-3-0. This decree was never executed, and possession of the land mortgaged remained with the mortgagees as before.

On the 1st November 1909 the present plaintiffs, who claim under the original mortgagor, brought this suit for possession of the land by redemption and claimed to redeem the mortgage on payment of Rs. 3,404-3-0, which was the amount of the charge on the land as fixed by the decree of the 13th February 1889. The defendants, who are successors-in-title of the original mortgagees, pleaded that the plaintiffs were not entitled to effect redemption on payment of Rs. 3,404-3-0 on the strength of the decree of 1889; that the said decree, not having been executed within limitation, was ineffectual so far as the determination of the amount of the incumbrance on the land was concerned; and that the defendants were entitled to receive from the plaintiffs, on the footing of the original mortgage-deed and the three additional mortgage-deeds of 1871, 1872 and 1879, a sum of Rs. 6,987. The first Court decreed redemption on payment of the said sum of Rs. 6,987; and on appeal by the plaintiffs the learned Divisional Judge maintained the decree of the first Court.

The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this Court, and for purposes of Court-fee they have valued the appeal at Rs. 1,799, the principal mortgage-money secured by the four instruments of mortgage. The first question we have to decide is as to whether the memorandum of appeal is sufficiently stamped. The question is concluded by authority, and we hold, following Banwari Das v. Nathu Shah (1) and Dyal (1) 9 Ind. Cas. 676; 5 P. R. 191; 48 P. L. R. 191; 59 P. W. R. 1911.

Singh v. Ram Rakha (2), decided on the 30th January 1912, that the proper amount of Court-fee is that payable on the value of the subject-matter in dispute in this appeal, viz., Rs. 3,582-13-0, which is the difference between Rs. 3,404-3-0, which the plaintiffs are prepared to pay to the defendants, and Rs. 6,987, which has been fixed by the lower Courts as the amount on payment of which redemption can be effected. The total amount of Court-fee leviable on the memorandum of appeal was thus Rs. 205, and since the appellants have already affixed on the memorandum of appeal a Court-fee stamp of the value of Rs. 115, they must pay the additional Court-fee of Rs. 90. The appellants' Pleader undertakes to pay in this additional amount of Court-fee at once, and we proceed to deal with the merits of the appeal.

On the merits, the concurrent decision of the Courts below is perfectly sound and must be maintained. The argument that the amount of the incumbrance on the land was fixed once and for all by the decree of the 13th February 1889 and that since it was held in the judgment upon which that decree was based that no future interest was to be allowed on the amount decreed, the respondents were not entitled to claim any interest after the date of the decree in question, is obviously untenable. As the decree was not executed within the period of limitation, it ceased to have any legal effect after the expiry of the period of limitation, so far as the amount of the incumbrance on the land was concerned; and the fresh suit for redemption which has been brought by the present respondents is maintainable, according to the uniform practice of the Courts in this Province, on the basis of the original mortgage-deeds, and not on the strength of the decree dated the 13th February 1889. If the appellants had the option of instituting a second suit for redemption, as according to the rulings of this Court they have, long after the decree of the 13th February 1889 ceased to be executable, it is obviously erroneous to say that the amount of the incumbrance on the land remains always the same as that fixed by the said decree. That decree having ceased to operate between the parties, so far as regards the right of the (2) 14 Ind. Cas. 78; 122 P. W. R. 1912; 109 P. R. 1912.

mortgagors to recover possession of the land on payment of Rs. 3,404-3-0, it must be left out of consideration in the present suit; and the amount of the incumbrance on the land must be determined afresh on the basis of the mortgage-deeds on the strength of which redemption is sought to be effected by the mortgagors.

Reference was made in argument to certain recitals contained in a registered deed of sub-mortgage, dated the 18th June 1900, and a registered deed of sale, dated the 4th September 1908, executed by the predecessors-in-title of the respondents, and it was urged that those recitals amounted to admissions to the effect that the mortgage-debt had been fixed once and for all by the decree of 13th February 1889 at Rs. 3,404-3. As pointed out by the learned Divisional Judge, these alleged admissions do not amount to an estoppel and they were the result of a misconception of the legal position on the part of the mortgagees.

We have no hesitation in agreeing with the Courts below that the amount due to the respondents on the footing of the mortgage-deeds of 1871, 1872 and 1879 is not less than Rs. 6,987; and we accordingly maintain the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law — Adoption — Preferential right of senior widow—Junior widow, whether can validly adopt without consulting senior widow—Consent of sapindas.

A senior widow has a preferential right to adopt and so long as such preferential right exists, an adoption by the junior widow without consulting the senior is invalid even if made with the consent of the sapindas. [p. 109, col. 1.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—Even on the view that a widow can adopt with the consent of the sapindas in the absence of any authority from her deceased husband, the senior widow is one of the kinsmen whom it is the duty of the junior widow to consult. Failure to do so renders the adoption invalid. [p. 109, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The plaintiff-appellant in this case bases his claim to succeed to the estate of the late Gangadhara Rama Nayanam, on the ground that he was duly adopted by the junior widow with the consent of the sapindas after the senior widow had refused to adopt a boy. The District Judge has found, and we agree with him, that no such refusal is proved. On the other hand the evidence shows that the senior widow who left the family house shortly after her husband's death set up almost at once that her husband had authorised her to adopt during his life-time. It also appears that two days after the adoption of the plaintiff by the junior widow, and as soon as she heard of it, she went through the form of adopting the defendant purporting to act under the alleged authority from her husband. The District Judge found that this authority had not been proved, but this finding did not affect the result, as he also found that the plaintiff's adoption by the junior widow was invalid on the ground that it was made by her without consulting the senior widow and obtaining her consent, and also because it was made without consulting one of the nearest reversioners of the deceased, and that consequently he had no right to sue.

The view taken by the District Judge as to the senior widow's consent is in accordance with a subsequent and very recent decision of Sankaran Nair and Spencer, JJ., in Kakerla Chukkamma v. Kakerla Pun- namna (1), where it was held that the senior widow has a preferential right to adopt, and that, so long as such preferential right subsists, the junior widow has no right to adopt. The learned Judges, one of them a Hindu Judge of long experience, based the decision not only on the decisions of the Bombay and Calcutta Courts, but also on the preferential right of the senior widow to perform religious acts such as adoption.

The question which is one of considerable importance and had previously come before this Court has again been very ably and elaborately argued before us by Mr. A. Krishaswamy Aiyar for the appellant and by Mr. T. V. Venkata Rama Iyer for the respondent; and after careful consideration of their arguments I see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judges or the grounds on which it was based.

The preferential right of the senior wife as regards religious acts is, in my opinion, clearly established. The Mitakshara, Book I, Chapter III, verse 88, which has been specially translated for us, first cites the text of Yajñavalkya: "When there is a wife of an equal class present, never do acts of religion with any other. When there is more than one wife of the same class as yourself, in matters of religion never employ any but the eldest." On this Vijnaneswara comments as follows:—"When there is a wife of equal class never do acts of religion with wives of any other class. When there are several wives of the same class in matters of religion do not pass over the eldest wife and do not employ either the second or the third, (lit. the middle or the youngest one)." See also Colebrooke, Volume 2 Digest, pages 124 to 126. The senior widow's preferential right of adoption is expressly recognised in Steel's Law and Custom of Hindu Castes, page 48, which embodies the results of an inquiry held in the year 1831 as to the Hindu customs and usages prevailing in the Deccan; and in Padajirav v. Ramrav (2), Sargeant, C. J., after referring to this passage observed that the superior right of the elder widow was doubtless based on her being the patni and as such entitled to take part with her husband in all religious ceremonies. I think that here the learned Judge was only offering an explanation of the usage prevailing in the Deccan, and even if, as contended by the appellant, he was mistaken in supposing that the senior wife alone was entitled to be styled patni, I do not think that matters much, as it does not affect the preferential right of the senior wife to perform religious acts. As regards the meaning of patni, it appears from the passage in the Mitakshara and Viramitrodaya referred to in Janaki Nath Mukhopadhyaya v. Mothuranath Mukhopadhyaya (3), that the celebrated grammarian Panini considered that the word had been formed by affixing the particle ni to pati (husband) to signify one who partakes in the holy sacrifices. Fanciful as this may be, it was, of course, accepted on Panini's authority by the commentators, and Vijnaneswara after referring to it states that all the wives were to be regarded as patnis and as such entitled to share in the inheritance. The omission in Colebrooke's translation of the Mitakshara of this passage, which is now accepted as genuine, was responsible for Strange's view that the senior widow alone was entitled to succeed, a view which has been overruled by Kissen Lala v. Javallah Prasad Lala (4), and by the Privy Council in Gajapathi Nilamani v. Gajapathi Radhamani (5), which only left her the exclusive right of management until partition. Admitting, however, that the junior wives are patnis in the sense of being capable of partaking in sacrificial acts, it remains true, on the express authority of the Mitakshara already cited, that the senior wife has the preferential right as regards religious acts, and this appears to me to be a sufficient foundation for her preferential right as to adoption.

It is then said that the learned Judges were wrong in applying the Bombay rulings, Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (6) and Padajirav v. Ramrav (2), to this Presidency and that these decisions are opposed to the decisions of the Privy Council with reference to adoption in this part of India beginning with the Ramnad case; Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (7). But, as pointed out by their Lordships in that case, the law of adoption in all these Presidencies rests on the text of Vasishta, "Nor let a woman give or accept a son without the consent of her lord," and the main difference is as to the circumstances in which such consent should be considered to have been given evidence of express authority being required in Bengal, whereas in Bombay it is presumed, except in cases where the husband was a member of a joint family where the consent of the managing member is required, while in Madras, as held by their Lordships in the Ramnad case, Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (7), on a variety of considerations the want of the husband's consent may be supplied by the consent of his kindred. Following the Bombay decisions the Calcutta High Court has recently held that, where the husband authorised his two widows to adopt, he must be held to have intended the senior widow to have the preferential right. The Bombay decisions, Jenkins, C. J., observed, "rest upon fundamental principles and on views of Hindu life and economy which appear to me to be fully applicable here. Any other view would merely lead to an unseemly scramble for the purpose of performing this solemn act." These observations in my view are equally applicable in this Presidency.....where, as observed by their Lordships in Sri Varada Pratapa Raghunada Deo v. Sri Brozo Kishore Patta Deo (8), the law in this respect is something intermediate between the stricter law of Bengal and the wider law of Bombay. Further in view of the inconveniences attendant on simultaneous rights of adoption and in the significant absence of any evidence that such an equal right has ever been claimed in our Courts for junior widows prior to these two cases, I think the onus is on those who assert it to show that the law in Madras differs in this respect from that which prevails in the adjoining Presidency. In the case of impartible estates the estate necessarily vests in the senior widow, and the result of holding that the junior widow with the consent of a majority of the sapindas has the right to adopt without reference to the senior widow, would be to render the latter's tenure of the estate exceedingly precarious. The absence, until now, of any such attempt by the junior widow and sapindas goes far to show that the rule in this Presidency has been the same as in Bombay, and that we should effect an innovation by holding otherwise.

It is then argued that the equal right of the junior widow is to be deduced from decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in which the question was not raised or considered. These arguments must be received with great caution, as their Lordships' observations were only directed to the questions before them. In the Ramnad case, Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (7), it was held not only on the authority of the Smriti Chandrika and Dattaka Meemansa but also on the ground of proved usage, that in Madras a Hindu widow not having her husband's permission might lawfully adopt if duly authorized by his kindred, the assent of the kinsmen being apparently required by reason of the presumed incapacity of women for independence. The question of priority among co-widows did not arise and was not considered in the case. The further explanation of that decision by their Lordships in Sri Virada Pratapa Raghunada Deo v. Sri Brozo Kishore Patta Deo (8), as to what amounts to a sufficient consent of kinsmen does not affect the present question. In the next case, Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (9), where the question was whether an adoption made by a widow with the assent of the kindred after the death of her natural son was valid, their Lordships held that the husband during his life-time might have authorised his wife in the event of the death of the natural son to adopt another son, and, if she could have done it with the husband's assent she could equally do it with the assent of the kindred. Their Lordships, no doubt, laid down generally, but of course with reference to the facts before them, that a widow without permission from her husband may, if duly authorized by her kinsmen, adopt a son to him in every case in which such an adoption would be valid if made by her under written authority from her husband. This is the major proposition of the syllogism. The minor is to be found in the observation of their Lordships in Annapurni Nachiar v. Forbes (10): "It seems not to be doubted that a man may authorize a single one of several wives to adopt after his death, or that she would on adoption stand in the place of the natural mother." We are then asked to conclude that a junior widow with the consent of the kinsmen may adopt without reference to the senior widow. The fallacy of this argument, in my opinion, consists in applying the general expressions of their Lordships in Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (9) to a case which was not before them and which involves, as I have sought to show, considerations of authority, usage, and convenience which were not presented to them.

The decision of the Bombay High Court in Rakhamabai v. Radhabai (6), that the senior widow is entitled to adopt without the consent of the junior widow, and the decision of this Court in Narayanasami Naick v. Mangammal (11), that in this part of India the senior widow with the consent of the kinsmen may proceed without the consent of the junior widow, must be considered as proceeding on a recognition of the senior widow's preferential right, and are no authority for holding that the junior widow may adopt without the senior's consent.

Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar for the respondent also argued that in any case the senior widow was entitled to be consulted as one of the kindred, while on the other side it was argued that a widow is not a sapinda but only succeeds as one of the enumerated heirs. I do not think it necessary to go into this question, but having regard to the decision of their Lordships in Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (7) that the assent of the mother-in-law, Mother-in-law, in that case was operative in support of the adoption, I should be disposed to hold that the senior widow was one of the kinsmen whom it was the duty of the junior widow to consult and that the adoption was bad for failing to consult her.

I do not consider it necessary to consider whether on the evidence as found by the District Judge there was a failure to consult one of the next reversioners, because for the reasons already given I think the Appeal No. 225 fails and must be dismissed with costs. For the purposes of this appeal it is not necessary to consider the finding as to the adoption of the senior widow of the 1st defendant. It has also become unnecessary to hear the cross-appeal of the 1st defendant against the finding that he was not validly adopted by the senior widow, as that finding has become immaterial to the decision. The Appeal No. 136 is withdrawn by consent. No order as to costs.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—I also desire to express my indebtedness to the able and lucid arguments which have been addressed to us, from which I have derived much assistance and instruction. Up to a certain point the law is clear, and its provisions are a common starting point to both parties; and the following propositions may be laid down. In Bengal a widow can only adopt if the husband has before his death given his express authority to her to do so. In Bombay the consent of her husband is always implied and she can adopt without proving any authority on her own motion. In Southern India, she can adopt without express authority if she obtains the consent of the sapindas of her husband. When a man has more wives than one, he can associate any one of them with him in adoption, and can give an authority to any one of them to adopt after his death; his choice is in no way restricted and he can prefer the junior widow to the senior, the younger to the elder. It is argued for the appellant here that as the junior widow can adopt with the authority of her deceased husband, she is in exactly the same position if she obtains the consent of the sapindas: for the sole object and import of the consent of the sapindas is that it should be the equivalent of the authority of the husband. In support of this view of the scope and nature of the authority of the sapindas, reliance was placed on the judgment in Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (9), and particularly on the observations of Sir James Colville at pages 184 and 187.

For the respondent reliance was placed on the fact that both in Bengal, where the rule is stricter, and in Bombay, where it is laxer than the Madras, the junior widow is not allowed to adopt in preference to or without the consent of the senior. See Padajirav v. Ramrav (2) and Ranjit Lal Karmakar v. Bejoy Krishna Karmakar (12). In the Bengal case, the question arose and only could arise where a husband had given an authority to his wives to adopt, without distinguishing between them: the Court read the authority distributively, and held that its exercise was restricted in the first instance to the senior widow. In the Bombay case, where there was no question of express authority, it was held that the power was not exerciseable by the junior widow without the consent of the senior. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, while prepared if necessary to say that these cases are wrong or at any rate have no application to Madras, distinguishes them from the present case. He points out that the Calcutta case only laid down a rule for the construction of an authority given to two persons, and that the Bombay case applies the same construction to an implied authority. Here we have an express authority, that of the sapindas, to a definite person and he contends that there is nothing in either decision to prevent our giving effect to it.

An English Judge in deciding a question of English Common Law is in theory declaring what custom on the subject has subsisted immemorially in the country (Stephen's Blackstone, Vol. I, Introduction, section 1). An Indian Judge in deciding a question of Hindu Law is in theory expounding the true construction of mandatory utterances to which a divine origin is ascribed, aided or impeded in his task by ancient commentaries, text-books of authority, and judicial decisions of the Indian Courts and of the Privy Council. Now-a-days there is little but fiction in either theory, and a Judge in both countries has only to apply the principles of previous decisions to particular sets of facts. But I think that the theoretical objection has just this much effect, that the argument that a suggested result is not in accordance with known practice will have less weight in India, if it can be shown to be the logical deduction from the authorities. In the present case, I feel it very difficult to escape from the conclusion that Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (9) has declared the consent of the sapindas to be in all respects the equivalent of express authority from the husband. On the other hand, it is quite clear from the books that to give effect to the appellant's contention would be quite contrary to what every one has hitherto supposed to be the law, and to legalize what in practice is a complete innovation. It is also a practice likely to lead to extreme inconvenience, to use no stronger term. In this state of things, I find that two Judges of this Court have in Kakerla Chukkamma v. Kakerla Punnumma (1) decided this question adversely to the appellant; one of those Judges being Sankaran Nair, J.; whose authority on such a subject has the weight of his great experience. Further, I find that my Lord in the present case takes the same view. That being so, I think it would be quite wrong for me to give expression to any opinion that might tend to unsettle the former decision of this Court, or give any encouragement to its challenge in other cases. The expressions used by the Privy Council in Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (9) were not really necessary to the decision; and I think if the decision in Kakerla Chukkamma v. Kakerla Punnumma (1) is to be challenged, it must be challenged elsewhere than in this Court. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. I agree with the order proposed in my Lord's judgment.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, dated November 27th, 1912.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterjee and Probodh Chandra Dutt, for the Appellant.

Babus Nares Chandra Sinha and Kalidas Sirkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore rejecting a plaint as being insufficiently stamped. The suit of the plaintiffs was for a declaration that a decree for over Rs. 22,000 obtained by the defendant against themselves and their relations was bad so far as they were concerned, as they never took the loan, were not benefited by the loan and were not properly represented in the suit, and that their share in the family property which was three annas and valued at Rs. 9,000 had been improperly sold in execution of that decree. They paid Court-fee on their plaint upon ten times the Government revenue. They were, however, willing to pay upon Rs. 9,000, the value of their three-annas share of the property sold under the mortgage-decree. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, thought that they were not entitled to maintain the suit upon that Court-fee and must pay Court-fee upon the whole amount of the decree which was over Rs. 22,000.

It has been contended before us that the learned Judge is wrong, and on the ground that the loss to the plaintiffs must be the index to the value of the action so far as the plaintiffs are concerned.

If the plaintiffs' loss on account of the decree was small they would not be bound to value their suit according to the decree. In support of this contention, the learned Vakil for the appellants has relied upon the remarks of the Privy Council in the case of Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (1) where their Lordships are reported to have said: "The value of the action must mean the value to the plaintiff. But the value of the property might quite well be Rs. 1,000, while the execution debt was 10,000. It is only if the execution debt is less than the value of the property that its amount affects the value of the suit." This case was, no doubt, a case under section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure and it was held that it came under sub-section (1) of Article 17 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, namely, a suit to alter or set aside a summary decision or order of a Civil Court not established by Letters Patent. In the portion which we have quoted above, their Lordships explain the meaning of the words 'value of the action' as meaning the value to the plaintiff; and to that extent it may be a guide for the decision of this case.

On the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondent has drawn our attention to the case of Harihar Prasad Singh v. Shyam Lal Singh (2). That was a case to some extent analogous to the present case. In that case, in execution of a decree for Rs. 2,794 a property worth Rs. 7,000 had been sold and their Lordships held that the plaintiff must value his suit according to the value of the decree. The value of the decree in that case was less than the value of the property and the judgment was in accordance with what their Lordships of the Privy Council said in the case of Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (1) namely, "it is only if the execution debt is less than the value of the property that its amount affects the value of the suit." In that case the Court-fee was directed to be paid upon the value of the decree, which was less than the value of the property which the plaintiff wanted to recover.

(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 404; 40 C. 615.

U WILATHA v. U THIRI.

In this case, however, the loss that the plaintiffs have suffered is the loss of their property which is valued at Rs. 9,000. The value of the action to them, therefore, is Rs. 9,000, and the prayer in the plaint that the decree may be set aside to the extent of the share of the plaintiffs which has been added to the plaint, does not indicate that the plaintiffs were increasing the value of the action so far as they were concerned. Taking their share as three annas, the share of the decree so far as they would be affected would be much less than Rs. 9,000. As the plaintiffs, however, valued their loss at Rs. 9,000, we think that the Court-fee must be paid upon that, according to section 7, sub-section (4), clause (c), and that the plaintiffs must value their plaint accordingly.

The order, therefore, requiring the plaintiffs to pay Court-fee on Rs. 22,876-7-6 is wrong and must be set aside, and the case sent back to the lower Court to be dealt with in accordance with law. The plaintiffs must have their costs of this appeal.

The plaintiffs will be allowed to pay Court-fees within eight weeks from this date.

Let the record be sent down without delay.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Burmese Buddhist Law—Buddhist monk's arrest in execution of decree—Presumption as to power of disposal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXV, r. 1.

Under the Buddhist Law a man's interest in his property ceases when he is ordained as a Buddhist monk, though according to certain texts he may receive gifts after ordination.

There is a strong presumption that a Buddhist monk has no property over which he has rights of disposal.

Expediency of supplementing Order XXV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, so as to include cases in which a Buddhist monk is the sole plaintiff recommended.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, J.—The appellant, U Wilatha, a Buddhist Pongyi, has been committed to the civil jail in execution of decree in a civil suit in which he was the plaintiff. The suit was dismissed and U Wilatha was ordered to pay costs which amount to over Rs. 600, the greater part of this sum being made up of Advocate's fees. It appears that he is in occupation of certain Kyaungs but it is not shown that he has any power of alienating them and even if they are poggalika property, it seems doubtful whether he could do so—Vide Maung Talok v. Ma Kon (1). The position of Buddhist monks generally with regard to the holding of property was fully considered by Mr. Burgess in Ma Pwe v. Maung Myat Tha (2), in which case he held that a man's interest in his property ceases when he is ordained as a Buddhist monk, though according to certain texts he may receive gifts after ordination.

There is, to say the least, a strong presumption that a Buddhist monk has no property over which he has rights of disposal and that presumption has not been rebutted in the present case.

We direct the appellant's release. It is a hardship on the respondent that he has no means of recovering his costs. Order XXV, rule 1, does not provide for the case and we think that the expediency of supplementing that rule so as to include cases in which a Buddhist monk is the sole plaintiff and in which the defendant applies for security for costs might be considered with advantage.

ORMOND, J.—I concur.

Per Jenkins, C. J.—A certificate granted by an Advocate-General under clause 26 of the Letters Patent should reflect his judgment and not mere surmise; it should be granted in the interests of justice after a careful consideration of all available materials; it should be in conformity, and not in conflict, with the statement of the Judge who presided at the trial; and it should formulate and give effect to the accused's real grievances. [p. 115, col. 2.]

The certificate of an Advocate-General is entitled to respect and whether he grants it after a careful consideration of all available materials or without doing so, once it is granted, the Court has to deal with the case. [p. 115, col. 2; p. 116, col. 1.]

The statement of the trial Judge as to what actually took place before him is conclusive. [p. 115, col. 1.]

Reg. v. Pestonji Dinsha, 10 B. H. O. R. 75, referred to.

Culpable homicide may not be murder, (1) where notwithstanding the mental state it is sufficient to constitute murder, still one of the exceptions applies, or (2) where the mental state, though within the description of section 299, Indian Penal Code, is not of the especial degree of criminality required by section 300 of the Code. [p. 116, col. 2.]

Queen v. Gorachand Gope, B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 443; 5 W. R. Cr. 45; 1 Ind. Jur. (N. s.) 177 and Reg. v. Govinda, 1 B. 342, referred to.

It is erroneous to suppose that a case cannot be left to the Jury under section 304, Indian Penal Code, if the exceptions enumerated in section 300 of the Code are held not to apply in the circumstances of the case. [p. 116, col. 2.]

The Judge's duty is to determine whether any evidence has been given non which the Jury could properly find the question for the party on whom the onus of proof lies, for that is a question of law. [p. 116, col. 2.]

It is not enough to say that there was some evidence. A scintilla of evidence would not justify the Judge in leaving the case to the Jury. There must be evidence on which they might reasonably and properly conclude the fact to be established. [p. 117, col. 1.]

Ryder v. Wombwell, (1864) 4 Ex. 32 at p. 38; 38 L. J. Ex. 8; 19 L. T. 491; 17 W. R. 167, referred to.

It is for the Jury to say whether and how far the evidence is to be believed. And if the facts as to which evidence is given, are such that from them a further inference of fact may legitimately be drawn, it is for the Jury to say whether that inference is to be drawn or not. But it is for the Judge to determine, subject to review, as a matter of law, whether from those facts that further inference may legitimately be drawn. [p. 117, col. 1.]

Metropolitan Railway Company v. Jackson, (1877) 3 A. C. 193; 47 L. J. C. P. 303; 37 L. T. 679; 26 W. R. 175, referred to.

The burden of proof of the existence of circumstances bringing his case within an exception is upon the accused who must support the exception by evidence giving a full and true account of the transaction from which the charge has arisen against him. [p. 117, col. 1.]

The conduct of a case by Counsel is not a negligible factor even in a Criminal Court, though it may not necessarily conclude the accused. [p. 117, col. 2.]

Rea v. Bridgwater, (1905) 1 K. B. 131 at p. 135; 74 L. J. K. B. 35; 69 J. P. 26; 63 W. R. 45; 91 L. T. 858; 21 T. L. R. 69; 20 Cox C. C. 737, referred to.

Where grave and sudden provocation was no part of the defence case in the Sessions Court nor is any direct evidence given at the trial of such grave and sudden provocation or of facts from which this exception can be legitimately inferred, the trial Judge is quite justified in excluding inquiry into the exception. In fact it would be an error on his part to lay down law as to a matter which is not legally and properly before the Jury. [p. 118, col. 1.]

Where a trial for culpable homicide is proceeding before a Jury, it is not an appropriate mode of laying down the law to discourse on all branches and departments of this complicated topic of crime. To do so is calculated to confuse the Jury and possibly to direct their deliberations into channels that have nothing to do with the case. The duty of the Judge is to lay down the law in reference to the case presented to the Court and the facts of the case, and not to perplex the minds of the Jury with considerations that are outside the legitimate scope of the inquiry. [p. 118, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is the duty of the Judge to keep the Jury within proper limits, and for this purpose, to simplify as far as he can the issues fairly and properly before the Court and direct the minds of the Jurors to those issues and those issues alone. [p. 118, col. 2.]

Queen v. Hari Giri, 10 W. R. Cr. 26; 1 B. L. R. Cr. 11, referred to.

Where there is no misdirection or other error as certified, the certificate is misconceived and the Court has no power to interfere under clause 26 of the Letters Patent. [p. 119, col. 1.]

Per Stephen, J.—If a Judge omits to draw the attention of the Jury to any matter a consideration of which might lead them to return a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, instead of murder, he commits an error, though the defence did not suggest the existence of any such matter. [p. 119, col. 2.]

EMPEROR V. UPENDRA NATH DAS.

In laying down the law it is the duty of the Judge to show how the law applies to the facts on the record. [p. 119, col. 2.]

The absence of any evidence as to the circumstances immediately preceding a homicide is not by itself a fact from which the Jury can properly infer that the homicide was committed under provocation. [p. 119, col. 2.]

It would be a serious error on the part of a Judge to put a suppositious case before the Jury, in order to establish the existence of grave and sudden provocation. [p. 119, col. 2.]

The propriety and not the possibility of an inference is the test by which a Judge should decide whether or not he should suggest a case for the consideration of the Jury on his own initiative. [p. 120, col. 1.]

But a Judge fails in his duty if he makes a case himself on which he thinks the Jury cannot properly convict. For to do so is to mislead the Jury. [p. 120, col. 1.]

It is the duty of a Judge to make a case for the accused on which he thinks that a verdict of not guilty may be properly returned, though the case has not been suggested by or on behalf of the accused. [p. 120, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is the duty of the defending Counsel to make the Judge aware of any case that he considers may be made on behalf of the accused though he has not made it himself. [p. 120, col. 2.]

When defending Counsel hears a Judge omit in summing up, a point that he considers may be made on behalf of the accused, it is a dereliction of duty on his part not to bring the point to the notice of the Judge. [p. 120, col. 2.]

Per Woodroffe, J.—If there were 8 to 1 in favour of verdict of murder, there could not be in law an unanimous verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. [p. 120, col. 2.]

A Court can and should consider a case in favour of the accused which he has not raised. [p. 120, col. 2.]

On the question whether an inference does arise in favour of the accused, the fact, that a particular defence has or has not been taken, may affect the significance of the evidence given. [p. 121, col. 1.]

In reviewing a case under clause 26 of the Letters Patent, the Court is not concerned with the merits of the case until it is established that there has been an error in law which opens out the case for the Court's judgment. [p. 121, col. 1.]

Per Mookerjee, J.—When the Court is called upon to review a case under clause 26 of the Letters Patent, it will accept as unquestionable the statement of the trial Judge as to what actually took place before him. [p. 121, col. 2.]

In section 297, Criminal Procedure Code, the expression "lay down the law" does not signify "lay down the whole law on the subject irrespective of the facts of the particular case before the Court." The reasonable construction of the section is that the Judge should lay down the law, only in so far as it bears upon the evidence adduced in the particular case. [p. 121, col. 2.]

All unnecessary and extraneous discussion and argument should be avoided by the Judge, and the summing up should be strictly confined to the evidence adduced and the mode of application of the law to such evidence. [p. 122, col. 1.]

Emperor v. Mahmudkhan, 9 Bom. L. R. 153; 5 Cr. L. J. 168, referred to.

The mere fact that Counsel for the accused has failed to present to the Court a particular aspect of the case, cannot justify an omission on the part of the Judge to draw the attention of the Jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused even on the prosecution evidence; it would be the duty of the Judge to draw the attention of the Jury to such possible view of the case on the evidence, notwithstanding that it may have escaped the Counsel for the accused. [p. 122, col. 2.]

To determine whether there was or was not evidence to go to the Jury, regard must be had to the whole course of the proceedings in the trial Court. [p. 122, col. 2.]

More non-direction is not necessarily misdirection; those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood; every summing up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the questions which have been raised by the Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence respectively. [p. 123, col. 1.]

Rea v. Stoddart, (1909) 2 Cr. App. Rep. 217 at p. 246; 73 J. P. 348; 53 S. J. 578; 25 T. L. R. 612, referred to.

Where no error of law is established, the Court is not called upon to express an opinion as to the propriety of the conviction and sentence. [p. 123, col. 1.]

Per Holmwood, J.—No error of law is committed by a Judge who refrains from directing the Jury as to exceptions which have neither been raised nor relied upon by the accused and have no basis in evidence on the record. [p. 123, col. 1.]

Where there is no evidence bringing a case directly within an exception it would be a misdirection to ask the Jury to come to a finding of fact on a hypothetical state of circumstances which do not bring the case within the exception as a matter of law. Indeed the Court must presume the absence of those circumstances. Section 105 of the Evidence Act is imperative. [p. 123, col. 2.]

It would be a most undesirable practice for Judges to put hypothetical defences not taken by the accused before the Jury and might cause serious prejudice to the accused. [p. 123, col. 2.]

Jamsheer, In the matter of, 1 C. L. R. 62 and Queen-Empress v. Chakauri, A. W. N. (1898) 209, referred to.

Section 305, Criminal Procedure Code, is mandatory. If the Judge agrees with the opinion of the majority of the Jury, he shall give judgment in accordance with such opinion. [p. 123, col. 2.]

On a verdict of murder being given, it is not competent to the Court to take any verdict on the lesser charge of culpable homicide. [p. 123, col. 2; p. 124, col. 1.]

A majority verdict with which the Judge agrees has exactly the same legal force as a unanimous verdict, and if it be a verdict of murder, the Court cannot go behind it and take any further verdict upon the facts which have been found by the Jury to amount to murder. [p. 124, col. 1.]

EMPEROR v. UPENDRA NATH DAS.

Application under Clause 26 of the Letters Patent for review on a certificate of the Advocate-General.

Messrs. E. Norton, C. Bagram and P. K. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. C. Mitter, K. S. Bonerjee and P. N. Dutt, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—Upendra Nath Das was tried at the last Criminal Sessions of this Court before Stephen, J., and a Special Jury on charges under sections 302, 304 and 326 of the Indian Penal Code. The Jury found the accused guilty under section 302 by a majority of 8 to 1. The learned Judge agreeing with them gave judgment in accordance with the opinion of the majority and sentenced the accused to death.

The Advocate-General subsequently on the representation of the accused's Counsel as to the direction given by the learned Judge in his charge to the Jury purported to grant a certificate under clause 26 of the Letters Patent. Certain alleged errors of decision on points of law were attributed to the learned Judge, but when the case came on for argument it was found that in some respects the certificate was in direct conflict with what was stated by the Judge, and in other respects was manifestly unsustainable, or failed to formulate the accused's real grievance as placed before us by Mr. Norton on his behalf. It has been decided by the leading case of Reg. v. Pestonji Dinsha (1) that the statement of the Judge who presides at the trial is conclusive and accordingly Mr. Norton was, on his own application, allowed to apply for a fresh certificate that might be in conformity with the learned Judge's statement, and might also give effect to the accused's real grievance to which I have already alluded. This grievance was in substance that the learned Judge had directed the Jury that he could not see evidence that would establish any of the exceptions set forth in section 300, Indian Penal Code, when in fact there was such evidence. The Advocate-General has now granted a fresh certificate which is in these terms:—

"I certify that in my judgment the following points of law were erroneously decided by the learned Judge and should be further considered by the High Court under the provisions of section 26 of the Letters Patent (1) 10 B. H. C. R. 75.

"1. That the learned Judge told the Jury that he 'did not see that there was any evidence of any of those provided for' (meaning exceptions to section 300, Indian Penal Code), thereby:

"(a) wrongly withdrawing from the Jury the charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under section 304 instead of leaving the case to the Jury upon that charge; and

"(b) wrongly omitting to explain to the Jury that they were the sole Judges of the evidence and that notwithstanding his expressed opinion it was competent to them upon the facts to find a verdict under section 304; and

"(c) thereby misdirecting the Jury.

"2. The learned Judge 'mentioned the existence of exceptions of such as self-defence,' but omitted to explain to the Jury the application of the exception of provocation to the facts of the case, thereby failing to comply with section 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

"3. That the Jury not being unanimous and having returned a majority verdict only on the charge under section 302, Indian Penal Code, the learned Judge erred in law in not taking their verdict on the charge under section 304: inasmuch as in the event of a unanimous verdict under section 304 the majority verdict under section 302 could not legally have been accepted.
31st August, 1914.

G. H. B. KENRICK,
Advocate-General, Bengal."

The certificate of an Advocate-General is naturally entitled to respect; the Letters Patent require that it should reflect the judgment of the Advocate-General and not mere surmise, and the certificate is presumably granted in the interests of justice after a careful consideration of all available materials. Here the error ascribed to the Judge obviously depends on the evidence in the case, and until that is perused it is difficult to see how the Judge can be said to have erred in directing the Jury as to its effect. I, therefore, feel Mr. Norton must have been under some misapprehension when he stated to the Court that no note of the evidence was read by or to the Advocate-General before he granted his certificate. But whatever may have been done, the certificate has been granted and we, therefore, have to deal with the case.

The first paragraph of the certificate imputes to the Judge (a) that he withdrew from the Jury the charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and so forth and (b) that he wrongly omitted to explain to the Jury that they were the sole Judges of the evidence and so forth. The learned trial Judge positively and definitely denies the accuracy of these allegations, and this denial is conclusive.

The second paragraph complains that the learned Judge omitted to explain to the Jury the application of the exception of provocation to the facts of the case. But the learned Judge was of opinion that there was no evidence of any of the exceptions enumerated in section 300 and among those exceptions is that which I will for brevity call grave and sudden provocation. So that in plain language what we have to see is whether the Judge misdirected the Jury when he said he did not see there was any evidence of any of the exceptions. To arrive at a conclusion as to this it is necessary to see what the law is as to culpable homicide.

Section 299 of the Indian Penal Code provides that whoever causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing death or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death commits the offence of culpable homicide.

But culpable homicide is of two degrees, it may be murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Murder is defined by section 300 and four states of mind are there indicated, any one of which is sufficient to constitute murder where death is caused. The precise significance of these four several states of mind is sometime missed, but there is no reason why this should be, for each mental state is aptly explained by one or other of the four several illustrations appended to the section.

But then the section goes on to formulate five exceptions, any one of which suffices to reduce the degree of criminality from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. These exceptions substantially are those cases (1) where the offender is deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation, (2) where the offender exercises the right of private defence in good faith, (3) where the offender is or aids a public servant acting for the advancement of public justice, (4) where there is a sudden fight and so forth, and (5) where the victim consents.

Culpable homicide may, therefore, not be murder, (1) where notwithstanding the mental state is sufficient to constitute murder, still one of the exceptions applies, or (2) where the mental state, though within the description of section 299, is not of the especial degree of criminality required by section 300. The law on this subject is fully expounded in Queen v. Gorachand Gope (2) and in Reg. v. Govinda (3), and in relation to the cases falling within the second of the above categories the essential differences are indicated by the contrast in the language of sections 300 and 304. It is then erroneous to suppose that a case cannot be left to the Jury under section 304, if the exceptions enumerated in section 300 are held not to apply in the circumstances of the case, and it is this erroneous view and the fallacy founded on it that have been the foundation of much of the argument before us. The learned Judge could, and he conclusively assures us he did, leave the case to the Jury under section 304, though he told them he could see no evidence that would establish any of the exceptions. The duty of the Judge in a trial with a Jury is defined by section 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which provides that the Judge shall proceed to charge the Jury summing up the evidence for the prosecution and the defence and laying down the law by which the Jury are to be guided.

The Judge's duties are further elaborated under section 298 and include the duty to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial.

It would, therefore, come within the duty of the Judge to determine whether any evidence had been given on which the Jury could properly find the question for the party on whom the onus of proof lies, for that is a question of law.

EMPEROR v. UPENDRA NATH DAS.

We have heard much of a scintilla of evidence and its paralysing effect on the power of the Judge to assist the Jury; that is an argument that might possibly have possessed some force in the early part of the last century. But the scintilla theory is now exploded.

It is not enough to say that there was some evidence. A scintilla of evidence clearly would not justify the Judge in leaving the case to the Jury. There must be evidence on which they might reasonably and properly conclude the fact to be established: Ryder v. Wombwell (4). This case was quoted with approval in Mertopolitan Railway Company v. Jackson (5), where Lord Blackburn said: "It is for the Jury to say whether and how far the evidence is to be believed. And if the facts as to which evidence is given, are such that from them a further inference of fact may legitimately be drawn, it is for the Jury to say whether that inference is to be drawn or not. But it is for the Judge to determine, subject to review, as a matter of law, whether from those facts that further inference may legitimately be drawn." It is true that these remarks were made in a civil case, but they are of universal application.

How then do matters stand as to this question of grave and sudden provocation? It is an exception, and the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception was upon the accused and the Court had to presume the absence of such circumstances, that is to say, it had to regard the absence of such circumstances as proved, unless and until the contrary was proved (Evidence Act, sections 105 and 104). To apply this to the circumstances of this case the Court was bound to regard the absence of grave and sudden provocation as proved until the contrary was proved.

It is admitted that there is absolutely no direct evidence proving grave and sudden provocation, and this is amply shown by the notes of evidence, the whole of which was read out to us.

But it is said there is circumstantial evidence, and so it has to be seen whether the Judge was entitled to hold as a matter of law that there were no facts from which the inference of grave and sudden provocation could legitimately be drawn.

In Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 5th edition, page 361, it is said that the distinct and proving power of circumstantial evidence depends upon its incompatibility with any reasonable hypothesis other than that of the truth of the principal fact in proof of which it is adduced, and this statement has been incorporated into the judgment of Hill, J., who delivered the principal judgment of the Full Bench in Hurjee Mull v. Imam Ali Sircar (6).

In approaching the question whether the Judge rightly decided as a matter of law that there was no evidence of any of the exceptions, it is relevant to consider how the accused's case was placed before the Court, for, I think, this may fairly and properly be taken into consideration.

The conduct of a case by Counsel is not a negligible factor even in a Criminal Court, though it may not necessarily conclude the accused, and that it is not without its influence is forcibly illustrated by the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice in Rex v. Bridgwater (7), with which all the Judges hearing the case concurred.

It is admitted by Mr. Norton who appeared for the accused at the Sessions, that the case he made was that his client had no hand in the killing of Jamini, and that he never suggested and certainly never argued that the exception of grave and sudden provocation had any application to the case. He has very fairly stated before us that to have advanced the defence of grave and sudden provocation would have been in conflict with his instructions. His argument in the Sessions Court was that the case was one of murder or nothing, and he pressed upon the Jury their responsibility if they convicted the accused of the offence of murder on what he regarded as the meagre and unsatisfactory testimony before the Court. This may be a very potent argument when skilfully handled before a Calcutta Jury and no one would be a better Judge of its value than Mr. Norton. The whole of the evidence has been placed before us and I can find nothing in the cross-examination of any of the prosecution witnesses that is not in harmony with this.

When the Judge summed up, he expressed his inability to see any evidence that brought the exceptions in section 300 into play, and though this was done in the presence of Counsel for the accused, no protest was advanced, nor was any suggestion made to the Judge of a defect in this charge or of a disregard of any of the lines of defence.

In the argument before us, it is candidly admitted that the real purpose even now is not to have it adjudged that there was grave and sudden provocation and so to have the quality of the offence reduced, but to obtain a decision that no crime at all has been proved against Upendra Nath Das; in other words, to obtain a decision which would of necessity negative the theory of grave and sudden provocation as applied to him.

The accused apparently made no statement in the Sessions Court, but his statement before the Committing Magistrate was, "I know nothing about this matter, what shall I say about it?"

I think then in view of all these circumstances it may fairly be said that grave and sudden provocation was no part of the defence case in the Sessions Court, and this, I think, has to be borne in mind when estimating the propriety of the Judge's intimation that he did not see that there was any evidence of the exceptions.

In my opinion this decision in the circumstances was right, and I think the Judge correctly laid down the law.

In the absence by any direct evidence of grave and sudden provocation or of facts from which this exception could be legitimately inferred—for I hold that there were no such facts—it would, in my opinion, have been an error on the part of the learned Judge to have laid down the law as to a matter which was not legally and not properly before the Jury. Where a trial for culpable homicide is proceeding before a Jury, it is not an appropriate mode of laying down the law to discourse on all branches and departments of this complicated topic of crime: to do so is, I think, calculated to confuse the Jury and possibly to direct their deliberations into channels that have nothing to do with the case. The duty of the Judge is (in my opinion) to lay down the law in reference to the case presented to the Court and the facts of the case, and not to perplex the minds of the Jury with considerations that are outside the legitimate scope of the inquiry. It is, I think, the duty of the Judge to keep the Jury within proper limits, and for this purpose, to simplify as far as he can the issues fairly and properly before the Court, and direct the minds of the Jurors to those issues and those issues alone.

To apply these remarks to the facts of the case, the Judge was, I think, justified on the evidence and on the facts before him in excluding inquiry into the exceptions, for their applicability had not been made even the matter of conjecture or surmise before him, much less the subject of proof or positive defence.

There is authority in this Court which fully supports the view taken by the Judge at the trial. In Queen v. Hari Giri (8) it was said that to give the accused the benefit of exception 1, it ought to be shown distinctly not only that the act was done under the influence of some feeling which took away from the accused all control over his actions, but that that feeling had an adequate cause.

And in Jumsheer, In the matter of (9) it was ruled in regard to the exception of private defence which stands on the same footing, that it must be supported by evidence giving a full and true account of the transaction from which the charge against an accused person arises. "No accused person," it is said, "can at the same time deny committing an act and justify it. The law does not admit of justification by putting forward hypothetical cases; it must be by proof of actual facts." No case is reported which throws a doubt on these decisions. It is not, however, necessary for me on this occasion to go to the whole length of this last decision, for I am content to hold, on the general principles I have endeavoured to formulate, that there was no error in anything decided at the trial in reference to grave and sudden provocation.

But there is another erroneous decision imputed to the learned Judge by the certificate and it is expressed in these terms:

"3. That the Jury not being unanimous and having returned a majority verdict only on the charge under section 302, Indian Penal Code, the learned Judge erred in law in not taking their verdict on the charge under section 304, inasmuch as in the event of a unanimous verdict under section 304 the majority verdict under section 302 could not legally have been accepted.

I have no hesitation in holding that the law as propounded in this paragraph is erroneous. It was hardly made the subject of serious argument before us, and it could not be, for it is manifestly opposed to the law.

The result then is that the certificate granted is misconceived, in part it is opposed to the learned Judge's conclusive statement of what occurred, and in no respect can I find that it discloses an error in the decision of a point of law decided by the Judge at the trial.

In this view of the case, it is not within my power to re-open the case, and I regard myself as not entitled to express any opinion as to its merits. In fact I am not in a position to deal with the merits, for they have not been discussed before us, nor have those conditions been established on which alone they could be considered by us.

Our powers are circumscribed, for we can only act in conformity with clause 26 of the Letters Patent. If there was no misdirection or other error as certified, the certificate was misconceived, and we have no power to interfere.

If the merits of the case or the sentence are to be further considered, then that must be not by this Court, but by some other authority vested with the requisite power.

STEPHEN, J.—I agree generally with what the Chief Justice has said: but I wish to add a few words rather to explain the course that I took in this case than to prove that it was correct according to decided cases that were not in my mind at the time I took it.

The error in my proceeding certified by the Advocate-General is, as I understand it, that I omitted to direct the attention of the Jury to a defence that might have been raised on the facts proved in the trial. This defence was that though the facts proved might show that the accused had killed the deceased in such circumstances that his act fell under one of the first four paragraphs of section 300, Indian Penal Code, yet they might be taken as showing that it also came within the scope of exception 1; and that if the Jury thought that this was so, the offence would be reduced from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Instead of doing this, I "omitted to explain to the Jury the application of the exception of provocation to the facts of the case," which is a correct statement of what I did, in that I advisedly did not tell the Jury that grave and sudden provocation had anything to do with the case.

If I omitted to draw the attention of the Jury to any matter a consideration of which might properly lead them to return a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, instead of murder, I no doubt committed an error, though the defence did not suggest the existence of any such matter. If, however, I had told the Jury the existence of grave and sudden provocation had anything to do with the case, it would have been my duty to point out to them the evidence that supported the exception, since in laying down the law it is the duty of the Judge to show how the law applies to the facts on the record. This would have been impossible, as I had no doubt that there was no such evidence in the case; for the absence of any evidence as to the circumstances immediately preceding the killing of the deceased is not by itself a fact from which the Jury could properly infer the existence of the circumstances constituting provocation. In order to establish the existence of grave and sudden provocation it would have been necessary to put a suppositious case before the Jury, by which I mean a case founded on suppositions as to facts, and not on evidence. In my opinion it would be a serious error on the part of a Judge to do any such thing. If I was wrong in thinking that there was no evidence on which the Jury could properly find the existence of grave and sudden provocation, again I was in error. But on reconsidering the matter I am of opinion that I was not wrong in taking the view that I did.

I have said that absence of evidence was a fact from which the Jury could not properly infer provocation, for I consider that the propriety and not the possibility of an inference is the test by which a Judge should decide whether or not he should suggest a case for the consideration of the Jury on his own initiative. A Judge always puts any case to the Jury, which is seriously made on behalf of the accused even though he may consider it unfounded or even absurd. But he fails in his duty if he makes a case himself on which he thinks the Jury cannot properly convict. For to do this is to mislead the Jury.

These were the general considerations which caused me to act as I did. And in so acting I have no doubt that I was acting in accordance with the rules followed by Judges in England in charging Juries, and I believe that the same rules have always been followed by Judges in this Court and in the Mofussil. And I have no doubt that these rules should be followed here; for the law as to murder, and its reduction to manslaughter or culpable homicide, are practically the same here that they are in England. In England manslaughter is rightly not charged in addition to murder, unless it is thought that it ought to be considered as a specific offence. And if it is not charged, a Judge does not refer to it unless it is alleged, or is in his opinion indicated by the facts proved. The view of the law indicated by the Advocate-General implies that the Judge is to perform the functions that are properly performed by defending Counsel, a course which would be fatal to the proper discharge of his duty.

In conclusion, I may state the following propositions, which I consider elementary, but which seem to have been lost sight of in this case. It is the duty of a Judge to make a case for the accused on which he thinks that a verdict of not guilty may be properly returned, though the case has not been suggested by or on behalf of the accused. It is the duty of the defending Counsel to make the Judge aware of any case that he considers may be made on behalf of the accused, though he has not made it himself. When defending Counsel hears a Judge omit in summing up a point that he considers may be made on behalf of the accused, it is a dereliction of duty on his part not to bring the point to the notice of the Judge.

WOODROFFE, J.—As regards clause (1) of the certificate, the allegations there made are not in accordance with the learned Judge's statement. Mr. Justice Stephen says that he neither directed the Jury that there was no evidence of grave and sudden provocation nor did he say that he himself saw no such evidence, that is, I understand, this exception was not specially named in this connection. Further, so far as it refers to grave and sudden provocation, this point is affected by the remarks made later as regards that special defence. The point here taken, therefore, fails. The ground in clause (3) also, in my opinion, fails. If there were 8 to 1 in favour of a verdict of murder, there could not be in law an unanimous verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. And if such a verdict had been returned, it would have shown that the Jury did not understand the law. Stephen, J., tells us that under his orders no verdict was taken on the second and third counts. The trial was, therefore, in this respect in order.

There remains, then, the ground in clause (2). Stephen, J., tells us that he said to the Jury there were exceptions, but that he need not tell the Jury about them, and that he said this because, in his opinion, there was, in fact, no evidence of grave and sudden provocation or other case within the exceptions. The question then resolves itself into this: was there or not such evidence upon the depositions which have been read to us? It is to be observed in the first case that no such defence was raised by the accused or his experienced Counsel. I am not prepared to hold as a general proposition of universal applicability that a Court cannot and should not consider a case in favour of the accused which he has not raised. For such a case may properly arise on the prosecution evidence, and if it did, I myself should put it to the jury for their consideration, whatever line might have been taken by the accused or his Counsel. But on the question whether an inference does arise in favour of the accused, the fact that a particular defence has or has not been taken, may affect the significance of the evidence given. Mr. Norton has argued that if the learned Judge had discussed this question of grave and sudden provocation, it is possible the Jury might have arrived at a different verdict. I cannot say that this is impossible. For Juries are sometimes ready to seize any point which may relieve them from a verdict possibly involving a capital sentence. But what we have to see is whether the learned Judge was bound in law to do so. I hold that the alleged error of law is not established on the ground, firstly, that this special defence was not raised by the accused, and secondly, that reading the evidence in the light of that fact it cannot be said to be such as to have cast on the Court the duty of asking the Jury to consider whether the evidence disclosed circumstances which would have established such a defence had it been specifically raised.

There is indeed an air of unreality about the contention. Mr. Norton does not even now ask us to hold that his client committed the act charged under grave and sudden provocation. What he asks us to do is to hold that there was a misdirection on this point which would enable him to argue the case on the facts, to show that the accused never committed the act at all, and that he has been found guilty of the offence with which he was charged on practically the testimony of a single witness whose evidence he impugns. With the merits, however, we are not concerned until it is established that there has been an error in law which opens out the case for our judgment. The same ground precludes me from dealing with the question of sentence, which may arise on the facts above stated, and the possibility, if the verdict be correct, of the act having been committed without premeditation on a sudden access of passion. This is, however, a matter for the Crown to consider. I can only hold that no error of law has been shown which entitles me to re-open a verdict or to consider a sentence which has already been passed.

MOOKERJEE, J.—On anxious consideration of the arguments addressed to us in this matter, I have formed the opinion that the application for review must be dismissed. The reasons for this conclusion are identical with those stated by Woodroffe, J., in the judgment he has just read, and I shall accordingly touch briefly upon the main points in issue.

It is well settled that when the Court is called upon to review a case under clause 26 of the Letters Patent, it will accept as unquestionable the statement of the trial Judge as to what actually took place before him: Reg. v. Pestonji Dinsha (1); Reg. v. Grant (10); Everett v. Youells (11); Gibbs v. Pike (12); Reg. v. Mellor (13). From this point of view, the certificate granted by the Advocate-General must be deemed to have been based in part on a misapprehension of the facts. The two questions which remain for consideration are, first, was it misdirection not to explain to the Jury the scope and effect of the first exception in section 300 of the Indian Penal Code; and secondly, was Stephen, J., bound to take the verdict of the Jury on the second count, namely, that of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

As regards the first point, it is to be observed that section 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires the Judge to charge the Jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence and laying down the law by which the Jury are to be guided. In the present case, it is not disputed that the Judge did lay down the law, but it is argued that this exposition of the law was imperfect, as he did not explain to the Jury the bearing of the first exception in section 300. I do not think it can reasonably be maintained that the expression "lay down the law" signifies "lay down the whole law on the subject irrespective of the facts of the particular case before the Court." If this view were not adopted, the inference would follow that in every case where an accused is charged with an offence, say the offence of murder, it would be incumbent upon the trial Judge to lay before the Jury an exhaustive commentary on the law of murder in all its possible aspects; he would thus have to deal with matters entirely foreign to the inquiry before the Court and the Jury would be distracted by the discussion of legal questions which could be of no assistance in the solution of the problem laid before them. The reasonable construction of section 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code is that the Judge should lay down the law, only in so far as it bears upon the evidence adduced in the particular case; as has been said, all unnecessary and extraneous discussion and argument should be avoided by the Judge, and the summing up should be strictly confined to the evidence adduced and the mode of application of the law to such evidence: Queen v. Nobo Kisto Ghose (14). The case of Emperor v. Mahmadkhan (15), to which reference has been made on behalf of the prisoner, is really not opposed to this view. Consequently, the mere fact that Stephen, J., did not explain to the Jury specifically the effect of the first exception in section 300 does not show that there has been a misdirection. The petitioner has to establish that the question of grave and sudden provocation did require consideration in the circumstances of this case. I am unable to hold, upon the notes of the evidence which have been read to the Court, that the question did properly arise at all. The trend of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses points unmistakably to the conclusion that the case for the defence was that the accused was not in the house when the woman was killed; the defence, presented by an able and experienced Counsel, was that the case was one of murder or nothing at all. It was never hinted before the trial Judge that the case might possibly be one of grave and sudden provocation. Indeed, even in this Court, although it has been strenuously argued that the Judge should have invited the attention of the Jury to the first exception in section 300, Counsel for the prisoner has frankly intimated that if he can induce the Court to hold that there has been a misdirection and then to examine the case on the merits, he would argue, not that the accused was guilty of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder because the case fell within section 300, exception (1), but that the accused has been falsely charged and has had no hand in the commission of the crime. Such a position as this seems to me to be entirely untenable. I wish, however, to dissociate myself from the proposition that the mere fact that Counsel for the accused has failed to present to the Court a particular aspect of the case, can justify an omission on the part of the Judge to draw the attention of the Jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused even on the prosecution evidence; it would be the duty of the Judge, in my opinion, to draw the attention of the Jury to such possible view of the case on the evidence, notwithstanding that it may have escaped the Counsel for the accused. The question, consequently, arises, whether, on a fair and reasonable reading of the evidence, we can say in this case that the question of grave and sudden provocation did require consideration and should have been put to the Jury. I am of opinion that the answer must be in the negative. The Counsel for the prisoner has dwelt on his past history and his relations with the deceased woman, and has put forward a plausible and possibly a captivating theory that he could not have killed her except under grave and sudden provocation. It is not disputed that there is no direct evidence on the point, and although circumstantial evidence might be sufficient to justify the plea if taken, I see no answer to the very forcible argument of the Standing Counsel that to determine whether there was or was not evidence to go to the Jury, regard must be had to the whole course of the proceedings in the trial Court. We cannot further overlook the provisions of section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act, illustration (b) whereof has an obvious application to this matter. From these points of view, I think Stephen, J., was fully justified in the opinion he expressed, namely, that none of the exceptions in section 300 (it is immaterial that he mentioned specifically only one) had any application to the case. It is erroneous to say that he withdrew from the Jury the charge under section 304; that charge remained, and it was open to the Jury, if they were not satisfied as to the existence of any of the four alternatives specified in the substantive portion of section 300, to return a verdict of not guilty on the first count and guilty on the second count. What Stephen,

EMPEROR v. UPENDRA NATH DAS.

J., omitted to do was to lay down the law as to grave and sudden provocation; this omission did not constitute misdirection in the circumstance of this case. As Lord Alverstone, C. J., said in Rex v. Stoddart (16), quoting with approval the words of Lord Esher, M. R., in Abrath v. North-East Ry. Co. (17), mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection; those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood; every summing up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the questions which have been raised by the Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence respectively.

As regards the second point, it is plain that after the majority of the Jury had returned a verdict of guilty of murder, they could not possibly, without gross inconsistency, bring in a unanimous verdict of guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The direction given by Stephen, J., in this respect was obviously right.

In the view I take, no error of law has been established, and, consequently, the Court is not called upon to express an opinion as to the propriety of the conviction and sentence, although as Woodroffe, J., has pointed out, if the Court could examine the case on the merits, there might be matters for careful consideration.

HOLMWOOD, J.—I desire to express my entire concurrence with all that has fallen from my Lord the Chief Justice as regards the certificate, the law and the facts in this case. But I wish to say a few words on the only two points which are now before us.

I have never had any doubt, and I still have no doubt, that no error of law is committed by a Judge who refrains from directing the Jury as to exceptions which have neither been raised nor relied upon by the accused and have no basis in evidence on the record. As to what is necessary to bring a case legally within the exception of grave and sudden provocation this is very clearly laid down in numerous English and Indian cases of which I need only refer to the case of Queen v. Hari Giri (8).

Where there is no evidence bringing the case directly within any such exception it would, in my opinion, be a misdirection to ask the Jury to come to a finding of fact on a hypothetical state of circumstances which do not bring the case within the exception as a matter of law. Indeed the Court must presume the absence of those circumstances. Section 105 of the Evidence Act is imperative.

It would be a most undesirable practice for Judges to put hypothetical defences not taken by the accused before the Jury, and might cause serious prejudice to the accused. The practice has been condemned both by this Court and by the Allahabad Court: Jamsheer, In the matter of (9) and Queen-Empress v. Chakauri (18).

The point seems to me so elementary as to admit of no argument.

I am unable to understand how the learned Advocate-General raised the point, since he did not and could not certify that there was evidence sufficient in law to bring the case within the exception of grave and sudden provocation, and until that is established as a matter of law, there is no case to go to the Jury whose function is only to draw the further inference that the provocation found to exist in law is sufficiently grave and sudden to cause the accused to lose the power of self-control. This was really the only point that was seriously contended before us.

As regards the point which was raised as to the necessity of taking a verdict on the charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder when the original verdict on the charge of murder is only a majority verdict, the contention is clearly contrary to the plain provisions of the Code. Section 305 is mandatory. If the Judge agrees with the opinion of the majority of the Jury, he shall give judgment in accordance with such opinion. On a verdict of murder being given, it is certainly not competent to the Court to take any verdict on the lesser charge of culpable homicide.

It would not only be superfluous, but impossible—since if the Jury found the accused guilty under the minor charge, it would negative the verdict of murder and the same res it would follow on a verdict of “not guilty” of culpable homicide. It is admitted that to take a verdict on the charge under section 326 would have been superfluous. A majority verdict with which the Judge agrees has exactly the same legal force as a unanimous verdict, and if it be a verdict of murder, the Court cannot go behind it and take any further verdict upon the facts which have been found by the Jury to amount to murder.

I am, therefore, of opinion that no error of law has been established.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Bom. Act IV of 1887), ss. 4, 5—Telegrams announcing certain events, whether instruments of gaming—Papers used by brokers for recording transactions.

A telegram announcing the happening or not happening of an event upon which wagers have previously been made cannot possibly be an instrument of gaming within the meaning of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act. Nor can such pieces of paper as brokers may carry with them for the purpose of recording a transaction between their clients be brought within the definition of instruments of gaming or wagering.

Criminal application for revision from the decision of the Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the conviction and sentence passed by the first Class Magistrate of Ahmedabad.

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—Speaking for myself I cannot bring myself to hold that a telegram, for example, announcing the happening or not happening of an event upon which wagers have previously been made can possibly be an instrument of gaming, i. e., an article used either as the subject or the means of wagering. Again, I cannot believe that upon exhaustive and correct logical analysis such pieces of paper as brokers may carry with them for the purpose of recording a transaction between their clients could be brought within the definition of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act as instruments of gaming or wagering. There is, however, a considerable body of case-law the other way and the learned Magistrate and the Judge below have found as a fact, no doubt much influenced by those authorities, that certain papers in this case were instruments of gaming. If I were to press my own doubts, it would probably mean that we should have to refer the case to a Full Bench and that I should certainly not feel disposed to do, sitting in criminal revision in a case of this kind, where I am satisfied that no substantial injustice has been done and that whatever technical difficulties may be thrown in the way of the application of the Act by its peculiar language, the very evil which the Act meant to cure existed in this case and has been struck at by the decision which we are called upon to revise.

I am, therefore, prepared to agree with my learned brother, who, I understand, does not share my doubts to the same extent as to the theoretical correctness of the decision of the Courts below, that this is not a proper case for us to interfere with upon revision.

I would, therefore, reject the applicant's application and confirm the conviction and sentence.

MACLEOD, J.—I agree with my learned brother. In this case we should not interfere in revision with the decision of the Court below.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 193 (1), 226, 227—Sessions Court, power of, to add charges for offences different from those specified by Committing Magistrate—'Charge', meaning of.

The word 'charge' in the Criminal Procedure Code means a whole series of counts or heads of charge for various offences. [p. 126, col. 1.]

Queen-Empress v. Appa Subhana, 8 B. 200, referred to.

Although under section 193 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, a Court of Session cannot take cognizance of any offence as a Court of original jurisdiction, regard must be had to the exception contained in the words "except as otherwise expressly provided in this Code." [p. 125, col. 2]

Sections 226 and 227 of the Code give the Court of Session power to add a charge for any offence different from that specified by the Committing Magistrate disclosed in the evidence recorded before the Magistrate or at the trial by itself, subject only to the consideration of prejudice to the accused. Appeal from an order of Mr. Fawcett, Additional Judicial Commissioner, Sind.

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for the Accused.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The three appellants have been convicted (1) Ibrahim of grievous hurt and Abdulla of simple hurt caused to Jalal.

(2) Dodo of grievous hurt caused to Mukhim.

(3) Dodo of simple hurt caused to Janu.

(4) Ibrahim and Abdulla of simple hurt caused to Khalikdino.

Offences (1) and (2) were included in the charge on which the accused had been committed to the Court of Session. Offences (3) and (4) were not included in that charge, but were added by the Sessions Court under section 226 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

It is objected that the Sessions Court had no jurisdiction to add charges for hurt caused to Janu and Khalikdino when the charge framed by the Magistrate and on which the accused were committed referred only to injuries inflicted on Jalal and Mukhim; and that in so doing it assumed jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offences committed on Janu and Khalikdino in contravention of section 193 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 193 (1) enacts: "Except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, no Court of Session shall take cognizance of any offence as a Court of original jurisdiction unless the accused has been committed to it by a Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf."

The section should, no doubt, be strictly interpreted and means committed to the Court of Session for trial for the offence of which that Court takes cognizance. But even so, it is nevertheless subject to the exception contained in the word "except as otherwise expressly provided in this Code." The question of jurisdiction, therefore, depends upon whether section 226 authorized the Court to add charges in respect of the hurts to Janu and Khalikdino.

The combined effect of sections 226 to 231 is to confer a very wide jurisdiction upon the Court of Session. At the beginning of the trial, if the Judge finds that the Magistrate has omitted to frame a charge, he may supply the omission and frame the charge that is made out on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate. If the charge framed by the Magistrate is imperfect or erroneous, the Judge may alter or add to the charge having regard to the offences disclosed in the evidence recorded by the Magistrate. Again, if in the course of the trial evidence is recorded which shows that the offences are different in character from those charged or that other offences also have been committed, the Judge may alter the charge or add to the charge and include the offences so disclosed. The material on which the Judge acts under section 226 is the evidence recorded by the Magistrate and under section 227 is the evidence recorded before himself in the course of the trial.

In Queen-Empress v. Appa Subhana Mendre (1) Sargent. C. J., considered that the word "charge" meant charge of a specific offence, but Scott, J., in a dissenting (1) 8 B. 200.

DODO V. EMPEROR.

judgment held that the word "charge" meant a whole series of counts or heads of charge for various offences, so that even the word "alter" gave power to add additional counts to the charge. This construction was evidently approved by the Legislature when the words "or add to" were added in section 227 by the Code of 1898. But even Sargent, C. J., admitted, under section 226 the Court could frame new charges. This is indeed evident from the fact that under that section the Court can frame a charge where no charge at all has been framed by the Committing Magistrate.

It seems clear, therefore, that either under section 226 or section 227 charges for different offences may be added to the original charge.

The subsequent sections 228 to 231 do not imply that this power is limited in any way. On the contrary the provisions for adjourning the trial, for directing a new trial, for recalling witnesses and even for obtaining sanction to the prosecution, indicate very clearly that there need not necessarily be any connection between the added charge and the charge as originally framed. The principle underlying these sections was well stated by West, J., in Reg. v. Govind Babli Raul (2) with reference to the corresponding section of the Code of 1872:—

"The intention of the Legislature is that whenever an amendment of the charge in any way tends to the prejudice of the prisoner, steps should be taken to prevent that consequence arising by ordering a new trial, or suspending the trial going on, to enable him to make his defence or to examine any material witness or to recall any witness already examined.....It is only in the case of charges clearly related that a trial goes on forthwith after an amendment."

This is the correct principle, and this statement of it shows that the added charge need not be clearly related to the original charge. Indeed it may be so remote from the original charge that a fresh trial is necessary or sanction is necessary for the prosecution.

But on the other hand, it seems equally clear that the added charge must be for an offence made out by the evidence recorded before the Magistrate if the charge is added under section 226, or by the evidence recorded before the Court of Session in the course of the trial if the charge is added under section 227. This must necessarily be so, for this evidence is the only material on which the Court can act. This point is well illustrated by the case of Mutirakal Kovilagatha Rama Varma Raja v. Queen (3). The accused was committed for trial for an offence under section 202, Indian Penal Code. He pleaded guilty in the Sessions and was convicted on this plea, but the Judge then added a charge under sections 201 and 511, Indian Penal Code, tendered a pardon to a female co-accused and examined her as a witness and then convicted the accused of the added charge also. It was held that the Judge had acted without jurisdiction, for there was no material in the evidence recorded before the Magistrate, or indeed in the evidence recorded before the Court of Session, at the time of the amendment of the charge to justify the added count in the charge. As a matter of fact the Judge acted not on evidence, but on an impression he had derived in the course of the trial of another case and this he could not do, for under section 193 his jurisdiction is confined to the case committed by the Magistrate.

I only know of two cases which run counter to the view I take of these sections. The first is Queen-Empress v. Kharga (4), and there it was held that if the charge on which the accused was committed was good in the sense that it specified an offence of which he was subsequently convicted, section 226 did not justify the addition of another count, for the charge was not "erroneous" or "imperfect". But if the word charge in section 226 means the series of counts or heads of charge, then surely the charge which omitted one count would be incomplete and, therefore, imperfect. The case is practically overruled by Queen-Empress v. Gordon (5), where the Court approved of the dissentient judgment of Scott, J., in Queen-Empress v. Appa Subhana (1). The second case is that of Birendra Lal v. Emperor (6). There the accused had been committed for trial for an offence under section 471 for using a forged document, and the Sessions Court added a charge of attempting to cheat as the accused had presented the forged document to the Jassore Loan Office to induce the office to grant a loan. The High Court held that the added charge was bad and their reasons are contained in the following extract from the judgment: "The prosecution was instituted by a person who had no concern with the Jassore Loan Office and whose complaint related to antecedent events. He could not be heard upon a complaint with which the Loan Office was concerned, but did not offer to prosecute, and the Magistrate did not commit the accused with reference to an offence committed against the Loan Office. The Sessions Court is not a Court of original jurisdiction and though vested with large powers for amending and adding to charges, can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the.....indictment." Now the first reason given here that the complainant could not file a complaint because the Jassore Loan Office had not prosecuted, is clearly wrong. The offence of cheating is not one of the offences referred to in sections 195 to 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code. And except as to such offences any person may set the law in motion by a complaint, even though he is not personally interested or affected by that offence. In re Ganesh Narayan Sathe (7). It is also erroneous to deny the Sessions Court original jurisdiction. It has original jurisdiction but exercises it on commitment made by a Magistrate. The second and the only other reason is that the power of the Sessions Court of amending and adding to charges is limited to "the immediate subject of the indictment." It is difficult to attach any definite meaning to this expression. It cannot mean the particular offence specified in the charge, for the judgment uses the phrase "adding to charges" which must then mean adding counts or heads of charge in respect of other offences. It might mean the same transaction, and in that view the added charges can only be of offences connected with the original offence under section 235 by being one of a series of offences forming the same transaction. But there are two objections to this construction of the phrase: (1) that the offence of attempting to cheat was part of the same transaction as the forgery for the accused forged the mortgage-deed and then tried to raise the money on it and (2) that this limitation is superfluous, for unless the added charge was for an offence arising out of the same transaction, section 233 would be a bar to the charges being tried together.

The case of Birendra Lal v. Emperor (6), therefore, affords no assistance in the construction of sections 226 and 227 of the Code. Those sections seem to me to give the Court of Session power to add a charge for any offence disclosed in the evidence recorded before the Magistrate or at the trial, subject only to the consideration of prejudice to the accused. If there is prejudice to the accused then the subsequent procedure is indicated by sections 229 to 231.

Here the added charges were in respect of offences which were disclosed in the evidence taken before the Magistrate and there was no prejudice to the accused, for the learned Judge very properly asked the accused if they objected to the trial proceeding on the added charges and their Pleader replied that there was no objection.

No appeal lies from the convictions (1) and (2) in respect of injuries to Jalal and Mukhim, for the convictions were on the verdict of the Jury and no misdirection is alleged. The appeal on the merits only refers to the convictions (3) and (4), where the trial was with the aid of Assessors. The case of the appellants is that Ibrahim went to remonstrate with Jalal and that Jalal beat him, that Ibrahim struck Jalal and Khalikdino in self-defence, that accused Dodo and Abdulla went to rescue Ibrahim and were attacked and also struck Jann and Khalikdino in self-defence. We are unable, however, to accept this version of the fight although some of the witnesses are inclined to favour the accused. The main facts point to the accused being the aggressors, for they had a grievance about the girl, who was not given as promised to Dodo; they are brothers and, therefore, it is more probable that they all came together to make good their

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—On the evening of November 25th last, at or about 7-30, two bombs were exploded in a lane off Harrison Road known as Mussalmanpara Lane. It resulted in the death of a Police officer, Ram Bhujan Singh, and in severe injuries to two other Police officers, Monoranjan Chuckerbutty and Someswar Dutt Panday, and also to a man named Harabilas Ghosal.

Of the two bombs one was thrown through the open street door into a room of the house No. 10-4-1, Mussalmanpara Lane, the other struck the front wall of the house to the west of that door. It is the prosecution's case that both bombs were thrown by a party of three or more Bengali youths in furtherance of the common intention of all and that the accused Nogendra Nath Sen Gupta not only was of the party, but actually threw one of the bombs. Eight charges have accordingly been framed against the accused Nogendra. Four impute to him that he himself threw a bomb, the other four impute to him that if he did not throw the bomb, still he was a member of the party that did and that this establishes his guilt. Objection was taken on behalf of the accused that even on the case made by the prosecution the charge in reliance on section 34 of the Indian Penal Code could not be sustained. We, however, overruled the objection and have heard the case on the merits. The charges as drawn would seem to impute to the accused that he was

Criminal Law Amendment Act (XIV of 1908), s. 9—Special Bench of High Court—Powers—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 302—Charge—Trial—Counsel for the prosecution, duty of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342—Local inspection by Court—Benefit of the doubt—Guilt—Innocence—Acquittal.

An accused can be charged, in the same trial, with an offence under section 302 as also an offence under section 302 read with section 34. [p. 128, col. 2.]

It is the duty of the Counsel for the Crown to assist the Court in arriving at the truth and not to secure a conviction. [p. 129, col. 2.]

In a trial before the Special Bench an accused may be given an opportunity of explaining the circumstances appearing against him and a truthful explanation coming from the accused cannot injure him, innocent as he is presumed to be. [p. 129, col. 2.]

the thrower of both bombs, for they charged him with having directly caused the injury both to Harabilas Ghosal and to the other three men, though it is fairly obvious that the injury to Harabilas was occasioned by the bomb that fell within the room and that to the other three by that which struck the wall. In the argument before us, the case made was that the accused threw the bomb that struck the wall or the second bomb as it has been termed. This view rests on the evidence of Someswar. He describes the man who threw the bomb as wearing an alwan and this is probable; but according to evidence on which reliance can safely be placed, the accused had no alwan that evening. Apart from this, we regard Someswar as a patently unreliable witness, as will later appear, and it would be absolutely wrong to base any conclusion on an identification purporting to be made by him. Beyond this, there is no evidence that could justify the conviction of the accused on the first, third, fifth or seventh charges.

It has then to be seen whether the bomb was thrown by a party of men and whether the accused was of that party. It is beyond question that two bombs were thrown and that there were two or more men of the party by whom they were thrown. The object of the attack was undoubtedly Basanta Kumar Chatterji, a Deputy Superintendent in the C. I. D. and the occupier of No. 10/4/1, Mussalmanpara Lane. Those by whom this dastardly attack has been made have been assumed to be members of a society described as anarchist. With the commendable fairness that has marked his conduct of this case, Sir Satyendra Sinha has stated that, apart from what is disclosed in these proceedings, the prosecution know nothing of the accused that would associate him with any anarchical movement. At the same time, we know that he is a student of the Presidency College residing in the Oxford Mission Hostel, and it is apparent that he is as far removed from the class of degenerates as a lad well can be.

Undoubtedly, the accused was in the immediate neighbourhood of the explosions; he admits as much, and the injuries he received point to the same conclusion. Could he, then, have been there consistently with his innocence? To ascertain this, it was thought that the accused should be asked to give his explanation, and, notwithstanding an objection taken by Mr. James, we thought and still think that was the right course to follow. An innocent man cannot well injure himself by a truthful explanation, and it would be deplorable were we to hold that it was beyond the competence of the Court, when dealing with a case under Act XIV of 1908, to give an accused an opportunity of explaining the circumstances appearing against him. And there is high authority in favour of a similar view, for Sir Alfred Wills has recently cited with approval the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal that in the case of an innocent man the failure even to offer evidence is an unwise course (Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, page 102). The explanation in this case has certainly been of service to the accused, for, taken with the prosecution's admission as to the place at which the accused's brother resided last November, it demonstrates that there was nothing impossible or even unreasonable in the accused's presence in the lane. The fact, therefore, that the accused was injured in the lane, though calculated to arouse suspicion if unexplained, cannot be regarded in itself as incompatible with his innocence. This was recognised in the argument before us, and so the prosecution rely on other facts as inculpatory of the accused, and with these we will now deal.

The first suggestion was that the accused was at the Alipore Magistrate's Court on the 24th of November in circumstances which were suggestive of a design against Deputy Superintendent Basanta Kumar Chatterji, either immediate or prospective. Norendro Nath Mukerji, differing in this from Basanta, purports to identify the accused. We were far from being satisfied with this evidence, and the testimony of Mr. Holmes of the Oxford Mission amply justified our doubt. Mr. Holmes spoke with caution, but his testimony is, on that account, entitled to the greater weight. And we would here remark that it was certainly right of the prosecution to call Mr. Holmes, for the duty of Counsel for the Crown is not to secure a conviction but to assist the Court in arriving at the truth. We are satisfied that this attempt to create a prejudice against the accused has no foundation in fact.

Next, there is the evidence of Monoranjan and Someswar. That they were present is beyond doubt, but an essential part of the story each has told is manifestly untrue,

Monoranjan's testimony would place him in a part of the lane not far from the dust-bin, and it is in reference to that position that he describes the incidents and individuals he professes to have observed. He would place the party of bomb-throwers nearer the actual explosions than he himself stood. And yet we find that while he is most seriously injured, they—if the accused be excluded—apparently escaped untouched. Nor is this all, for the evidence, furnished by the scene itself after the explosions, affords cogent proof that Monoranjan was, at the time of the explosions, not near the dust-bin, but close to the lamp-post, standing at the corner to the east of the street door. It is our belief that this misdescription was deliberate and was an endeavour to improve the case by supporting the story that Someswar has since placed before the Court. If regard be had to probabilities, then we agree with the argument that to secure escape from injury and capture, the most favourable position for throwing the bombs would be slightly to the north of the dust-bin, and this would be naturally followed by flight towards the east. The prosecution evidence shows that two youths did actually take that course. The traces of preparations for the attack also support this view. Someswar swears that he pursued three men, the number that Monoranjan had described as passing to his right. He has detailed his pursuit of these men along Mussalmanpara Lane to Harrison Road, and from that point the pursuit of one of them along the pathway towards Akhil Mistry's Lane, till his chase was cut short by his stumbling over a stone and falling on his hands, thereby, as he says, causing a state of unconsciousness from which he recovered after a short but appreciable measure of time. Then he returned to 10/4/1, Mussalmanpara Lane. This story is palpably untrue. Sheik Hingoo, who appeared to us to be a truthful witness, gives a narrative of events which absolutely negatives Someswar's version and shows that Someswar cannot have been in pursuit and that three men cannot have been in flight; in fact, the only man seen was walking, not running. Nor is this all, for the evidence of Satish Chander Banerji, another witness who impressed us favourably, is inconsistent with the idea that Someswar ever left 10/4/1, Mussalmanpara Lane. Someswar was undoubtedly so affected by the shock of the explosion as to be in a state of great and unbalanced excitement, and his story may represent what he would have wished to have done, but certainly not what he did. We are convinced that there is no foundation in fact for the pursuit or any of its incidents.

Then we come to the story of Sarafat. If true, it would be a most important link in the evidence against the accused and almost conclusive of his guilt. But we do not hesitate to pronounce this story false, and, indeed, Sir Satyendra Sinha on behalf of the Crown did not even refer to it in his reply. Our view rests not merely on an appreciation of the evidence as given before us, which left no room for doubt as to its worthlessness, but also on our personal observations on the spot, which convinced us that the story told by this witness was in its most important details an absolute impossibility. We would here desire to explain that we visited the locality, at the urgent request of both parties who felt, and we now think rightly, that this was almost necessary to a correct understanding of the case.

The next step in the case is that the accused was found in the narrow part of Akhil Mistry's Lane which runs east and west. This undoubtedly is true; but so far as it goes, it bears out his story that he was on his way to his brother's mess, for it is not disputed, and is, indeed, apparent, that this was on the road there from Mussalmanpara Lane. Nor is it without its relevance that while lying there, he at once gave his brother's name and address and begged that information might be given to him. This fact is an answer to the suggestion that the accused endeavoured to conceal his identity by withholding his name. It is at least as reasonable to refer his silence to the state of collapse in which he obviously was. Sudhir's suggestion that the accused wore his dhoti in malkocha fashion may be dismissed, as he himself conceded in cross-examination that he was unable to support it on oath, and it is a circumstance to which no other witness speaks. The next move was to the hospital, and it is here that Subodh, a C. I. D. officer, attributes to the accused two remarkable and unintelligible replies. He says that the accused, when asked his name, replied "My name is name," and when asked by a European, whether he was a Policeman answered, "I am not a Police but a man." Not only is the medical evidence of the accused's condition strongly opposed to the probability of this being true, but there is no confirmation, by any European or by any Bengali doctor, of these answers. On the contrary, the evidence of those called negatives it. Mention may here be made of an incident on which Mr. James has laid much stress, the discovery of the exploded Mauser cartridge. He evidently regarded it as a fabricated discovery designed to prejudice his client. We do not share this view; we see no reason to distrust Mr. Lowman's evidence on the point; and in fact no use of the discovery has been made to the accused's prejudice.

This brings us to the endeavour to show that the accused, when found in Akhil Mistry's Lane, was in possession of a revolver. Sir Satyendra did not exaggerate the importance of this alleged incident when he declared that if it was not established, then he could not ask for a conviction. From what has already been said, it is apparent that there has been an endeavour to import into the case several matters that may well occasion anxious doubt as to the preparation of the evidence by which it was sought to fasten guilt on the accused.

But, in dealing with this revolver incident, we have endeavoured to estimate its worth on its own independent merits. Does, then, the evidence establish, with the degree of assurance that any prudent man would require, the accused's possession of the revolver produced before us in Court? For, if it does, then it goes far to show that the accused is guilty and has merited the law's extreme penalty. We have the lad's positive statement that he had not the revolver, and this the law ordains we may take into consideration. On the suggestion of its later importation, he does not throw any light, nor could he in the collapsed condition in which he was, for he was practically dead to all around him.

The witnesses who speak to the "shining thing," or the revolver which we are invited to regard as its equivalent, are many. There is, however, displayed throughout this evidence an anxiety to make it appear that the "shining thing" was observed before the Police came on the scene. This anxiety appears to us to cast a needless slur, for if a discovery by the Police squared with the facts, we certainly should not on that account regard it as unworthy of acceptance. But the difficulty we feel in connection with this part of the case is that we find ourselves confronted with stories so difficult to reconcile with each other or to fit in with ordinary probabilities that after serious consideration, we unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that we must regard this part of the case with great distrust. In dealing with it, we have been materially assisted by Mr. James, who, with his junior, Mr. Palit, has obviously made a most searching inquiry into all that relates to this alleged discovery of the pistol, and has spared no effort to master and understand all the details of the problem with which he had to deal. Unless something has been kept back, the constables Nawrang and Paltoo, two most important witnesses, should, according to their evidence, have been at the spot where the accused was lying in Akhil Mistry's Lane not later than 7-45; and yet the case presented for our acceptance by the prosecution, and apparently as an essential feature of the case, is that their arrival at the west end of the lane was absolutely synchronous with the arrival of Sub-Inspector Belcher and Head Constable Mohangoo Misser at its eastern end. But Sub-Inspector Belcher cannot have reached the lane before 8-20, that is, 35 minutes later than the time at which the two constables, on their own evidence, ought to have arrived. We should have attributed little importance to this, if it could fairly have been ascribed to a mistaken estimate of time. But it is nothing of the kind; and having followed the case day by day as it was unfolded before us, we feel that this is not the true explanation of the remarkable discrepancy which resulted in the equally remarkable coincidence of simultaneous arrival. We cannot resist the conclusion that there has not been a complete disclosure of all that occurred, and that something has been withheld from our knowledge.

Then, again, the evidence of Sarat and Sudhir, two other witnesses of importance, so far from clearing up matters, rather tends to increase the perplexities of the case. Both of them agree in this that they will not pledge themselves to more than "a shining thing," and curiously enough they were neither of them shown the revolver with a view to identifying it in appearance with what they profess to have seen. Sarat before us has deposed to the presence of a constable before the arrival of Belcher, and describes him as handling the pistol. At the same time he does not identify him as either Nawrang or Paltco, and in this he probably is right, as the man of whom he speaks did not wear a pugri. This man, obviously a most important witness if Sarat spoke the truth, has not been called, and it seems to be the prosecution's case that they do not know of any such constable as Sarat describes. Mr. Belcher declared that when he arrived, he saw the pistol and took possession of it. We do not say that it may not have been so, but when we bear in mind Belcher's evidence of its spotless condition and its freedom from all trace of blood or mud or water, we find it difficult to reconcile this with what must have been the condition of the lane and of the accused. It would seem to be the prosecution theory that the revolver was carried in the accused's hand; but if in his right hand, one would have expected traces of blood, having regard to the injuries and the profusion of blood on that side; if on the left hand, equally would one expect traces of blood, from the wound in the palm of that hand, for it was sufficiently severe to be dressed and sutured at the hospital. It is difficult to speculate as to whether it may not have been in the accused's coat pocket, for, so far is this from being the case for the prosecution, that the coat has not even been put in evidence before us, and we do not know what pockets (if any) there were in it. The reason for this doubtless was that the prosecution felt that it was impossible to square the prosecution evidence as to the position of the revolver with any other theory than that it was in the accused's hands.

EMPEROR V. NOGENDRA NATH SEN.

We have dealt with some of the difficulties in the way of accepting that view.

But there is yet another circumstance to be noticed, and that is that Sheik Hingu, who certainly might have been expected to see a revolver in the accused's hand, did not observe one, nor was it observed by Monoranjan or Someśwar or, as far as we know, by any one else. Then, again, if the pistol was really in the accused's hand, we find it difficult to account for the several positions from time to time attributed it, or how it was not visible from the first.

The whole story of the revolver is surrounded by difficulties and is enveloped in mystery, and observing that standard of care which the positive enactment of the law imposes on us, we hold it not to be established that the accused was in possession of the revolver. But if possession of the revolver is not brought home to the accused, there clearly is not evidence on which we can hold his guilt proved, and this Sir Satyendra himself declared.

We desire to make it clear that in our judgment we do not merely give the accused the benefit of the doubt, but after considering the matters before us, we decline to hold that he is shown to be guilty, or that his guilt is so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances of this case to act upon the supposition that he is guilty. That is the test prescribed by law, and it is amply satisfied in the accused's favour in the circumstances of this case.

The Court accordingly acquits the accused of the several charges brought against him and directs that he be set at liberty.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I am in full agreement with the views set out in the judgment of the Court, which has just been read out by the Chief Justice and to which I am a party. I desire only to emphasise that, after anxious consideration of every element in the case as it was developed before us from day to day, I am strongly convinced of the absolute innocence of the accused. My deliberate conclusion is that the endeavour made to establish a connection between this innocent lad and a dastardly crime, by means of evidence tainted in a large measure by manifest untruths and manufactured incidents, has been completely unsuccessful.

EMPEROR v. BARKYA TIKU.

HOLMWOOD, J.—I am in entire agreement with the judgment of the Court to which I am a party, and I only wish to add that I am convinced of the absolute innocence of the accused. He was the victim of an unfortunate train of circumstances which made the case at first appear very black against him; but the assiduity of those whose duty it was to investigate the facts, in endeavouring to elaborate and clench those circumstances, has served the purpose of clearly demonstrating to my mind that he can have had no hand in the diabolical crime with which he was charged.

Accused acquitted.

Bombay Public Conveyances Act (Bom. Act VI of 1863), s. 2—Conveyance licensed for labour, whether can be used for passengers.

A person who has his conveyance licensed for labour only cannot use it for passengers, and is liable under section 2 of the Bombay Public Conveyances Act if he does so.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate of Thana.

OPINION.—This is a reference from the District Magistrate of Thana in the case of Imperator v. Barkya Tiku Bhandari who was convicted by the second class Magistrate of Bassein on the 3rd of February 1915 and ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 2 under section 2 of the Bombay Public Conveyances Act (Bom. Act VI of 1863).

It appears that the accused had carried passengers in his cart, which was licensed only for labour, from Virar to Agashi. The District Magistrate is of opinion that because under section 9 of the Bombay Public Conveyances Act the Superintendent of Police may, in his discretion, suspend or revoke the license if a conveyance is used for passengers when licensed only for labour, the accused cannot be convicted under section 2. But under section 2 no person shall keep or let for hire any public conveyance without having license in force for the same, and in the case of a license to carry passengers there is to be painted or branded on such part of the conveyance as may be directed a number corresponding with that of the license granted to such conveyance, together, in the case of a land conveyance licensed to carry passengers, with the number of passengers that it is licensed to carry. Any person keeping or letting for hire any public conveyance without such a license as aforesaid will be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate, to a penalty. The accused in this case was keeping or letting for hire a public conveyance for carrying passengers without the requisite license. He is clearly guilty of offence under section 2.

Therefore, we cannot agree with the District Magistrate who recommends that the conviction be quashed and the accused acquitted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 87, 90, 304—Death caused by consent under misconception of fact—Intention or knowledge of accused.

The deceased, a middle-aged man, believed himself to have been rendered da-proof by charms and asked the accused to try a da on his right arm. The accused believed in the pretence of the deceased and inflicted a blow with a da with moderate force, with the result that the arteries were cut and the deceased bled to death.

Held, setting aside the conviction under section 304, Indian Penal Code, that the case was governed by sections 87 and 90, Indian Penal Code, and that the accused had no intention of causing death or grievous hurt and that he might not even have known that his act was likely to cause any such result. [p. 134, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge of Prome, dated the 26th May 1915, passed in Sessions Trial No. 31 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—The deceased Pan Zan, a middle-aged man, was a believer in charms and apparently believed that he had rendered himself da-proof. In the course of an ordinary conversation he said to the appellant, Shwe Kin, "I am da-proof. I am not afraid of da or stick" and he told Shwe Kin to "test and see." Uttering the words of some charm he put out his right arm and Shwe Kin cut the arm with his da. It then appeared that Pan Zan was not invulnerable after all. Pan Zan did not reproach the appellant with having given too vigorous a cut, but only said "I made a mistake. I ought to have taken my coat, then the da could not have cut my arm." Unfortunately arteries were cut and Pan Zan's companions being ignorant of the proper method of checking arterial bleeding, he bled to death. The place of occurrence was far from medical aid in a remote part of the Prome District. The learned Sessions Judge has found Shwe Kin guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under section 304, Indian Penal Code, sentenced him to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three years, holding that he must have intended to cause such injury as was likely to cause death and that though Shwe Kin believed Pan Zan to be da-proof, that belief did not justify him in inflicting so severe a wound by way of experiment.

The wound is described as follows:—An incised wound, below and in front of the right elbow $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches long, 2 inches broad, cutting through all the soft structures including the main blood vessels and into the bone to the extent of about quarter an inch.

The da had a blade $16\frac{1}{2}$ inches long and the weight of the da was 60 tolas. The Medical Officer says that with such a weapon "moderate" force would be required to cause the wound.

The case is governed by sections 87 and 90, Indian Penal Code. The deceased gave his consent under a misconception of fact, erroneously believing that he was proof against da cuts. But it cannot be said that the appellant knew of this misconception or had reason to believe that the deceased was mistaken in thinking himself invulnerable. He is a youth of 19 and the probability is that he really believed in the pretence of the deceased, a much elder man than himself. Burmese cultivators are notoriously credulous and seeing that Pan Zan was willing to put his pretensions to proof on his own person, Shwe Kin probably expected the edge of the da to be chipped or turned aside. The appellant certainly had no intention of causing death or grievous hurt, and I think it is highly doubtful whether he can properly be said to have known that his act was likely to cause any such result. In the first place, he did not use great force, secondly, he had Pan Zan's assurance that he was invulnerable and the appellant was too ignorant to see the absurdity of it, lastly, he inflicted the cut on the part of the body specially presented for the purpose by the deceased and this, moreover, was a part not ordinarily regarded as a vital part.

I am of opinion that the case was within the exception set forth in section 87, Indian Penal Code, which deals with acts done by consent which are not intended and not known to be likely to cause death or grievous hurt.

The conviction and sentence are set aside and the appellant is acquitted and will be released, unless he is liable to be detained on any other charge.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110 (f)—Evidence—Being nuisance to neighbours and making indecent overtures to passers-by, if sufficient for proceedings under s. 110.

Where the evidence produced against a person amounts to no more than this that he is a nuisance to his neighbours, refuses to pay his debts, abuses people who sell goods to him and makes indecent overtures to school boys who pass by his shop, it does not justify proceedings against him under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 135, col. 2.]

Application in revision of an order of the Magistrate of Azamgarh.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment;

In re NALLI NARASIGADU.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Applicant:—The finding of the District Magistrate in appeal, that the accused is a man of a “crabbed and cantankerous nature, given to quarrels and threats and that he has made himself specially obnoxious by threatening the boys of the Muhammadabad School”, does not justify proceedings under section 110. The evidence produced consists of some boys, who complain that the accused used to make indecent overtures to them. There is also the evidence of persons who had had dealings with the accused as also some evidence of general repute, which is hardly relevant. Under these circumstances it cannot be said that any offence mentioned in section 110 (f) has been committed.

Mr. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown:—The accused is certainly a dangerous man. He has been in the habit of threatening everybody with whom he had had any dealings. He also threatened a number of schoolboys who passed by his shop. These facts are sufficient to show that if the man is not bound down, there is likely to be a breach of the peace.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Magistrate of Azamgarh dismissing the applicant's appeal against an order of a Magistrate of the 1st class, requiring the applicant to give security for his good behaviour for one year. The evidence against the applicant is of a most unusual character. There is first the evidence of several boys who say that the applicant made indecent overture to them when they passed his shop on their way to school. Then there is the evidence of some witnesses who say in a general way that the applicant is a bad character. The third class of evidence against the applicant consists of the statements of trades-people and others living near him who have had trouble with him for one reason or another. The oil-seller, for instance, says that the applicant bought from him a bottle of oil worth $1\frac{1}{2}$ anna and afterwards refused to pay for it and abused the seller. A butcher says that the applicant is of a cantankerous nature and insists upon having another piece of meat instead of the piece which is offered to him. The darzi says that he has worked for the applicant, but got only abused when he asked for his wages. The milk-seller says that the applicant took some milk from him without payment. A neighbour says that he bought some shoes from the applicant on approval and when he returned the shoes the applicant abused him. The evidence of the 3rd class, i. e., of the shop-keepers and neighbours appears to me to be totally irrelevant. The applicant has been required to give security under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code clause, (f), i. e., he is said to be so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community. The third class of evidence mentioned by me at best shows no more than that the applicant is a very troublesome person and a man who declines to pay his debts and abuses people who sell goods to him. Such evidence does not bring the applicant within clause (f), section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The general evidence of bad character may be disregarded. It amounts to no more than that the applicant is a nuisance to his neighbours. I have no doubt that the real reason why proceedings were taken against this man is that several boys complain that he had made indecent overtures to them. Their complaint was made to the school master who passed it on to the Tahsildar and the Police. In my opinion if the evidence is proved it does not justify proceedings against the applicant under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. I allow this application and set aside the order requiring the applicant to give security.

Order set aside.

NARASINGA RAO v. VITTOBA RAO.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Godaveri District, in Case No. 1 of the Calendar for 1915.

Mr. P. Chenchia, Counsel (Amicus Curie), for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Sidney Smith, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants have been convicted of the murder of one Mala Durgadu on the night of October 27th. The body was fished out of the Godaveri river on November 2nd after three days' search within half a mile of the garden where the deceased was employed and where he was last seen alive on the afternoon of October 27th. We see no reason to doubt the identity of the corpse. The deceased undoubtedly met his end by violence: and the circumstance of the 3 survey stones found tied to the body leaves little doubt that it was at or near the garden referred to.

We have very carefully considered the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 6 and 9, on which the prosecution must mainly rely. If this is accepted it proves beyond doubt that the appellants murdered Durgadu, and with the help of P. W. No. 9 took his body in a boat into the middle of the river and sank it there weighted by the survey stones which were procured from the garden.

As regards P. W. No. 9, it seems pretty clear that he was, at least in a minor degree, privy to the conspiracy for the murder of Durgadu. He may have had nothing to do with the crime itself: but his attempt to represent that he was coerced into assisting the criminals in disposing of the corpse is futile. His evidence is, therefore, to some extent tainted and has to be received with caution. It is, however, powerfully corroborated both directly (vide P. W. No. 12) and circumstantially: and no inconsiderable value attaches to it. The argument that because the 4th accused, who is really a shepherd, can 'ply a boat', the aid of the witness, who is a fisherman by trade, was unnecessary is not very convincing.

The evidence of the shepherd (P. W. No. 6) is of even more importance; and we can see no reason to regard it as in any way tainted by complicity in the crime. The two chief points against it are: (1) that it was unnecessary for the accused to take him into their confidence, (2) that his delay in coming forward is suspicious. But it must be borne in mind that if the deceased were killed at the time and place indicated by the prosecution, the accused could hardly hope to keep this witness (who has his cooking shed in the same garden) in the dark and may have reasonably thought the boldest course was safest. Nor does it seem very unnatural that the witness should keep quiet, until he found his master (P. W. No. 10) and the Village Munsif (P. W. No. 11) actively investigating the crime in the garden itself. We think his explanation in this respect may be fairly accepted.

P. W. No. 10, under whom accused Nos. 1, 2 and 4, Durgadu and P. W. No. 6 were all employed in different capacities, appears to be a respectable man entitled to credence: and no acceptable explanation is put forward for his aiding in fastening the crime on three of his own men. His evidence and that of Durgadu's widow establishes such enmity as might account for the murder.

The other prosecution evidence calls for little comment: and the confessional statements of accused Nos. 2 and 4 are only used against the persons making them, and do not take the case very far.

In our opinion the evidence as a whole justifies the convictions of murder, which, with the sentences, are hereby confirmed. The separate sentences for offences under section 201 of the Indian Penal Code are both unnecessary and illegal, and are hereby set aside.

Appeal dismissed.

The applicant signed the usual articles of agreement with the Captain of the steamship "Arcadia" for a term of one year's service. In addition to the stereotyped conditions the applicant agreed to accept a transfer from that to any other of the P. & O. Company's steamships. The Company disposed of the "Arcadia" and the applicant was ordered by the Marine Superintendent in the presence of the Chief Officer of the "Arcadia" to tranship to the "Salsette." The applicant refused to obey the order:

Held, (1) that having regard to section 114, clause (3), of the Merchant Shipping Act and to the fact that the additional terms of the agreement had been initialled by an Officer of the Board of Trade, the terms were not ultra vires; [p. 137, col. 2.]

(2) that the order of tranship though not given actually by the Chief Officer himself, was obviously with his sanction and approval and, therefore, should have been obeyed by the applicant. [p. 138, col. 1.]

Criminal revision application from conviction and sentence recorded by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay.

Mr. Kolaskar (with him Mr. K. F. Nariman), for the Applicant.

Mr. F. S. Taleyarkhan (with him Messrs. Little & Co.), for the P. & O. S. N. Company.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant has been convicted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of the offence under section 83 of the Merchant Seamen Act and sentenced to one day's simple imprisonment and to forfeit two days' pay. He has applied to this Court and a Rule was issued by Heaton and Shah, JJ. We take it then that we are dealing with this case in revision. It was contended that the applicant had a right of regular appeal; but in view of what has already passed and the applicant's Counsel being unable to support his contention by reference to any section in the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is clear that this was not the view of Heaton and Shah, JJ., and the present contention cannot be sustained.

Now the material facts are that the applicant signed the usual articles of agreement with the Captain of the Steamship "Arcadia" for a term of one year's service. In addition to the stereotyped form certain clauses were added under which, inter alia, the applicant agreed to accept a transfer from that to any other of the P. and O. Company's steamships. These additional terms have been challenged in the course of this argument as being ultra vires. Having regard, however, to section 114, clause (3), of the Merchant Shipping Act and to the fact that they have been initialled by an officer of the Board of Trade, we cannot accede to that contention. We have no doubt that the terms were inter vires and that they were subscribed by the applicant with full knowledge.

That being so, the next question which arises is whether or not, when the ship "Arcadia" had been disposed of by the P. and O. Company and this member of the crew was ordered by the Marine Superintendent to tranship to the "Salsette," that order was one which he was bound to obey under section 83. He has been convicted of disobedience of a lawful order, and the only question, in our opinion, of any importance here is whether or not the order given by the person and in the circumstances stated is such a lawful order as was contemplated in the section. Of the liability of the applicant to tranship under the clause we can entertain no doubt whatever, but looking to the language of that agreement, it appears that the applicant bound himself to obey the Master of the Ship, his successor in office, should any such be appointed, and the other superior officers (for such we take to be the meaning of the words "their superior officers") of the ship. This would not ordinarily comprise the Marine Superintendent and had the order been given by the Marine Superintendent alone, it might reasonably have been contended that the applicant was under no obligation to obey such an order or recognize the authority of that individual. This point has not been made as clear as it should have been in the Chief Presidency Magistrate's Court, considering the importance attached to the case by the P. and O. Company. This much, however, is clear that when the order was given by Captain Daldy to the applicant, the Chief Officer of the "Arcadia" was standing by. It has been stated to us on behalf of the Company that what in fact happened was that the Marine Superintendent had sent his orders for the transhipment of this member of the crew of the "Salsette" to the Chief Officer and that the Chief Officer had given that order to the applicant. The applicant refused to obey it, in consequence of which the Marine Superintendent in the presence of the Chief Officer repeated the order. Unfortunately these statements are not supported by any evidence. It appears clear, however, on the virtually admitted fact that the order was given in the presence of the Chief Officer, that the applicant could have been under no real misunderstanding as to the authority behind it. We think, therefore, that the contention is little better than quibbling and no substantial effect ought to be given to it.

All the requirements of section 83 have been sufficiently complied with. The applicant was liable to be transhipped. He was ordered to tranship if not actually by, still in the presence of, the Chief Officer and obviously with his sanction and approval. And we take it that he knew perfectly well that the order came to him weighted with that authority which, by his own agreement, he was bound to acknowledge and obey.

We are, therefore, satisfied that no injustice has been done to the applicant and that the conviction and sentence which are made the subject of this revisional application ought not to be disturbed. We, therefore, discharge the Rule.

Rule discharged.

An offence punishable under section 325 of the Penal Code is compoundable with the permission of the Court, but it is compoundable by the person to whom the hurt was caused. In a case where the person to whom the hurt was caused is dead the case cannot be compound by his heir. [p. 139, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal by the Local Government against an order of acquittal passed by the Officiating Sessions Judge, Agra.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the Crown.

Messrs. J. M. Banerji and Benode Behari (for Mr. C. R. Alston), for the Accused Moti, son of Pir Bakhsh.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Government appeal against an order of acquittal and is brought under the following circumstances. There were four accused persons, Rahmat, Moti, son of Pir Bakhsh, Jhandu and Moti, son of Khilari, all of the Banjara caste, and the case against them was that they had beaten with lathis their caste-fellow Pir Bakhsh, inflicting serious injuries, which, as a matter of fact, resulted in the death of the said Pir Bakhsh. The Magistrate who inquired into the case, for reasons given by him, framed a charge under section 325, Indian Penal Code, but committed the accused persons for trial before the Court of Session. The case unfortunately came before a Sessions Judge of very limited experience. He rejected an application made on behalf of the prosecution for amendment of the charge into one under section 304, Indian Penal Code, or section 302, Indian Penal Code, and then permitted the case to be compounded upon an arrangement come to between the accused persons and the widow of the deceased,

EMPEROR v. WALTER TURNER.

He thus acquitted the accused without taking any evidence at all. The order is obviously illegal. An offence punishable under section 325, Indian Penal Code, is, no doubt, compoundable with the permission of the Court, but it is compoundable by the person to whom the hurt was caused. In this case the person to whom the hurt was caused was dead and the case was certainly not compoundable by his widow.

In dealing with this matter to-day we are placed in a certain difficulty. Moti, son of Pir Bakhsh, has been arrested and has had notice of to-day's hearing. He has been represented before us by Counsel. The other three accused persons cannot be found and are presumably absconding. The warrant issued by this Court for their arrest has not hitherto been executed. Notices of to-day's hearing were issued to them and they have been served on their near relatives, but they themselves cannot be found. The Government Advocate, who appears in support of the appeal, informs us that he is willing to withdraw the appeal as against the three absconding accused, provided this Court is prepared to take up the case so far as they are concerned in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. The case is a very clear one and there is no question of convicting any of the accused on evidence upon the record. Over and above setting aside the order of acquittal, all that we could do would be to direct these persons to be tried. Under these circumstances we think that the three absconding accused have been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard to-day in their defence, within the meaning of the 2nd clause of section 439, Code of Criminal Procedure, and that we can take up the question as regards them in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction.

With regard to Moti, son of Pir Bakhsh, therefore, we so far accept this appeal that we set aside the order of acquittal passed in respect of the said Moti and direct that he be put on his trial before the Court of Session. As regards Rahmat, Jhandu and Moti, son of Khilari, the Government appeal against their acquittal is withdrawn. Taking up the matter in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction we set aside the order acquitting these three men; which is clearly an illegal order.

We leave the local authorities to take such steps with regard to the prosecution of these three men as they may consider suitable.

Appeal decreed.

RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 307 (1)
—Jury, trial by—Disagreement of Judge with verdict
—Reference to High Court—Duty of Judge before making reference.

Where in a trial by Jury, a brief verdict of 'not guilty' is given and the Sessions Judge disagrees, he should before making a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, put such further questions to the Jury as may bring out their meaning more precisely. [p. 140, col. 2.]

Case referred by the Additional Sessions Judge, Shahpur Division at Lyallpur, with his No. 614, dated the 1st of July 1914, under section 307 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for orders of the Chief Court.

The Government Advocate, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Clarence Kirkpatrick, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—In this case the respondent, Mr. Turner, aged about 26, was tried by the Sessions Judge with a Jury consisting of three Europeans on two separate charges of cheating. The Jury was unanimous in favour of the respondent on both charges. The Sessions Judge disagreed with the verdict and, therefore, submitted the case under section 307 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. As required by clause (3) of the same section we have had to consider the entire evidence, recorded at great length in the Sessions Court, covering a mass of very confusing detail which required looking into closely. The hearing in this Court was in consequence prolonged over three days during which the argument covered a number of small points, which need not be discussed in our judgment. Our final conclusion is such that we can deal with this unsatisfactory case more briefly. We cannot conceal an opinion that far too much has been made of comparatively simple matter which might well have been dealt with departmentally. The result of what strikes us as an ill-advised prosecution is that an inordinate amount of time has been taken up in the Courts with a result altogether disproportionate to the labour involved in going through the petty items concerned.

We understand that after some years of service the respondent was appointed an Inspecting Telegraph Master on Rs. 85 a month in March 1913. His duties involved much travelling and substantially the charges against him are that in July 1913, he drew travelling allowance bills for June, charging for journeys taken and expenses incurred in excess of what he was entitled to. More precisely the charges are explained as follows:—

(1) that after certain deductions made by the countersigning authority from a total bill for Rs. 163, the sum of Rs. 135 was passed and paid for in respect of travelling done between 15th and 30th June, whereas the sum which could be rightly claimed should have been Rs. 32 only;

(2) that for the same period a sum of Rs. 22-11-4 was wrongly drawn as an authorised allowance of one-third of tum tum hire.

We may say at once that in our opinion the second charge has broken down hopelessly. There is apparently trustworthy evidence that Turner did keep up a tum tum for the period, and did pay the full amount of which he recovered one-third. It cannot be said that he cheated in this respect, though he may have been extravagant in claiming for such work as did not require him to employ a tum tum continuously. He, however, so far kept within the rules applicable to him.

On charge (1) the gravamen underlying the actual charge is that Turner falsified various departmental book entries and other documents and induced subordinates to assist him (or tried unsuccessfully to do so), in order to represent that he made journeys which he either did not make at all or made unnecessarily. We had to examine into all this part of the case, though it was properly speaking, a side issue on the main question. Our conclusion on the point is that Turner did on some occasions do what is alleged against him in a highly improper manner, but this covers his conduct as a Government official rather than the particular offence for which he was charged.

On the actual charge as framed we found it impossible to arrive at any certainty in respect of many of the details, and it seems to us that Turner so far did no more than try to arrange his journeys more with a view to making travelling allowance than to the necessity for repeated office inspections. How far he was merely continuing irregular practices which had grown up under lax supervision in the Telegraph Department we are not prepared to say, but it is obvious that a young officer employed on this sort of work on a low rate of pay must be exposed to great temptation, and both this and the apparent lack of efficient control of a beginner by his superiors should be taken into account.

When we had gone through the various journeys charged for, we found that in some cases the journeys cannot have been performed at all, and in others roundabout routes were unnecessarily taken. In other cases this was not satisfactorily established, and the general conclusion is that Turner did make improper charges though not to the full extent alleged by the prosecution. In round figures he may have been fairly entitled to about half the sum of Rs. 103 still in dispute (that is Rs. 135 less by Rs. 32).

Considering the difficulty in distinguishing accurately on details, it is not altogether surprising that the Jury should at the end of a trial lasting over several days have contented themselves with a brief verdict of not guilty. The Sessions Judge should, however, in view of his disagreement, have put such further questions to the Jury as would bring out their meaning more precisely, and much of the difficulty of the present reference would have been avoided if he had done so. We are satisfied that the Jury went wrong to some extent and that the Sessions Judge's view was correct on certain of the points specified in his order under consideration.

We accordingly acquit the respondent of any offence under charge (2).

In respect of charge (1) we order his formal conviction under section 420, Indian MADHO SONAR v. EMPEROR.

Penal Code, on some of the items which do not require specification, covered by his travelling allowance bill for the period 15th to 30th June 1913.

As regards sentence we take account of several matters. In the first place, the respondent was a young and comparatively inexperienced officer whose movements should have been more closely supervised by his immediate superiors. In the second, his domestic circumstances during the latter part of June entitled him to some consideration at their hands. In the third, and this is the most important point of all, we must recognise that the decision of the responsible authorities to proceed against this young man by prosecution has put him to expense and trouble out of all proportion to his actual offence. His conviction is in itself a very serious matter to him as it may involve loss of employment as a Government servant, and we think it quite unnecessary to impose anything more than such nominal sentence as will comply with the law, section 420 being one of the sections for which a sentence of imprisonment is compulsory.

The order passed at the hearing was that Mr. Turner be detained till the rising of the Court, and this sentence having been duly carried out he was discharged from bail on release.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 353—House search by Police Officer within limits of another Police Station—Assault—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 165, 168.

A Police Officer conducted a search in the house of the accused, who did not reside within the limits of his jurisdiction, accompanied by a constable of the Police Station which had jurisdiction, but the constable had no order, either written or verbal, from his own Sub-Inspector. While engaged in the search they were assaulted by the accused who was convicted under section 353 of the Indian Penal Code.

Held, that as the provisions of sections 165 and 166 of the Criminal Procedure Code were not complied with, conviction under section 353, Indian Penal Code, could not be maintained. [p. 142; col. 1.]

It is of great importance that Police Officers in the discharge of their duty should receive the protection of such sections as 33, 333 and 332, Indian Penal Code, but in order to entitle them to the protection of those sections Police Officers must comply scrupulously with the provisions of the law, particularly when they undertake an act such as searching the house against the will of the accused. [p. 141, col. 2; p. 142, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Allahabad.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The conviction in this case has been had under section 353 of the Indian Penal Code. It lay on the prosecution to prove that the public servants assaulted, namely, the Police constables Nazir Husain and Darsan Singh, were in the execution, or in the lawful discharge of their duty as such public servants at the time when the assault was committed. They were endeavouring to search the house of the applicant, Madho Sonar. Not only is it not proved by the evidence on the record that the provisions of section 166, read with clause (3), section 165, of the Code of Criminal Procedure, had been complied with, but, as a matter of fact, a breach of those provisions becomes patent on an examination of the evidence given by Sub-Inspector Taj Dat Pande and constable Darsan Singh. The Sub-Inspector seems to have acted under a belief, and probably quite a bona fide belief, that it was sufficient compliance with the law if he sent intimation to the Sub-Inspector of Manda Police Station of his intention to conduct a search within the limits of the latter's jurisdiction and secured the presence at the search of a constable belonging to the Manda Police Station. This is not sufficient compliance with law. Apart from the fact that Police constable Darsan Singh had no order in writing from the Sub-Inspector of Manda directing him to make the search, it is obvious enough from his evidence that he had received no order, either written or verbal, from his own Sub-Inspector. He thought he was doing his duty in coming to the assistance of the Sub-Inspector from another circle on receiving an intimation from the latter that his presence was required. It is no doubt of great importance that Police Officers in the discharge of their duty should receive the protection of such sections as 353, 333 and 332 of the Indian Penal Code; but in order to entitle them to the protection of those sections Police Officers must comply scrupulously with the provisions of the law, particularly when they undertake an act such as searching a house against the will of the owner. In the present case the conviction under section 353 cannot be maintained. No doubt on the evidence some lesser offence was probably committed by the applicant, Madho Sonar; but it would seem that he has been undergoing sentence of imprisonment for more than a month, so that I do not think it necessary to go further into the question with a view to deciding whether he can be convicted of some lesser offence. In so far as he may have been guilty of any breach of the law in opposing the Police Officers, I have no doubt that he has been quite sufficiently punished by the imprisonment which he has already undergone. I set aside the conviction and the sentence in this case and direct that the applicant, Madho Sonar, be released.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, applicability of—Dispute regarding some out of a number of plots—Rent half share of produce, question of—No question of share as between parties.

Where in proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, it is found that out of a few plots of land there is no dispute regarding some of them as to what tenants are in possession and there is a dispute as to the remaining plots, and it is declared by the Magistrate that each party should remain in possession of the plots of which they have been respectively receiving the rents:

Held, that with regard to these remaining plots of land the Magistrate ought not to have passed any order in these proceedings in the absence of the tenants, because they might be very seriously prejudiced by an order in favour of one or other of the parties to these proceedings. [p. 142, col. 2.]

Where it is a question of dividing a hitherto undivided share, section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code may not apply, but where it is a question of rent and it so appears that the rent is half the share of the produce, but there is no question of shares as between the two parties to the proceeding, section 145 applies. The question of the division of the produce only arises where the tenant comes to pay his rent. [p. 143, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Uluberia.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Petitioners.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra for Maulvi A. K. Fuzul Huq, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule granted in respect of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, proceedings taken by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Uluberia with regard to 33 plots of land. All these plots are held by the tenants on a yearly rent of half the produce. The parties to these proceedings are first party, the purchaser at a putni sale and so no putnidar, and second party, the lakherajdar. The dispute between them is, which of them has the right to collect this rent. The order of the Magistrate is not very happily worded but it is easy to see what he means. He has found that the rent of certain plots has been received by the first party and of certain other plots by the second party, and has declared that each party should remain in possession of the plots of which they have been respectively receiving the rents.

As regards 20 of the plots, there is no dispute as to what tenants are in possession. As to the remaining 13 there is a dispute. It is obvious that with regard to those 13 the Magistrate ought not to have passed any order in these proceedings in the absence of the tenants, because they might be very seriously prejudiced by an order in favour of one or other of the parties to these proceedings.

With regard to plots No. 10 in Nasirchak, Nos. 1 and 6 in Salageria and No. 1 in Gharberia, they are not claimed by the second party and the first party may properly remain in possession of the rents of these plots. So also with regard to plots Nos. 1 and 15 in Panadhara. That makes six plots of which the first party is entitled to collect the rents. With regard to plots Nos. 1 to 5 and 7, 8, 9 and 11 of Nasirchak, there is no dispute as to which tenants are in possession, nor is there any dispute as to the tenancy of plots Nos. 8 and 9 in Panadhara and Nos. 3, 4 and 5 in Salageria. The order, therefore, of the Magistrate with regard to these plots may stand.

The plots in respect of which the tenancy is in dispute are plots Nos. 1 to 7 and 10 to 14 of Panadhara and No. 2 in Salageria. As to those 13 the order must be set aside.

We should refer to the argument which has been put forward on behalf of the first party that section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, could not refer to a half share of the produce. That argument appears to us to be based on a fallacy. It is perfectly true that if it was a question of dividing a hitherto undivided share, the section might not apply. But here it is a question of rent and it so happens that the rent is half the share of the produce, but there is no question of shares as between the two parties to the proceedings. The question of division of the produce only arises when the tenant comes to pay his rent.

U. P. Excise Act (IV of 1910), ss. 60, 70—Magistrate taking cognizance of case on report of Police Officer—Jurisdiction.

Police Officers, being invested with powers under section 10 of the U. P. Excise Act, are Excise Officers and a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence under section 60 of the United Provinces Excise Act, 1910, on the report of a Police Officer in charge of a Police Station.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Allahabad.

Mr. Hamilton, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant has been convicted under section 60 of the United Provinces Excise Act of 1910 of having cultivated hemp plants and also of having sold them. He was sentenced by the Magistrate to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to one month's imprisonment more. On appeal the Sessions Judge confirmed the conviction and the sentence of imprisonment, but reduced the fine to Rs. 50. It is contended on behalf of the applicant that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the case. Counsel referred to section 70 of the Act, which provides inter alia that no Magistrate shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under section 60 except on his own knowledge or suspicion or on the complaint or report of an Excise Officer. This case is said to have been started on the report of an Excise Officer. The report in question was made by the Police Officer in charge of the Cantonment Police Station. Under section 3 of the Act "Excise Officer" includes any person invested with powers under section 10 of the Act. Under Notification No. 576 of July 13th, 1910, all Police Officers in charge of stations, amongst other persons, were invested with the powers specified in section 50 of the Act in respect of offences punishable under section 60, clauses (b), (c), (d), (f) and (i). The conviction in this case was under clauses (c) and (d). It is, therefore, clear that the Police Officer who made the report on which the Magistrate took cognizance of this case was an Excise Officer within the meaning of section 10. I hold, therefore, that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the Code. On the merits I have no doubt that the conviction was right. It was clearly proved that the applicant had cultivated, that is to say, had tended and watered at least, if not sown, hemp plants in the Macpherson Park, Allahabad, and also that he sold some plants to two men who were sent into the park by the Police for the purpose of catching him. The applicant has served a considerable portion of the sentence of imprisonment inflicted on him. I do not think it necessary to send him back to prison for a few days. I, therefore, reduce the sentence of imprisonment to the term already undergone by him and he need not surrender to his bail. In other respects I dismiss the application. The sentence of fine and of imprisonment in default of payment of fine will stand.

Application dismissed.

68 OF 1915.

In the matter of A MUKHTAR.

Legal Practitioner—Mukhtar—Professional misconduct—Circumstances—Changing sides, when allowed.

A professional gentleman should, as far as possible, stick to the side who first employed him.

In a proceeding for an assault upon the servant of a zemindar, a Mukhtar appeared for some of the accused to argue an appeal. Later on the zemindar brought proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, against the accused for the same property a dispute about which led to the assault. The Mukhtar appeared for the zemindar. The Mukhtar's first client did not offer to employ him nor took any exception to his appearing in the case until the case was actually at hearing:

Held, that under the circumstances the Mukhtar was not guilty of professional misconduct.

Rule issued to a Mukhtar to show cause why he should not be debarred from practising.

JUDGMENT.—This matter is connected with a report against a certain Mukhtar. It is said that he has changed sides in the course of different legal proceedings. In what is admitted to be the strongest case against him the charge is as follows. Certain persons were accused of an assault upon the servant of a zemindar. The Mukhtar appeared on behalf of one or more of the accused persons in the Appellate Court. Later on the zemindars brought proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The property, the subject-matter of this application by the zemindars, is said to have been the same property a dispute about which led to the alleged assault. It is, therefore, said that the Mukhtar "changed sides" and was thereby guilty of unprofessional conduct. It must be borne in mind in the first place that when the Mukhtar first appeared it was merely to argue an appeal upon the evidence that was on the record.

The question in dispute in the proceedings under section 145 would be as to who was in possession of the property. It does not necessarily follow that the Mukhtar received any information from his first clients when he was appearing for them, which could be used to their prejudice when he appeared for the zemindars in the proceedings under section 145. There is nothing on the record to show that the Mukhtar's first clients offered to employ him in the second case, or that they took any exception to his appearing in the case until the case was actually at hearing. Speaking generally it is quite clear that a professional gentleman should, as far as possible, stick to the side who first employed him. It might be a very good practice if when gentleman were offered instructions in any connected case that they should at least in the first place inform their first client. In the present case it has not been proved to our satisfaction that the Mukhtar has been guilty of any professional misconduct.

The Rule is discharged.

Appeal, under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Additional District Magistrate of Malabar, in Calendar Case No. 4 of 1914 on his file.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond and Mr. A. Ramasami Mudaliar, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The accused has been acquitted in Calendar Case No. 4 of 1915 on a charge of an offence punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code, by the Additional District Magistrate of Malabar. A learned Judge thought it necessary to take up the case in the exercise of this Court's powers of revision. Whilst it was under the consideration of a Bench, Government instructed the Public Prosecutor to file the appeals, which are before us, against the acquittals in Calendar Case No. 4 and Calendar Case No. 5, a connected case. I deal at present with the former.

A preliminary objection to the hearing of both appeals has been made, that they were not legally presented and that they cannot be proceeded with, because the provisions of section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure have not been complied with, inasmuch as the appeals were not duly presented to this Court and they were not perused and notice was not ordered by a Judge empowered for those purposes. The facts are that the Bench above referred to issued notice to the Public Prosecutor to appear at the further hearing of the revision case and also to inform the Court whether Government intended to appeal. He appeared and then handed in the appeals by Government now under disposal to the learned Judges, who perused them and ordered notice forthwith.

As regards presentation, no special method is enjoined in the Code of Criminal Procedure and, therefore, the question is one of administrative convenience alone. So long as there is, as there was in this case, an actual presentation to an officer of the Court, such as a Bench Clerk, or to one of the Judges, its members, I am not prepared to hold that the present action was invalid. As to compliance with section 421, accused relies on the note published as part of the weekly sitting list: "Urgent Criminal Appellate Side motions will be heard by the Bench before which the criminal work of the week is posted (and must be moved at 11 A.M.), unless an Admission Court is sitting in which case, if the motion can be heard by a single Judge, the application must be made before the Admission Court" and argues that, as an Admission Court constituted by a single Judge was sitting on 15th March 1915, the date on which orders were passed under section 421, that Court alone, and not the Bench of two Judges, was competent to peruse the appeals. It is a sufficient answer to this objection that under section 13, Charter Act, rules for the exercise of the High Court appellate jurisdiction by one or more Judges or by Divisional Courts can be made only by such High Court, the powers of the Chief Justice being only those conferred by section 14 to determine which Judges shall sit alone and which in Divisional Courts. It is by reference to the rules so made that the respective powers of Judges sitting alone and of Divisional Courts must be ascertained, not by reference to the notes to the sitting list, which are merely instructions for the guidance of practitioners and parties. The rules made by this Court are contained in the appellate side rules; and under rule 1 (1) (f) applications for the admission of appeals from the judgment of any Criminal Court are ordinarily to be made before a single Judge. This does not in terms, and is not intended to, deprive the Divisional Court, constituted for the disposal of criminal business, of the right to exercise its powers in special cases, such as those before us, in which convenience and the acquaintance with the circumstances, which the two learned Judges concerned had, rendered their intervention specially advisable. This objection must, therefore, fail.

I turn next to the argument relating to the conduct of the proceedings in the lower Court, on which Mr. Richmond, who appeared for the accused, has relied as a comprehensive answer to the appeal, in so far as the substitution of a conviction for the acquittal is asked for, and not merely an order for a re-trial. The relevant facts are that both Calendar Case No. 4 and Calendar Case No. 5 were instituted by the same complainant by the presentation of only one complaint, containing all the allegations necessary to the establishment of both cases, those allegations being shortly that accused had cheated the Bank of Madras in connection with certain bills of exchange and also by a false representation, contained in Exhibit K, as to the amount of his assets. The Magistrate in spite, Mr. Richmond alleges, of his remonstrances, recorded the prosecution evidence tendered on behalf of the complainant continuously without discriminating between that which was relevant on each of these two charges, examining each witness once as to all he knew regarding both and questioning accused under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, only once. He then, as his diary shows, "split" the case into Calendar Cases Nos. 4 and 5 and proceeded to the further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, which accused had claimed under section 256 (1). It is not clear whether he bore in mind that he had two distinct cases to try during the cross-examination of 1st prosecution witness. For part of it is headed Calendar Case No. 5. But his attempt to do so, if he made one, was ineffective, since that part of the cross-examination is in fact relevant rather to Calendar Case No. 4. And in any case the attempt was abandoned almost immediately, no such distinction being made in the cross-examination of 3rd prosecution witness, who deposed regarding both the bills and Exhibit K, or of other witnesses. Subsequently one written statement was filed by the accused under section 256 (2), and both cases were disposed of in one judgment. Mr. Richmond argues that this was one trial of separate charges of distinct offences, which offended against section 233, that the trial was, therefore, not a legal one, and that, before accused can be convicted by this or any Court, a legal trial must be held.

There is no doubt that the offences in question in the two cases were distinct, and it is not suggested that section 234, 235, 236 or 239 is applicable. It is also, in my opinion, the fact that, although two charges were framed, one trial only was held. For except in that respect the proceedings were, as pointed out above, in every way similar to those which would have taken place in one trial. It has not been shown how section 233 is not in point, and accordingly the learned Public Prosecutor's efforts have been directed mainly towards establishing that there is in question only an irregularity, to which section 537 is applicable.

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR v. KOTTAPARAMBATH.

This contention requires close scrutiny, because the effect of the leading case on the subject, Subrahmanya Ayyar v. Emperor (1), is to discountenance any liberal application of the section and because it is in terms inapplicable, as the Public Prosecutor would apply it here, to sustain the validity of a trial attacked by the accused only incidentally and not to resist directly a claim to the reversal or alteration of a decision in reference, appeal or revision. And there is in any case the direct objection, which I state in words borrowed from the decision already referred to: "When the Code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted," it cannot be said "that this contravention of the Code comes within the description of error, omission or irregularity." This principle was applied to facts resembling those now in question in essential respects in Gobind Koeri v. Emperor (2) and Raman Behary Das v. Emperor (3), the latter case being authority also for a strict construction of section 233. The only conclusion I can reach is that section 537 is inapplicable and it is, therefore, useless to follow the Public Prosecutor in his contentions that no failure of justice has been occasioned by what occurred or that the accused did not raise his objection to it at a sufficiently early stage in the proceedings.

As accused has undergone no legal trial, he cannot be convicted and sentenced by us, and if we are to take action, the only course open to us is to order that he be tried a second time. It is no doubt true that in two respects the case is one in which interference with a decision of acquittal could be justified. For it is one of public importance, since the establishment of the charge would mean that the accused profited largely by conduct subversive of the existing system of mercantile credit; and it is not, in my opinion, legitimate in one judgment to hold that accused has not been tried legally and to reach a conclusion that he is guilty, though the full argument we heard on the merits demonstrated that the Magistrate dealt most inadequately with one question of fundamental importance and never came to close quarters with the evidence. On the other hand, the charge deals with events in October 1910 and was made over three years later on the 15th May 1914. The explanation given for this delay is that accused's accounts and other documents, on which the prosecution largely depends, were not accessible to the complainant Bank, until proceedings in another case against accused had ended in this Court in September 1912. But I am not satisfied that the subsequent interval is not excessive; and it is clear that after so long accused would labour under great disabilities. In the circumstances I do not think that the case is one for re-trial. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal must be dismissed.

SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J.—I have come to the same conclusion. Mr. Richmond has raised the objection that the appeal is not properly before us. The facts he relies on for this contention are these. The Public Prosecutor presented the appeal petition to Spencer and Coutts-Trotter, JJ., in Court through the Bench Clerk on the 15th March 1915. On that date, Mr. Justice Ayling was sitting in the Admission Court. Consequently it was not competent to the learned Judge to admit the appeal.

Before dealing with the objection, a few further facts may be stated. Under the orders of a learned Judge of this Court, the records of the present case were called for by the High Court. It was numbered as Criminal Revision Case No. 752 of 1914. On the 4th March, the learned Judges who heard the case sent a notice to the Public Prosecutor calling upon him to inform the Court whether the Government was prepared to file an appeal against the acquittal, and whether he would make any further representation in the matter. The revision case was adjourned to the 15th March. On this date, the incident referred to by Mr. Richmond took place. It is conceded that Spencer and Coutts-Trotter, JJ., were constituted a Bench for hearing criminal cases for the week in which the appeal was presented.

Mr. Richmond's first contention is that there was no valid presentation of the appeal. I am unable to agree with this argument. Section 419 contemplates a presentation by the appellant or his Pleader. The petition of appeal was handed over to the clerk present in Court by the Public Prosecutor. It has not been shown that the clerk had no authority to receive the appeal petition. Even if it be said that the presentation was to the Judges direct, I am unable to see why it is not a presentation to the High Court. Moreover, the learned Judges who heard the revision petition, having issued the notice, were certainly competent to receive the appeal which was presented to them in pursuance of that notice. There is no force in this contention.

The second argument rests on the fact that in the note appended to the cause list for the week it is stated that all applications relating to criminal matters should be made before the Judge sitting in the Admission Court, and that consequently the presentation of the appeal for admission to the two learned Judges while there was an Admission Court was improper. Speaking for myself, I accept the contention of the learned Counsel that when the Public Prosecutor presented the appeal petition to the learned Judges he moved for its admission. Rule I of the Appellate Rules of Practice speaks of it as an application. I do not think that the admission of the appeal is a partial hearing of the appeal itself. I proceed on the assumption that when an appellant asks the Court to admit an appeal, he is making an application in a criminal matter. In this case, it was an urgent application, as the hearing of the revision petition which was stayed depended upon the admission of the appeal. The question then arises, whether the Criminal Bench was deprived of jurisdiction to admit the appeal because an Admission Court was sitting. The rule only says that ordinarily all applications of this kind should be heard by the Admission Judge. Under clause 13 of the Charter Act, the High Court can make rules for the exercise, by one or more Judges, of the original and appellate jurisdiction vested in the Court. Clause 14 empowers the Chief Judge to determine what Judge shall sit alone and what Judges can constitute a Bench. It was under this clause, the two learned Judges were constituted a Bench to hear and determine criminal cases. They had jurisdiction to dispose of all criminal matters during the week of their sitting. Their jurisdiction was not taken away, because a single Judge was entrusted with the duties of admitting appeals. Stress was laid on the foot-note to the cause list to which I have already referred. I have no hesitation in saying that it was not intended to restrict the powers of the Benches constituted for the week. It was only an intimation to the practitioners as to the course they should adopt. It may be taken also as a suggestion to the Benches not to encourage applications made to them otherwise than in accordance with the note. Every Judge of the High Court would certainly act on the suggestion. But there can be no warrant for arguing that this note deprives the Criminal Bench of its jurisdiction to hear applications. There is nothing in section 14 which would enable such a limitation being placed on the powers of a Bench. Clause 36 of the Letters Patent on which Mr. Richmond relies is not against this view. As pointed out in Haladhar Maiti v. Choytonna Maiti (4), the Chief Justice has power to constitute a Bench even in the absence of rules made under clause 13; and when a Bench is constituted, it has jurisdiction to hear applications and appeals in criminal cases. I agree in holding that the appeals were properly before us.

Mr. Richmond finally contends that even if we are satisfied that the judgment of the lower Court is wrong, we ought not to convict his client of the offences charged, as the trial was illegal in that it contravened the provisions of section 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is to be regretted that such an objection should be taken at this late stage.

Mr. Richmond states that he objected at the outset to evidence being let in without specifying the charges on which the accused is to be tried. Although there is authority for the position [see In the matter of Govindu (5)] that the letting in of evidence before framing a charge in respect of separate allegations is not obnoxious to section 233 of the Code of Criminal

(5) 26 M. 592; 2 Weir 297.

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR v. KOTTAPARAMBATH.

Procedare, I think that the procedure is not calculated to advance justice. In Tanguturi Srinamulu v. Nalam Krishna Row (6) and in Palaniandy Gounden v. Emperor (7) it was laid down that a trial commences only after the charge is framed. It is no doubt true that as the accused pleads only to the charge, his trial commences really after the charge. Nonetheless, he is practically on his trial from the moment the prosecution starts the case. However that may be, in this case we are concerned only with what happened after the charge was read out. The Magistrate rightly enough framed separate charges and numbered the cases as Calendar Cases Nos. 4 and 5 of 1914. But when the witnesses came to be cross-examined, he lost sight of the necessity for keeping the two trials separate and allowed the witnesses to be cross-examined promiscuously in respect of both the charges. I do not think the fact that he noted the further cross-examination of the 1st witness as in Calendar Case No. 5 is of any consequence, because that examination was not in reference to the charge framed in that case. Under these circumstances, there can be no doubt that the trial offends against the provisions of section 233.

It was argued by the learned Public Prosecutor that as the reading of the charge and the numbering of the cases were not improper, the further irregularity in not recording evidence separately did not vitiate the trials. The section says that each charge shall be tried separately and the failure to conform to it at any stage of the trial renders the proceeding illegal. See Subrahmaniya Ayyar v. Emperor (1) Gobind Koeri v. Emperor (2) and Raman v. Behary Das (3). In Emperor v. Madan Mondal (8) the learned Judges point out that if the mode of trial was wrong, the proceedings ought to be set aside.

Mr. Grant's more serious contention was that section 537 cured the defect. In the first place, the section has no application. The language of the first part of the section is against the conclusion which the Public Prosecutor asks us to adopt. In the second place, clause (a) which speaks of error "in proceedings before or during trial" does not cover cases where the trial itself is defective. Consequently, the explanation which introduces the principle of acquiescence under certain circumstances has no application. Moreover, as the Judicial Committee has held that a violation of a plain provision of law is not an irregularity, the section has no application to the present case. In Moharuddi Malita v. Jadu Nath Mandul (9) the error related to the framing of the charge, which is distinctly dealt with in clause (a) of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Moreover, in that case the trial was perfectly regular. I am, therefore, of opinion that the joint trial of the two calendar cases is opposed to section 233 and that consequently the accused should not be convicted of the offences charged against him.

I feel little doubt on the records before us that the accused is guilty of at least two out of the three counts mentioned in the charge in Calendar Case No. 4. Ordinarily such a failure of justice would warrant a re-trial of the accused. But the offence took place in October 1910 and the accused has been before the Criminal Courts on three occasions. Under these circumstances, I agree in holding that it is not desirable to direct a re-trial.

NAPER, J.—I concur. I do not, however, think that the decision of the Privy Council in Subrahmaniya Ayyar v. Emperor (1) compels us to hold that in no case can a misjoinder of charges or a failure to try charges separately be an irregularity within the meaning of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the manner in which this case comes before us that section, however, cannot be relied on and we have only to apply section 233. The only question that remains is, what course we must adopt being satisfied (1) that the accused has been tried illegally, (2) that his acquittal on the merits on two of the charges was wrong, (3) that in the circumstances we do not think that he should be re-tried on those charges. It seems to me that we must do what the lower Court could have done if its attention had been drawn to the illegality of the trial before judgment, that is acquit the accused, which in our opinion is done by dismissing the appeal.

Appellate Court, when can start new case against accused.*

The powers conferred by the Code of Criminal Procedure upon a Court of Appeal are not intended to be used in such a way as to spring up a new case on the accused without giving him any notice of the charge which he has to meet.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Etawah.

Mr. Wallack, for the Accused.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The four applicants and five others were convicted by a Magistrate of the first Class at Etawah on what is probably one of the most remarkable charges ever framed under sections 147 and 325, Indian Penal Code. The charge runs "that you on or about September 20th, 1914, at Bhasan (or elsewhere) fought against Kallu Singh or Hulas Singh (and perhaps others) with lathis and inflicted grievous hurt on the head of Kallu Singh". It appears that the Police had reported as the result of an inquiry held under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, that there had been no riot at all but that there had been an affray with four men on each side. On the evidence recorded by him the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the facts were that when the complainant, Kallu Singh, was passing the door of one Mahindar Singh the latter challenged him; Kallu Singh maintained that he had a right to pass that way and was set upon and beaten to the ground; that Kallu's brother, Hulas Singh, who followed a short distance behind was also beaten. Both Kallu Singh and Hulas Singh said that all nine accused persons had joined in the attack. The nine men having been convicted by the Magistrate appealed to the Sessions Judge, who disbelieved the witnesses examined by the Magistrate and sent for and examined another batch of witnesses and on the strength of their evidence, came to the conclusion that what had really happened was that lathis had been snatched away from two men named Pobpa and Behari, that they accompanied by Kallu Singh and Hulas Singh went to demand the return of the lathis from the accused, Debi Singh, and the two complainants were beaten by Debi Singh, Gambhir Singh and two sweepers, Saktu and Kanhaiya. These four are the applicants before me. It is impossible to say that the case accepted by the Sessions Judge is not covered by the charge framed by the Magistrate. For that charge would cover any violent attack on the complainants made by any of the accused at any place whether in the village or out of it, but notwithstanding the charge the case for the prosecution must be taken to have been that presented by the witnesses examined by the Magistrate. Neither the story told by those witnesses nor the story told by the witnesses called by the Sessions Judge appears to be a probable one. It is not unlikely that both are false. In my opinion the powers conferred by the Code of Criminal Procedure upon a Court of Appeal are not intended to be used in the way in which they were used in the present case. A totally new case was sprung up on the accused by the Court of Appeal and the accused were given no proper notice of the charge which they had to meet. I set aside the convictions of the applicants and the sentences passed on them. If they are in custody, they must be released. If they are out on bail, the bail will be discharged.

Convictions set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 435, 439—Acquittal, order of—High Court, power of, to interfere—Jurisdiction, revisional, exercise of—Notice of appeal, failure to serve on District Magistrate—Irregularity, effect of.

A High Court should not interfere with an order of acquittal where the question is as to the appreciation of evidence or where there is no patent error or defect in the order of acquittal which has resulted in grave injustice. [p. 154, col. 1.]

The mere fact that a High Court, if it were sitting as a Court of Appeal, would have come to a different conclusion on facts, is no ground for exercising revisional jurisdiction in petitions against orders of acquittal. [p. 154, col. 1.]

An omission to serve notice of appeal on the District Magistrate is an irregularity but the proceedings are not ab initio void. [p. 154, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Joint First Class Magistrate of Dindigul Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 52 of 1914, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Nelakottai, in Calendar Case No. 144 of 1914.

FACTS.—The complainant, a servant of the Hakdar in a village, complained against the two accused of offences of mischief and hurt and of illegally rescuing cattle under the Cattle Trespass Act. The defence was that the bund of the tank from which the trees were said to be cut, belonged to the villagers and as such no question of mischief arose. The Sub-Magistrate held that the Hakdar was absolutely entitled to the land and the trees thereon and convicted the accused. On appeal the Sub-Divisional Magistrate acquitted the accused, holding that the case presented all the features of a questionable civil claim being presented in a Criminal Court.

The complainant preferred a revision petition to the High Court. One of the grounds of the petition was that before the appeal was disposed of by the Sub-

Divisional Magistrate, no notice was given to the District Magistrate under section 422, Criminal Procedure Code read with rule 60 of the Madras Criminal Rules of Practice. A report was called for by his Lordship Mr. Justice Tyabji as to whether, as a matter of fact, notice was issued under that section. The District Magistrate reported that no such notice was issued.

Mr. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyengar, for Mr. R. Shadagopachariar, for the Petitioner: (1) The Appellate Magistrate reversed the conviction upon an ex parte hearing which was clearly illegal. The case should be remanded for proper disposal after notice to the District Magistrate.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar for the Respondents: The revision being against the order of acquittal, this Court should not interfere except in cases where grave public injustice had been done. Even though the ex parte hearing in the lower Appellate Court might be irregular yet the complainant was not the party prejudiced, as the only person entitled to notice under section 422 was the District Magistrate himself and he did not complain against the want of notice.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Public Prosecutor, argued contra.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar in reply: The support of the Public Prosecutor in favour of the petition would not in any way add to the weight of the arguments for the petitioner as the Public Prosecutor himself had no locus standi in this petition. If the District Magistrate had been really prejudiced, he could very well have moved the Local Government to appeal against the acquittal. In the absence of any such appeal, he could not be heard to say anything either for or against the application.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise the order of the Joint First Class Magistrate of Dindigul Division, reversing the conviction and sentence passed by the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Nelakottai in Calendar Case No. 144 of 1914.

The complainant filed a complaint against the two accused, who are the present counter-petitioners, charging them with offences under sections 352 and 426 of the Indian Penal Code and section 24 of Act I of 1871 (Cattle Trespass Act). The Stationary Sub-Magistrate fined each of the accused Rs. 15 for each of the offences and directed them to pay Rs. 5-4-0 as costs to the complainant. An appeal was preferred and Mr. Glasson, the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul Division, reversed the conviction after going through the evidence and material papers, as he was of opinion that the case was not proved.

A preliminary objection has been taken by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar for the respondents that no criminal revision petition lies to set aside an order of acquittal and that the only remedy in such cases is an appeal by the Government as provided for by section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It has been argued that a private person has no locus standi in such cases and reference has been made to Thandavan v. Perianna (1) and Sinnu Gounden, In re (2). The right of a private party to prefer a revision petition against an order of acquittal and the circumstances under which the High Court would interfere, if at all, have been considered in numerous cases. In Thandavan v. Perianna (1), it was held that an appeal against an order of acquittal by way of revision was not contemplated by the Criminal Procedure Code and their Lordships refused to hear the petitioner's Counsel. The observations of Miller, J., in the case of Sinnu Gounden, In re (2), to the effect that to entertain proceedings by way of revision where an appeal would lie from an acquittal under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is contrary to the spirit, if not to the letter of sub-section 5 of section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, also support the view taken in Thandavan v. Perianna (1). There re, however, numerous cases where the High Court has held that it has power to interfere in revision, although the powers were exercised within very narrow limits. I need only refer to Sukho v. Durga Prasad (3), Queen-Empress v. Ala Bakhsh (4), In re Sheikh Aminuddin (5), Emperor v. Madar Bakhsh (6), Heerabai v. Framji Bhikaji (7), Municipal Committee of Dacca v. Hingoo Raj (8), Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Karuna Baistobi (9), Rupa Mandal v. Keshab Mandal (10), Bellew v. Mrs. Parker (11), Rakhial Das Roy v. Kailash Banu (12), Kangali Sardar v. Rama Charan Bhattacharjee (13), Ramjiwan Rai v. Abilakh Barai (14), Shaikh Bazu v. Raika Singh (15).

The view taken by the Allahabad High Court in the cases reported as Sakho v. Durga Prasad (3) and Queen-Empress v. Ala Bakhsh (4) was that the Court would not interfere on facts but only on questions of law apparent from the record. In Heerabai v. Framji Bhikaji (7), their Lordships observed that though the High Court has power to review an order of acquittal under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, yet it would not ordinarily interfere with such an order in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction because an appeal can always be made by the Local Government against such an order under section 417 of the Code and that it is open to the complainant to move the Government, if so advised, to appeal against the order. Though in some of the cases above referred to, the Calcutta High Court went further than the other Courts as to the extent of the scope of interference in such cases, the decision of the Chief Justice and Justice Fletcher in Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Chowdhuri (16) is to the effect that the power should be exercised only sparingly and when urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. I entirely agree with the remarks of Jenkins, C. J., in the above case, and while I am not prepared to hold that there is no power for the High Court to interfere in revision, I am of opinion that applications by private parties ought to be discouraged and that the Court should only interfere when it considers that interference is urgently demanded in the interest of public justice. It seems to me that the Court should not interfere with an order of acquittal where the question is as to the appreciation of evidence or where there is no patent error or defect in the order of acquittal passed by the lower Court which has resulted in grave injustice. The mere fact that the High Court if it was sitting as a Court of Appeal would have come to a different conclusion on facts, is no ground for exercising revisional jurisdiction in petitions against orders of acquittal. 10

Turning to the merits, the chief ground urged before me is that notice did not go to the District Magistrate as required by the Criminal Procedure Code and Rules of Criminal Practice and that consequently the reversal of the judgment of the second class Magistrate by the Joint Magistrate was erroneous. A report was called for as to the alleged want of notice to the District Magistrate and it appears that although notice was ordered by the Joint Magistrate when he admitted the appeal no notice was, as a matter of fact, served on the District Magistrate. The case has been argued on both sides on the footing that notice did not go. Section 422 of the Code of Criminal Procedure enacts that if the Appellate Court does not dismiss the appeal summarily, it shall cause notice to be given to the appellant or his Pleader, and to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf and section 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directs that the appeal shall be disposed of after hearing the appellant or his Pleader, if he appears, and the Public Prosecutor if he appears. The practice in all these cases is for the notice of appeal to be served on the District Magistrate and for the District Magistrate to instruct the Public Prosecutor to appear, if in his opinion the case is a fit one for the Public Prosecutor to appear and argue in support of the conviction. It very often happens that the District Magistrate does not think it worth while to instruct the Public Prosecutor to appear. There can be no doubt that the action of the Joint Magistrate in hearing the appeal when notice was, as a matter of fact, served on the District Magistrate, is irregular, having regard to the provisions of sections 422 and 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I do not think that the mere omission to serve notice of appeal on the District Magistrate is anything more than an irregularity and do not agree with the arguments of the petitioner's Counsel that the proceedings are ab initio void.

Mr. P. R. Grant, who appeared for the Public Prosecutor, states that he has no instructions to urge for a reversal on the ground that the District Magistrate had no notice and I must take it that so far as this case is concerned, the District Magistrate does not consider that the interests of justice have suffered owing to his not having received notice of the appeal.

I have gone through the records and do not think that any grounds exist for the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.

The petition fails and is dismissed.

As section 82 of the Penal Code exempts a child under 7 years of age from any criminal liabilities it is illegal for a Police Officer to arrest a boy less than 7 years of age for the offence of theft, and an obstruction offered to such arrest is not an offence under section 225B of the Penal Code. KIRPA RAM v. EMPEROR.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.—I am of opinion that the conviction of the 1st accused under section 225B cannot stand. He was accused of having offered obstruction to the lawful apprehension of a person apprehended by the Police for theft. It is found that the person apprehended was a boy under seven years of age and the case was argued both by the Public Prosecutor and Counsel for the petitioners on that footing.

Section 82 of the Penal Code enacts that nothing is an offence which is done by a child under seven years of age. Section 4 clause (o) of the Criminal Procedure Code defines offence to mean any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force. The powers given by section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the Police Officer to arrest without a warrant are only in respect of cognisable offences. If the person arrested is a child under seven years of age, who under section 82 of the Indian Penal Code cannot commit an offence, it is difficult to see how such an arrest can be a lawful apprehension within the meaning of section 225B.

So far as the 2nd accused is concerned, the person rescued was over seven and under twelve years of age and section 83 of the Penal Code applies. The arrest was a prima facie lawful one and the 2nd accused was guilty under section 225B. The sentence is not severe and I see no reason to interfere.

I reverse the conviction and sentence passed on the 1st accused and dismiss the petition of the 2nd accused.

(b)—Alteration of sentence of 3 months' rigorous imprisonment into one month's imprisonment and a fine—Payment of fine—Alteration, whether amounts to enhancement.

Where a District Magistrate on appeal altered the sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment to one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 or in default one month's further rigorous imprisonment and the fine was paid and the appellant did not wish to have the original sentence restored:

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the alteration did not amount to an enhancement.

Emperor v. Sagwa, 23 A. 497; A. W. N. (1901) 176, referred to.

Petition for revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Multan, dated the 20th August 1914.

Mr. Beechey, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—Notice in this case issued only as regards the legality of the alteration of the sentence passed on Kirpa Ram, who was sentenced by the Magistrate to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment. The learned District Magistrate on appeal altered the sentence to one month's rigorous imprisonment and fine of Rs. 100 or, in default, one month's further rigorous imprisonment. The only question is, whether this alteration amounts to an enhancement of sentence.

No doubt in some cases an alteration of this kind might be equivalent to an enhancement. The convict might be a poor man to whom the order of fine would be a heavier punishment than the imprisonment, and, as is pointed out in Emperor v. Sagwa (1), the fine can, under section 70, Indian Penal Code, be levied even after the imprisonment awarded in default has been undergone, such imprisonment not being a discharge of the fine.

But in the present case the fine has been paid, and the appellant, when asked by us whether he would like to have the fine refunded and the original sentence passed by the Magistrate restored, gave a decided answer in the negative.

We hold, therefore, that there has been no enhancement of sentence in this case.

The application for revision is dismissed.

The Criminal Procedure Code makes no distinction between an appeal from a conviction and an appeal from an acquittal. Consequently if in an appeal from an acquittal, the Appellate Court thinks that the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence it has no jurisdiction to refuse to convict. [p. 156, col. 2.]

Appeal against the acquittal order passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Larkana.

Mr. E. Raymond (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an appeal under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Larkana acquitting the accused, Kadirbux, who had been charged with an offence under section 304, Part I, Indian Penal Code.

The deceased Bachal had land in the village of Rahuja and was the son of Lano, the headman of the Rahuja of that village. Information that he had been beaten by the accused in a quarrel over a right of water was brought to the Larkana Police Station at 4 A. M. on the 8th July by one Jan Mahomed. The Sub-Inspector reached the village before sunrise and within a few hours completed his investigation, arrested the accused and sent the corpse to the dispensary at Larkana where it arrived the same morning. The doctor found a contusion 3 inches long by $\frac{1}{2}$ inch broad on the outer side of the right thigh an extravasation of blood below the skin on the right temple. A clot of blood had formed on the brain below the temple and this was the cause of death. The Sessions Judge, without expressing any very definite opinion, seemed inclined to the view that the blow on the head was the result of a fall. No doubt the injury might possibly have been caused by a fall, but as the contusion on the thigh was clearly a stick blow there can be no reasonable doubt but that the damage to the head was also caused by a stick.

The next question is whether it was the accused who hit Bachal on the head with a stick.

On the whole I feel no doubt that the case is a true one. Bachal must have named his assailant; the quarrel as to water receives corroboration from the shortage of water which necessitated the witness going to settle rotation of water supply and by the dam in the Karia; the first information at Larkana was given before the offence took a serious turn and it names the accused and there could have been no motive for fabrication then, and the very brevity of the information shows that there had then been no thinking over or manipulation of the case. Neither the father nor the witnesses bear any grudge against the accused nor have any motive for falsely charging him.

Mr. Kalumal refers to the cases of Empress of India v. Gayadin (1) and Queen-Empress v. Robinson (2) and contends that even if we disagree with the view of the Sessions Judge, we should not interfere because he tried the case carefully and his conclusions are not unreasonable or perverse. The cases cited do go the length of saying that the High Court should not interfere under section 417 unless there has been an egregious failure of justice. But they have been practically overruled by the same High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Prag Dat (3). I think the view taken by the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts in Queen-Empress v. Bibhuti Bhusan Bit (4) and Queen-Empress v. Karigowda (5) is the correct one. The Code makes no distinction between an appeal from a conviction and an appeal from an acquittal. In the appeal from an acquittal if this Court thinks the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence, it has no jurisdiction to refuse to convict. The power of appeal under section 417 is one that should be exercised sparingly by Government. But the discretion to exercise that right of appeal appertains to Government and is not subject to the control of the Court.

I have, therefore, no hesitation in giving effect to my conclusion that the accused is guilty. I do not, however, think that he knew that he was likely to cause death. I would, therefore, convict him of an offence under section 325, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for one year.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), s. 219—Autrefois acquit—Constructing building without permission—Conviction for prospective disobedience—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to order demolition.

A Magistrate is competent to convict and sentence an accused for constructing a building overhanging a Municipal street under section 219 (2) of the Punjab Municipal Act but he is not authorised to pass an order for demolition of the building, nor can he pass a sentence of daily fine until such time as the building should be demolished. [p. 157, col. 2.]

Where the Chief Court set aside the order directing the demolition of a building and fine for prospective disobedience:

Held, that the order of the Chief Court was no bar to a fresh prosecution in respect of proved initial disobedience and continuing breach of the Municipal Committee's notice. [p. 157, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 21st of October 1914, reversing that of the Honorary Magistrate, first Class, Amritsar, dated the 16th September 1914, and acquitting the Respondent.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in this case at the instance of the Municipal Committee, Amritsar, was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50 for constructing a balcony overhanging the Municipal street without the permission of the Municipal authorities, and was further directed to demolish the offending balcony and to pay a further fine of Re. 1 per diem until such time as the balcony should be demolished.

This sentence was revised by a Judge of this Court on 11th April 1913, and it was then held that conviction and fine of Rs. 50 were valid, but that the Magistrate had no power to order the demolition of the balcony or to inflict a fine for prospective disobedience.

Armed with this order the respondent persisted in disobeying the Municipality's injunction to demolish his balcony, whereupon the Committee again moved the Magistrate, with the result that the respondent was fined Rs. 50 for disobedience plus Rs. 143-14—being the penalty calculated at Rs. 2 per diem for the continuing breach up to the date of judgment.

The respondent appealed from this sentence and conviction to the Sessions Judge, who acquitted respondent on the ground that this Court's order of 11th April 1913 was a bar to a fresh prosecution on the same facts. From that order of acquittal the local Government has preferred an appeal to this Court.

We are quite unable to accept the lower Appellate Court's view. This Court's order of 11th April 1913 modified the sentence of the first Court on two grounds, first, that a sentence of fine for prospective disobedience was illegal; secondly, that the Magistrate in ordering demolition was acting ultra vires.

But this finding in no way detracted from the power of the Municipality to insist on the demolition of the offending chajja or balcony and to secure a conviction for proved disobedience and an established, as opposed to a potential, continuing breach.

We understand that the balcony has recently been demolished—and we take into consideration the fact that respondent has already been punished for his encroachment on Municipal property, and he does not appear to be a person of large means,

HAR DAYAL v. EMPEROR.

We accept the appeal, restore the conviction of the first Court, but reduce the sentence to Rs. 50 for the initial disobedience of the Committee's notice and Rs. 50 in respect of the continuing breach, in short Rs. 100 in all.

Where an Assistant Sessions Judge sentences one of the several accused in a case to rigorous imprisonment for more than four years and others to a term of four years each, an appeal lies to the High Court, although the accused sentenced to the higher term of imprisonment does not appeal.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Assistant Sessions Judge of Cawnpore.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants have been convicted by an Assistant Sessions Judge of an offence under section 457 of the Indian Penal Code and have been sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment each. At the same trial Chhote alias Bhawani was convicted of the same offence and sentenced to six years' rigorous imprisonment. Chhote has not appealed. The two appellants in the first instance presented their appeals to the Court of the Sessions Judge of Cawnpore. The officer forwarded the appeals to this Court on the ground that under section 408, proviso (b), of the Code of Criminal Procedure none of the convicts could appeal to the Court of Session. The question has been raised in more than one case of this kind, whether an appeal against a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding four years lies to the High Court by reason of the fact that another person convicted at the same trial was sentenced to imprisonment for a term exceeding four years. Both Mr. Justice Tudball and Mr. Justice Piggott have held that in such a case as this all the appeals lie to the High Court. I am of the same opinion. This case is one which comes within the terms of proviso (b) to section 408 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The fact that the person upon whom a sentence of imprisonment exceeding four years has been inflicted has not chosen to appeal does not affect the question. On the merits I have no doubt that the appellants, Har Dayal and Muhammad Husain, were rightly convicted. I have examined the evidence and I entirely agree with the Assistant Sessions Judge and the assessors that the two appellants were among the men who broke into the complainant's house on the night in question. Their appeals are dismissed.

UJIR SHEIKH v. SYID ALI SHEIKH.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.—I am unable to uphold the conviction in this case. It is common ground that a depot-keeper like the accused is allowed to have arrack of U. P. 32 degrees. When the cask was examined on the 16th January 1914, the arrack in it was of the strength of U. P. 32'5. The question for decision is whether this weakening in the strength of the arrack to the extent of five pints is due to dilution. Exhibit A, the license in the case, shows that it is possible that arrack may lose strength to the extent of one degree from natural causes. Further, when the Assistant Commissioner sealed the cask on the 28th April 1914, he found the arrack to be U. P. 31'4. When the cask was produced in Court and examined on the 23rd July it was found to be 31'8. There is no suggestion that the seals were tampered with between these two dates. It has also to be remembered that there had been heavy sales before the date of the offence. It is more likely that the difference of five pints was due to constant exposure on account of the frequent sales. I think the accused is at least entitled to the benefit of the doubt arising in this case; The conviction against him is reversed. The fine, if already paid, will be refunded. The cask will be returned to the accused; if it has been sold, its price should be paid to him.

Conviction set aside.

Under section 423 (d) of the Code of Criminal Procedure an Appellate Court has power to set aside an order under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, as the section authorises the Appellate Court in an appeal to make any incidental order.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate and the opposite party to show cause why the order setting aside the order under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, should not itself be set aside. It has been argued that the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction under the Code to set aside that order and, further, that on the merits the order ought not to have been set aside. So far as the question of jurisdiction is concerned, we think that the Appellate Court had power to set it aside under section 423 (d), Criminal Procedure Code, which authorises the Appellate Court in an appeal to make any incidental order. So far as the merits are concerned, it appears that, on the findings of the Appellate Court, the order under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, ought not to have been allowed to stand, and that the Appellate Court was, therefore, right in setting it aside. This Rule must be discharged.

The Madras Revenue Recovery Act does not contain any provision requiring in cases where the defaulter is absent at the time of distraining, that the demand in writing described in section 8 should be delivered to the defaulter before the distress. A person distraining in these circumstances is not doing anything illegal and resistance to him is punishable as an offence under the Act. [p. 160, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1895, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Malappuram, in Criminal Appeal No. 59 of 1914, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the second class Magistrate of Tirur, in Calendar Case No. 97 of 1914.

Dr. K. Pandalai, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Public Prosecutor.

ORDER.—The question is whether the act of the distrainer in this case was legal, so as to make resistance to his act an offence. Dr. Pandalai's main contention is that the only person who can be classed as the 'defaulter' within the meaning of section 8 of the Madras Act II of 1864 is the person registered as pattadar, and that the service on the pattadar, whether present or absent, of a demand in writing is a condition precedent to making distraint under that Act. Taking for granted the first part of this contention to be correct, the difficulty as to the second is that the Act does not contain any provision requiring, in cases where the defaulter is absent at the time of distraining, that the demand in writing described in section 8 should be delivered to the defaulter before the distress. But it is argued that such a procedure must be assumed to have been intended from the fact that the person liable to pay the arrear is the pattadar and that a production of the demand in his absence would be a meaningless act. In construing the Act, we are not inclined to read anything into it which is not expressly stated therein. No provision is made in the Act as to what the distrainer is to do with the written demand in the case of the defaulter not being present when the distrainer arrives on the land, except in the third part of the section which reads thus: "When a defaulter may be absent, a copy of the writing with the endorsement shall be fixed or left at his usual place of residence, or on the premises where this property may have been distrained, before the expiration of the third day, calculating from the day of the distress." This clearly refers to what is to be done after the distress and is not a condition precedent to making it. The section itself and the Board's Standing Order No.

44, paragraph 7, which deals with the procedure in distraint, declare that the demand in writing is to be the distrainer's authority for making the distress. In the form of the demand, as given in the appendix to the Board's Standing Orders, there is a direction which practically reproduces the words of the section that "the distrainer should produce this order, and if the sum due be not at once paid, he may make distress, and on the day on which the property is distrained he should deliver to the defaulter a copy of the order endorsing thereon a list of the property distrained and the name of this place where it is kept." It is obvious that if the defaulter is not present at the spot, it cannot be shown to him then and there. But the arming of the distrainer with a written demand signed by a duly empowered Revenue Officer is an act which serves to distinguish him from a thief or trespasser in the eyes of the tenant or mortgagee in occupation of the land. Section 11 of the same Act provides for a tenant whose crop, are attached for an arrear of revenue paying the arrear and deducting the amount from any rent due by him to the pattadar. It thus appears that the production of the written demand is not such a meaningless act as it might be thought, and that the provision for the delivery on the same day of a copy to the defaulter is only intended to apply when the defaulter is present. The petitioners cannot rely on any omission to furnish the defaulter with a copy of the demand after the distraint was made as an excuse for resisting the distraint. We consider that P. W. No. 1, when making the distraint in the absence of the pattadar who lived twenty miles away, did all that was required of him by law. The point of law now raised was not decided in Queen-Empress v. Ramasami (1), which Dr. Pandalai has cited in favour of his contention.

The sentences imposed for the offences committed by the petitioners in defying the authority of the Revenue Officers are not, in our opinion, excessive.

The criminal revision petition is dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of dismissal of an application for revocation of Probate of an alleged Will of one Raj Chandra Baisya. The testator died on the 25th April 1899, and is said to have made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 18th April 1899. He left a widow, Anandamayi, and his nearest male relation alive at the time of his death was the appellant, Shyama Charan Baisya, who would consequently be entitled to succeed as reversionary heir on her death. The Will authorised the widow to take a son in adoption and constituted her absolute owner of the estate, if she did not exercise her power of adoption. There were also two legacies, one in favour of Giris Chandra Bhattacharyya, the spiritual guide of the testator, the other in favour of Karunamayi, the daughter of the appellant and the wife of the brother of Anandamayi. No application for Probate was made till the 4th August 1902, more than three years after the death of the testator. In this application Anandamayi stated that, besides herself, the deceased had left no other near relation, kindred or heir surviving him. A general citation was issued under section 69 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, on the 7th August 1902, and is said to have been put up on the north wall of the house of the deceased on the 14th August and on the gate of the Court house on the 18th August. Special citation was also issued on the 13th August 1902 on the two legatees. The spiritual preceptor, it is said, declined to give a receipt for the notice, and it was accordingly affixed on the wall of his house on the 25th August 1902. The other legatee was not found in the house of her husband, who declined to receive the notice, which was accordingly affixed on the wall of his house on the 19th August 1902. The return of service states that the lady had gone to the house of her father; there is, in fact, some evidence to show that she was not on good terms with her husband and had been discarded by him; the statement in the return that she had gone to the house of her father may, accordingly, be accepted as a true version. On the 5th September 1902, one Biswanath Baisya filed a caveat, but he does not appear to have persisted in his opposition. The result was that the Will was formally proved and Probate granted on the 22nd September 1902. The Probate was not, however, actually issued till the 28th May 1903. The widow continued in occupation of the estate till her death, which took place on the 2nd December 1910. She appears to have alienated portions of the estate for alleged necessity on the 14th October 1903, 4th December 1905, and 9th October 1907. According to the petitioner, he attempted to take possession of the estate after the death of the widow, but was opposed by the transferees who set up title by purchase from her as executrix. On the 18th May 1911, he consequently applied for revocation of Probate on the ground that the Will was a forgery and that the Probate had been obtained without notice to him. The application was opposed by the representatives of the spiritual preceptor and by the transferees from the widow; the other legatee died in 1906. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the application on the ground that the petitioner was barred by the doctrine of acquiescence. The substantial question in controversy in the present appeal is, whether this view is well-founded.

It has not been disputed that the petitioner was the nearest male relation of the testator at the time of his death and was entitled to succeed as reversionary heir on the demise of the widow. The testator and the petitioner were the sons of two sisters, and were, from the point of view of Hindu Law, near relations. The petitioner was thus clearly a person entitled to intervene in the Probate proceedings. It was ruled by this Court in the cases of Kamona Soondury Dasse v. Harro Lall Shaha (1); Khetramoni v. Shyama Churn (2); Bepin Behari v. Manoda (3) and Brindaban Chunder v. Sureshwar (4), that although a reversioner under the Hindu Law has no present alienable interest in the property left by the deceased, he is substantially interested in the protection or devolution of the estate, and as such is entitled to appear and be heard in a Probate proceeding. This position has not been seriously controverted on behalf of the respondent; but it has been argued that as section 62, unlike section 64, does not specifically require that the names and residences of the family or other relatives of the deceased should be stated in the application, omission to furnish such information does not affect the validity of the proceedings. This need not be disputed; but two points are perfectly plain, namely, first, that if the applicant for Probate chooses to make a statement as to the relations of the deceased the information he gives to the Court must be correct and not misleading and secondly, that as observed in the case of Nistarany v. Brahmomoyi (5), when a Will is propounded which alters the devolution of property, the District Judge should, in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by section 69 of the Probate Act as to the mode of issuing citations, direct special citations to persons whose rights are immediately affected by the Will. In the case before us, the petition contained the untrue statement that, besides the widow, the deceased had left no other near relation, kindred or heir surviving him. With what motive this statement was made, it is needless to speculate; it is immaterial whether the untrue statement was intentional and fraudulent or was the result of an accidental mistake. The fact remains that the statement was made, and that misled thereby the Court did not direct the issue of special citation on the petitioner, as it would undoubtedly have done if apprised of his existence. Consequently, the proceeding to obtain the grant was defective in substance, within the meaning of the first clause of the explanation to section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act; reference may, in this connection, be made to illustration (b) appended to that section: In the goods of Gunga Bissen Mundra (6). The respondents were, consequently, driven to invoke the aid of the doctrine that mere omission to serve a special citation is not by itself a sufficient ground for revocation, if it is shown that the person on whom the citation should have been served is otherwise aware of the proceedings. Before this principle is applied to the circumstances of this case, it is necessary to examine its scope and precise import.

The leading decision on the subject is the judgment of Sir John Nicholl in Newell v. Weeks (7) where he observed as follows: "The process of citing parties is a convenient one for all suitors, because when that is done, you need not prove actual privity—the law presumes actual privity after the legal process—the lis pendens is sufficient notice that persons should appear and protect their own interests—but if you can prove actual privity, the legal process, in point of solid justice and sound reason, is superfluous; though ex abundanti cautela, it may still be convenient to resort to it and have it upon record." To the same effect is a long series of decisions, amongst which may be mentioned, Hoffman v. Norris (8); Richardson v. Claney (9); Bell v. Armstrong (10); Braham v. Burchell (11); Blake v. Knight (12); Merryweather v. Turner (13); Ratcliffe v. Barnes (14);

Duffy v. Brady (15); Wytycherley v. Andrews (16); Goddard v. Smith (17); In re Topping (18); Young v. Holloway (19); Mohan v. Broughton (20); Williams v. Evans (21). The reason for the rule has been thus summarised by Sir John Nicholl in the case first mentioned: "Spectators to the whole and privy to the whole, if they had been dissatisfied, they might have intervened at any moment of the proceedings. This right of intervention, coupled with their privity to the proceedings, is decisive to shew that they can have sustained no prejudice by not having been before cited, and not having before given a formal appearance." To the same effect is the observation of Sir Cresswell in Ratcliffe v. Barnes (14): "Where a party has had full notice, and has had the opportunity of availing himself of the contest, he will be bound by the decision." Similarly, Lord Penzance said in Wytycherley v. Andrews (16): "If a person knowing what was passing, was content to stand by and see his battle fought by somebody else in the same interest, he should be bound by the result, and not be allowed to re-open the case." The rule that a person is bound by proceedings to which he is no party and of which he has received no notice from Court, thus depends on his full knowledge of the proceedings and his capacity to make himself a party. Consequently cases may be found in the reports which show that a next-of-kin or an executor who has acquiesced in a grant of Probate without full knowledge of the proceedings may obtain a revocation of the grant: Williams v. Evans (21); Young v. Holloway (19); Peters v. Tilly (22); Witchie v. Malcolm (23). These principles have been adopted and applied in Indian Courts in a long line of authorities, amongst which may be mentioned, Komolochun Dutt v.

Nibruttn (24); Nistariny v. Brahmomoyi (5); Brinda v. Radhica (25); In re Pitambar Gir-dhar (26); In the goods of Bhuggobutty Dasi (27); Rebells v. Rebells (28); Blokeshi v. Hari Prosad (29); Kunja Lal v. Kailash Chandra (30); Nalini Sundari Gupta v. Bejoy Kumar Roy (31); Dwijendra Nath v. Golok Nath (32). It is further well-settled that where in answer to an application for revocation by a person on whom citation should have been issued, it is pleaded that he did not intervene though aware of the proceedings, the burden of proof that he had full knowledge is on the person who alleges it; it is not necessary for the party who applies for revocation to prove not only that no special citation was served on him, but also that he had no knowledge of the proceedings. Prem Chand Das v. Surendra Nath Saha (33). It is thus clear, from what has already been said, that if a person is to be deprived of his right to have the Will proved in his presence, on the ground of acquiescence or waiver, he must be proved to have possessed full knowledge of the fact; for it is elementary that there can be no acquiescence without full knowledge both of the right infringed and of the acts which constitute the infringement; in the words of Turner, V. C., in Marker v. Marker (34), parties cannot be said to acquiesce in the claims of others unless they are fully cognizant of their right to dispute them. See also Beauchamp v. Winn (35); De Bussche v. Alt (36); Willmott v. Barber (37). There is further, as Lord Cottenham pointed out in Duke of Leeds v. Amherst (38), a distinction between a case where the acquiescence alleged occurs while the act acquiesced in is in progress and another where the acquiescence takes place after the act has been completed. In the former case, the acquiescence is quiescence under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred from it. In the latter case, when the act is completed without any knowledge or without any assent on the part of the person whose right is infringed, the matter must be determined obviously on very different legal considerations. A right of action has then vested in him, and mere delay to take legal proceedings to redress the injury cannot, by itself, constitute a bar to such proceedings, unless the delay on his part, after he has acquired full knowledge, has affected or altered the position of his opponent. Similarly, a person cannot be barred of his remedy on the ground of waiver, unless at the time of the alleged waiver he is shown to have been fully cognizant of his right and of the facts of the case; for, as Lord Cranworth said in Darnley v. L. C. & D. Railway Company (39), a waiver must be an intentional act with knowledge. We shall now proceed to test the case before us in the light of these principles.

The testator died on the 25th April 1899; the widow remained in occupation of the estate of her husband ostensibly in her character as widow; there is no evidence to show that the Will was produced or set up at any time during the three years and a half which elapsed before the application for Probate was made on the 4th August 1902. There was consequently nothing to put the reversioner on his guard or to rouse his suspicion. When, again, the application for Probate was made, the general citation as also the special citation on the daughter of the appellant were served in a manner not calculated to bring the proceedings to the actual notice of the parties. A caveat was no doubt filed by a distant agnate of the deceased, but for some unexplained reason he did not persist in his opposition. The consequence was that the order was made as in a non-contentious proceeding on the 22nd September 1902. There is no evidence to show that during the few weeks that the application remained pending, the appellant was in any way apprised thereof. The burden of proof, as we have said, is upon the respondents to establish that he had full and definite knowledge of the proceedings taken in Court; this burden they have not discharged. The evidence is directed to show that the proceedings were known to men in the village or to other members of the community. This is clearly insufficient, for we cannot hold that the appellant is barred by acquiescence or waiver, unless it is proved that he had full knowledge of the facts, such as would enable him to appear and intervene. It is significant that it was not even put in cross-examination to the appellant that he had become aware of the proceedings before they terminated. There is also nothing to show that he was apprised of the order after it had been made; on the other hand, he pledges his oath that he came to know of the Will and Probate for the first time when after the death of the widow he attempted to take possession of the estate. The inference follows that the respondents have failed to show that though no special citation was issued to the appellant, he is not entitled to have the Will proved in his presence, as he had such knowledge of the proceedings as would have enabled him to intervene therein or to have the Probate revoked earlier. The case thus falls within the general rule and not within the exception.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the Probate revoked. The appellant is entitled to costs both here and in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohurs. We direct that the record be returned to the Court of the District Judge, so that the Probate case may be restored and the objectors allowed an opportunity to prove the Will in the presence of the appellant; as the executrix and the legatees are dead, the conduct of the proceedings in support of the Will may now be given to such of the representatives of the legatees and the purchasers from the executrix as may desire to carry them on.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMWOOD, J.—These two appeals, Nos. 790 and 2024 of 1912, relate to a litigation for rent which has been going on since 1906. The proceedings by which they have now come before us illustrate in the most extraordinary way the ease with which questions of limitation and fatal irregularities may escape the notice of several Benches in succession unless facts are properly brought to the notice of the Judges at the time applications are made.

The history of this case is as follows: A suit was brought for rent in 1906 which was decided ex parte. Towards the close of three years execution was taken out and the defendants applied for re-hearing. The Munsif restored the suit. In the meantime another rent suit against the same defendants had been filed in the year 1910. The suits were consolidated and the Munsif decreed the suits with modifications. On appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the Munsif and decreed the plaintiff's suit in full on the 20th December 1911. The decree was signed on the 22nd December 1911.

RAMASWAMI AIYAR v. SUNDARAM AIYAR.

The appeals were filed in this Court in the two cases on the 10th April 1912. Appeal No. 790 appears to have been filed on the last day with a copy of the judgment, which covered both the cases, and of the decree in Appeal No. 790 which differed from the decree in the other suit. Appeal No. 2024 was filed without any copy of decree or judgment, and it is alleged that inasmuch as the copies might have taken less time in that case that it was not filed within the period of limitation. But this, of course, we cannot now go into, as we cannot assume that it would have taken any different time to get copies in this case to what it did in the other. On the 17th June 1912, the memorandum of appeal in No. 2024 was returned to the appellant with a note under Order XLI, rule 1, that there was no copy of the decree appealed from. A copy had been obtained on the 1st May 1912 and it was filed by the appellant on the 5th July 1912. Appeal No. 790 came up before a Bench of this Court under Order XLI, rule 11, on the 24th June 1912 and was summarily dismissed.

The copy of the decree, which was filed on the 5th July 1912, was accepted. There was no prayer for extension of time, although it was mentioned in a note that the copy was out of time. But to avoid the law of limitation, section 5 of the Limitation Act would have to be applied, and we find that no order stating that the Court was satisfied, as is required by that section, was recorded. Curiously enough Appeal No. 2024, which was an analogous appeal filed at the same time as No. 790 did not come on for hearing under Order XLI, rule 11, until the 2nd January 1913 before another Bench. The Bench admitted it without being told that it was barred by limitation and without any adjudication upon that point. Thereupon a review of the order of dismissal in Appeal No. 790 was filed before another Bench, that is the fourth Bench, before which these cases had come and was granted on the 1st February 1913 without notice to the other side.

Now whether, as speaking for myself, I am able to hold that Order XLVII, rule 7, enables the respondent to take objection before us now in this appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit, or whether he is entitled to invoke the inherent power of this Court, as both of us are prepared to hold and as was held in the case of Ajant Singh v. Sundar Mull (1), it is clear that the non-compliance with rule 4 of Order XLVII renders the granting of this application for review, which was prejudicial to the respondent, a nullity and that such an application could not be granted without previous notice. We have already shown that under Order XLI, rule 1, filing of the decree of the Appellate Court is imperative, and that the appeal cannot be said to have been preferred until that decree is filed. Appeal No. 2024 is, therefore, clearly barred by limitation.

That being so, the preliminary objection must prevail and both the appeals must be dismissed. The question of whether any second appeal lay on the matters found by the Subordinate Judge is one which we need not go into. The amounts are very small and in dismissing these appeals with costs, we think that a single hearing fee of one gold mohur is sufficient for both these appeals.

CHAPMAN, J.—I concur.

Second appeals against the decree of the District Court of Tanjore in Appeal Suits Nos. 130 and 131 of 1912, preferred against those of the Revenue Divisional Officer of Pat-tukkottai in Summary Suits Nos. 278 and 279 of 1911.

Messrs. P. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar and K. G. Panchapakesa Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondent.

These second appeals connected with Second Appeals Nos. 79 to 82, 278 and 281 to 293 of 1913 coming on for hearing on the 20th and 21st July 1914, and having stood over for consideration till the 18th August 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—These twenty connected second appeals arose out of suits brought by 20 sets of tenants against the Receiver and Manager of the Tanjore Palace Estate for recovery of the excess amount alleged to have been "exacted" as swatantrams (beyond the legitimate rents) by the defendant in Fasli 1320, these swatantrams being alleged to be not part of the legitimate melvaram due for the landlord's share.

Section 143 of the Estates Land Act says "that landlords shall not exact from the ryots under any name or under any pretence anything in addition to the rent lawfully payable. All stipulations and reservations for such additional payment shall be void". Then section 144 provides "that every ryot from whom any sum of money or any portion of the produce of the land has been exacted by the landlord in excess of the rent lawfully payable, shall be entitled to recover by a suit before the Collector, in addition to the amount or value of what has been so exacted, such sum by way of penalty which the Collector deems fit," not exceeding double the amount or value so exacted and not exceeding also one hundred rupees. The Deputy Collector in whose Court these suits were instituted held that the amounts paid by these twenty sets of plaintiffs under four of the five heads of swatantram did not constitute part of the legitimate rent, and that they were exacted from the plaintiffs for Fasli 1320 by the defendant and he, therefore, decreed the return of these illegal fees along with $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the respective amount (so illegally collected) by way of penalty.

The learned District Judge on the appeals by the defendant held (a) that those four items formed part of the legitimate rent because, "whatever names be used for the fees in question, they were originally part of the demand made upon the tenant for the occupation of the land;" (b) and even if they were not originally part of the rent, they were made such by the contracts between the parties, such contracts being embodied in the registered documents, Exhibit II series, which are the muchilikas executed for the seven Faslis 1318 to 1324 by the tenants to the defendant. The District Judge, therefore, dismissed all the suits with costs. Hence these second appeals by the plaintiffs.

As regards 10 of these second appeals, I think they can be disposed of on the short ground that the plaintiffs (appellants) have not proved that the excess payments had been exacted from them. Both sections 143 and 144 of the Estates Land Act use the word 'exact' and not the word 'receive.' Now what is an exaction? Mere authoritative demand is also sometimes called exaction (See Webster's Dictionary), but that is clearly not the sense in which the word is used here. 'Exact' means to compel payment or delivery of, to enforce the yielding of, to extort (as, to exact tribute, fees, obedience and the like), to practise extortion, to demand and compel to pay or yield under colour of authority; or to levy by force. In the present case, the finding of the Deputy Collector is that the plaintiffs in these 18 cases paid their dues as per their respective leases and muchilikas before the

RAMASWAMI AIYAR v. SUNDARAM AIYAR.

Issue of any demand or attachment notice by the defendant, and yet he held that because the plaintiff in one of the 20 suits, namely, Summary Suit No. 279 of 1911 (out of which Second Appeal No. 280 of 1913 has arisen) was served with a demand and attachment notice for not paying his dues, the other plaintiffs who afterwards paid their dues must be deemed not to have paid such dues voluntarily but through coercion. The reason given by the learned Deputy Collector is that "if the other plaintiffs had not paid their dues they would have certainly received similar notices of demand and attachment." The learned District Judge in his judgment on appeal makes the following remarks on this point: "In his edition of the Bengal Act, Mr. Justice Rampini understands the word 'exacted' to mean nothing more than collected after demand and he quotes a ruling to the effect that money collected under a proceeding prescribed by law, though in excess of the demand amount, is not exacted. From this it would appear that the important words of the section are 'in excess of the rent lawfully payable' and that the application of the section would have been the same if the word 'collected' had been used in place of the less intelligible one actually employed." I am unable to agree with the lower Courts on this point. It may be that if the money is paid after an authoritative demand (even though no coercive process was taken before the payment and even though the authoritative demand was not accompanied by an express threat of coercive proceedings), the money might be considered as exacted but on the finding that not even a demand had been made on any of the 18 sets of plaintiffs before the excess amount was paid along with the amount really due (both amounts being payable according to the registered muchillikas executed by the plaintiffs), I cannot hold that the money was exacted from the plaintiffs and that they were not voluntary payments. Even Mr. Justice Rampini does not say that money paid without demand can be called money "exacted." The plaintiffs in 18 suits had, therefore, no cause of action under sections 143 and 144 of the Estates Land Act and the dismissal of their suits by the District Judge was right and can be supported on this ground. The 18 second appeals, therefore, substantially fail. I would, however, modify the order of the District Judge on the question of costs and direct the parties to bear their respective costs throughout.

In the remaining Second Appeals, Nos. 279 and 280 of 1913, the swatantram fees in question were collected after demand and attachment notice and hence if they were illegal, they were clearly exacted. The question, therefore, is whether those four items of fees do form part of the legitimate melvaram or whether they are unlawful additions to the rent lawfully payable. The documentary evidence clearly shows that the legitimate melvaram is only 48 per cent. of the net cutturn, that an additional $2\frac{1}{8}$ per cent. has been demanded for a long time by the Palace authorities (and paid by the tenants) under three heads: (1) Grama Pichai, being 6 marakals per 100 *kalam*s of the tenant's kudivaram of 52 per cent. of the gross produce, (2) Kaval, 1 kalam and 8 marakals and (3) Mahamai, $3\frac{1}{8}$ marakals; that besides these three collections in grain, two other collections namely, (4) Nazar Bheti, for 1,000 *kalam*s of the tenant's udavaram, 2 *kalam*s and $5\frac{1}{8}$ marakals i. e., 4 annas 4 pies and (5) Kajana Thackarar, for one hundred rupees of melvaram paddy, 8 annas. Out of these five fees, the second, namely, for kaval was found to be part of the rent by the Deputy Collector and there was no appeal filed against that decision and that is not the subject of the second appeal before us. The other four as their very names indicate are not part of the rent. Grama Pichai means donations to the village beggars. Mahamai mean offerings to the village deity. Nazar Bheti means presents for allowing the visitor to see the face of the visited. Kajana Thackarar means insurance money on account of the risk of a few bad coins being mixed up in the money paid towards rent. The following observations occur in Devanui v. Raghunatha Row (1):—"It is a well-known fact that the zamindars frequently added to their income by collecting cesses of various kinds. * * *

* The practice of making demands which were not legally maintainable was evidently not confined to this Presidency. In Bengal abwabs or legal cesses had to be put a stop to by the Legislature. * * * * We must not forget the fact that ryots were formerly less influential and less educated than they might be now. It must also be remembered that mamool is departed from with more difficulty in this country than elsewhere

* * *. We cannot say that mere payment for a long time would in all cases justify the presumption of a legally enforceable contract to pay for ever. Very often, positive evidence is not available to prove the circumstances under which the payment commenced. Substantial light is often thrown by the name of the cess, although the payment may have ceased to be applied for the purpose indicated by the name." There would be no justification for holding that the cess must be held to be obligatorily leviable against the ryot unless the zamindar can show that after the object for which it was originally intended failed, there was a fresh contract founded on fresh consideration to continue to make the payment. I think that these fees, as their very names indicate, clearly did not form part of the melvaram rent when they were first levied and it is, therefore, on the landlord to show that after the objects for which such payments were originally intended failed (as they have admittedly failed in this case), there was a fresh contract founded on a fresh consideration to continue to make the payments. The learned District Judge says casually at the very end of his judgment (as a part of one sentence) that "the evidence shows that the items objected to are part of the consideration for the easy terms granted by the landlord in respect of commutation," that is, the rate fixed to ascertain the value of the grain rent when commuted into money rent during the seven years' lease period. It must be established by evidence that Re. 1-3-0 (the commutation rate agreed upon between the parties), which superseded the Re. 1-1-8 rate which prevailed for 14 years before the date of Exhibit II, was admitted by the plaintiff as unduly favourable to the plaintiff and that the plaintiff, therefore, agreed to the inclusion of these unauthorized cesses as part of the rent in consideration of the defendants not insisting on fixing a higher rate of commutation than Re. 1-3-0. The speculative opinion of a witness examined on the defendant's side that the defendant would not have consented to the Re. 1-3-0 rate if he had known that the plaintiff would afterwards object to the payment of these cesses (it is contended), is not legal evidence of a contract, (that is) an agreement supported by consideration on the part of the plaintiff to pay these cesses, and the learned District Judge will consider the question again when dealing with this matter on remand. As, however, there might be other evidence on the record not brought to our notice it is desirable to have a fresh finding on the 6th issue in Second Appeals Nos. 279 and 280 of 1913 on the evidence on record.

The findings should be submitted within six weeks from the receipt of records and 10 days will be allowed for filing objections.

TYABJI, J.—The suits out of which this batch of appeals arises were instituted by tenants under section 144 of the Estates Land Act for recovery of alleged illegal cesses exacted by the landlord. The contentions of the parties are shortly but sufficiently and clearly set out by the learned District Judge in the first two paragraphs of his judgment.

The points argued before us were that the payments in question formed part of the rent under a contract implied from long payments or expressed in pattas and muchilikas and that even if they did not so form part, they had not been "exacted" within the meaning of section 143 of the Estates Land Act, and that unless they had been so exacted they could not be recovered back.

The payments fall under the following five heads.—

Kalam. Marakal.

1. Gramapichai (paddy given to the poor out of udaivaram paddy under the Amani system) per 100 kalams ...	0	6
2. Kaval (paddy given to the village watchman) ...	1	8
3. Mahamai (paddy given to the temple) ...	0	3½
4. Nazar Bheti (present given to the Maharajah of Tanjore on Dasara) for 1000 kalams of udaivaram , 2 kalams and 5½ marakals	Rs. 4 4 4

worth of melvaram paddy

The present appeal does not refer to the second of these items (kaval). This was held by the Deputy Collector to be part of the rent, and his decision was not appealed against. The question that remains is whether the 1st, 3rd, 4th and 5th items above were "something in addition to the rent lawfully payable," and if so, whether they can be recovered back under section 144 of the Madras Estates Land Act.

What is "rent lawfully payable" is laid down in section 3 (11) of the Madras Estates Land Act. The terms of section 3 (11) with a slight change in the collection of words may be set out as follows:—

"Rent means—

Whatever is lawfully payable in money or kind, or both,

(1) to a land-holder,

(2) for the use or occupation of land in his estate,

(3) for the purpose of agriculture,— and includes,

where the charge for the use and enjoyment of water supplied or taken for the cultivation of land has not been consolidated with the rent payable for the land,

(i) whatever is payable on account of the use and enjoyment of such water;

Rent also includes for the purposes of sections 59 to 72, 77 to 131, 143 to 148, 165, 210 and 211, and the schedule,

(ii) any local tax, cess, fee or sum payable

(a) by the ryot as such,

(b) in addition to the rent due in respect of land,

(c) according to law, or usage having the force of law, and also

(iv) money recoverable under any enactment for the time being in force, as if it were rent,

(v) sums payable by a ryot as such on account of pasturage fees and fishery rents.

The scheme of clause 11 of section 3 is, therefore, as follows:—In the first place it is stated what rent "means." This portion of the clause has reference to the three matters that are numbered (1), (2) and (3) above. Then the clause proceeds to provide what rent "includes," the four classes of payments particulars of which are numbered by me (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv) are so included.

If the four heads under which payments have been made, and which are in question in these appeals, are for the use and occupation of land for the purpose of agriculture, then they fall within the "meaning" of rent. The learned District Judge in the last sentence of the paragraph of his judgment, which is numbered 3 (2), holds that these payments are fees, and "were originally part of the demand made upon the tenant for occupation of the land." According to this finding, the fees would be within the "meaning" of rent. The preceding portion of the paragraph, however, shows that the learned Judge has apparently based this finding on the mere fact that the sums in question are shown in the jamabandi accounts of 1858 (Exhibit III) as having been recovered from the tenants, and are mentioned in the patta for Fasli 1305 (Exhibit A8). These circumstances do not furnish any evidence for the finding. But there are some other circumstances in the case to which I must advert in this connection, though they are not alluded to by the learned Judge in the paragraph which I am now considering.

I can conceive of circumstances in which sums that were in their origin illegal, and were collected for unauthorised objects, come to be legalised by being incorporated at a subsequent period into the rent and thus becoming a part of the rent. This may take place in some such way as is alleged here by respondent. For his case is that in fixing the commutation rate for computing the sum payable by way of rent, it was agreed between the parties that the commutation rate should be lower in consideration of the inclusion of these fees as part of that which was to be payable as rent. The respondent thus relies upon an express contract. Similarly it may be that an implied contract may be inferred from a course of conduct followed for many years. I must point out, however, that the incidents of rent collected from tenants with occupancy rights, are very different from those of rent payable under a contract of tenancy. In the former case the rights in their inception do not spring from contract, and it is much more difficult to infer an implied contract from the mere fact that payments have been made in the past. That, however, is a question of sufficiency of evidence. All that is necessary at present is to allude to the possibility of the tenants having agreed expressly or impliedly to pay a definite sum of money or portion of the produce to the landlord; it being a matter of indifference to them under what name they have to pay their due to the landlord, so long as all the payments together in fact represent the consideration, and nothing more than the consideration, which is "lawfully payable to the land-holder for the use or occupation of land in his estate for the purpose of agriculture." The present case must, therefore, be examined from this point of view.

The learned Judge in the second paragraph of his judgment, to which I have referred, does not allude to the express contract set up by the respondent which I have just mentioned. Neither does that paragraph deal with an implied contract. But it proceeds on the basis that the mention of the payments in the accounts and patta above referred to proves that the payments were for rent; and that the names under which they were made did not affect their legality. I am unable to follow this process of reasoning. The names of the cesses, as pointed out in Devanai v. Raghunatha Row (1), throw substantial light on the object for which they were levied, though it may be that the payments have ceased to be applied to the purpose indicated by the name. There may be cases in which sufficient explanation is offered why the rent is collected under a different name, or how and when a sum originally levied for a different purpose came (by an implied contract) to be transmuted into rent. But the learned Judge does not refer to any explanation for the change.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the finding contained in the said paragraph of the learned District Judge's judgment was not meant to be a finding that by an implied agreement these payments became lawfully payable as rent. If he meant to find to that effect, there was no evidence on which he could do so and the finding cannot be accepted.

The express agreement relied upon by the respondent is referred to in the last words of the 3rd paragraph of the District Judge's judgment. He, however, does not examine the evidence and seems to refer to the matter merely incidentally. The view he casually expresses is opposed to that of the Deputy Collector. It seems to me that he must give a definite finding on the sixth issue with reasons for his finding.

In addition to the argument that there was an express or implied agreement to pay rent [which would bring it within the "meaning" of rent in section 3 (11) of the Madras Estates Land Act], the learned Pleader for the respondent contended that the payment fell under one of the heads which the clause "includes" within rents. The portions of section 3 (11) that have reference to this part of the argument are numbered (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv) by me.

None of the payments in question are (i) on account of the use and enjoyment of water or of (iv) pasturage fees or fishery rents; nor do any of them fall within the description of (iii) money recoverable as rent under any enactment. It remains to consider whether they are "included" within (ii) above as "a sum payable

- (a) by the ryot as such
- (b) in addition to the rent in respect of land
- (c) according to law or usage having the force of law."

The sum so payable must, I apprehend from the frame of the clause, be something ejusdem generis with "local tax," "cess" or "fee"; something paid by the ryot as such, i. e., paid by a person who holds, for the purpose of agriculture, ryoti land in an estate, and paid by him as such holder. The obligation to pay it must have arisen by law or usage having the force of law. I find great difficulty in the application of these provisions and in defining what they connote with any precision. I see much less difficulty, however, in saying that the particular payments with which we have to deal do not, in my opinion, satisfy all the conditions that are required by the clause. I do not think that they can be classed with local taxes, cesses and fees, or that they can be said to be payable by the ryot as such, or payable according to law or usage having the force of law.

It is argued, however, for the respondent that even if the payments in question cannot be shown to be payable as rent by an express or implied contract or otherwise form part of rent under section 3 (11), still the appellants are precluded by sections 143 and 144 of the Madras Estates Land Act from recovering back the sums paid, unless it is shown that they were "exacted." It is also contended that there is no evidence on which it can be held that these payments were exacted.

The word "exact" (which occurs in section 143 and 144) has not, so far as I am aware, any special meaning as a term of law distinct from, or more precise than, its ordinary meaning. It is not free from that indefiniteness from which terms of law, recognised as such and made precise by long usage in law and by repeated analysis and definition, are free. That by the use of the term "exact" it was meant to express something different from mere collection or receipt, seems to me to be clear from the fact that the Legislature has avoided the use of those more usual words. It seems also clear that it could not have been intended by the Legislature, that the mere receipt of money which was not legally due should bring upon the receiver the penalties referred to in section 144.

Section 143 consists of two sentences. By the first it is provided that no unauthorised payment in addition to the rent shall be exacted—without the free consent of the tenant. By the second, that, even if the tenant consents to make such additional payments, the stipulation or reservation for making the payments shall be void—payments made under a void agreement will not be "exactions" if made without any coercion. The object of section 144 of the Madras Estates Land Act does not affect the right (if any exists) to recover back the additional payments under the law as it stood at the time when section 143 was passed, e. g., under section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, to have "the advantage restored." What section 144 provides is that in cases where the landlord has "exacted additional payments" independently of any right that there might be to have the advantage restored, the ryot shall have the newly created right to recover a penalty, and that both these rights shall be adjudicated upon by the Collector. The question, therefore, whether or not the payments have been exacted becomes relevant in three ways: (1) the question, which is not free from doubt whether payments made under an agreement which is void by reason of section 143 of the Estates Act fall within the terms of section 65 of the Indian Contract Act does not arise if they are exactions; (2) suits under section 144 must be instituted before the Collector; his jurisdiction must be determined by reference to section 144 and the 15th item of part A to the schedule, which refer to "illegal exactions," and it may be doubtful whether assuming that the payments can be recovered under section 65, they can be recovered in a suit before the Collector unless they are proved to have been exactions; (3) for deciding whether any penalty shall be enforced. The third aspect of the case seems to me to afford an adequate explanation for the use by the Legislature of an indefinite term like "exact." It leaves a discretion in the Collector to order or not to order the payment of a penalty; and to fix the amount of the penalty with reference to the gravity of the offence.

The plaintiffs have not brought the suit on the basis of section 65 of the Indian Contract Act. That section or the principle involved in it was not referred to in the plaints or in arguments before us. The applicability of that section is, as I have already said, not free from doubt both as to whether any rights arise under it in such circumstances as we have to deal with, and if any rights do arise, whether the Collector has jurisdiction to enforce them under section 144. It seems to me, therefore, to be supererogatory to deal with the question from that aspect.

Hence the plaintiffs cannot succeed in these suits without proving that the sums which are sought to be recovered back were exacted from them. Two of the plaintiffs were served with a demand and attachment notice for not paying the sums in question. In these cases it seems to me that there was exaction. The plaintiffs in the other 18 cases made the payments without any demand. It is argued on their behalf that they paid under the apprehension (and implied threat) of similar treatment, and consequently that payments by them were no less exactions. The expression "exaction" should not, in my opinion, be construed with stringency except for the purpose of enforcing the penalty. Had, therefore, the Court which has to decide questions of fact, come to the conclusion that the payments were exacted, I am not prepared to say that I should have considered the circumstance relied upon by the 18 tenants to furnish no evidence of the payments having been exacted. There is, however, no finding of the District Judge on the point and in arriving at one myself, I cannot shut out from my mind that the circumstances relied upon by the appellants are not all the facts on which the decision must be based. It is not clear to my mind that these payments were not made under an agreement. I have already given my reasons for desiring to have a finding on that point. It seems to me that balancing the two sets of circumstances and taking them in connection with the other facts which were placed before us at the hearing (to which I need not refer in detail), the proper decision to arrive at is that the payments were not exacted from the 18 tenants.

If the payments were not exacted, then in regard to the 18 tenants in question the suits will fail irrespective of the question on which I desire to have a finding. The decision of the remaining appeals (Second Appeals Nos. 279 and 280 of 1913) must depend on whether the payments had become part of the rent by agreement between the parties. For these reasons I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgments the District Judge of Tanjore submitted the following.

FINDING. * * * *—I find, therefore, on the 6th issue, that while, no doubt, the "Sillaraikududal" were part of the consideration for the new muchilikas, as they had always been part of the consideration for earlier ones, the altered or enhanced rate was not imposed in consideration of plaintiffs' paying these charges.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding from the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred to it for trial, the Court delivered the following

Where a suit is brought against a Police Officer for acts done by him in the exercise of the powers granted to him by the Criminal Procedure Code, section 42 of the Police Act does not apply. The plaintiff must give to such officer two months' notice as provided in section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p 174, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Allahabad.

Mr. Peurey Lal Banerji, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Rama Kant Mulaviya and Narsing Dass, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant, Jafar Beg, and others with whom we are not concerned in this appeal, to recover damages for malicious prosecution. His case was that a riot occurred and a report was made by certain complainants in the course of which they named one Bachcha Ahir. At the instigation of certain persons the defendant, who was the Sub-Inspector, put the name of Bachcha Singh in place of Bachcha Ahir, proceeded to make an inquiry against him, arrested him, and sent him for trial in Court where he was finally acquitted. The present suit was decreed as against one of the other defendants. As against Jafar Beg it was dismissed by the Court of first instance, on the ground that under section 42 of the Police Act the suit had not been instituted within three months of the unlawful act alleged. The plaintiff appealed. The lower Appellate Court upheld the decree of the Court of first instance but for a different reason. Notice was given by the plaintiff to the defendant on the 7th of June 1912, the suit was instituted on the 18th of July 1912. Applying section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, the lower Court held that the suit must fail as it was brought before the expiry of two months next after notice had been delivered to the defendant as set forth in the section.

The plaintiff has come here in second appeal. This urged that under section 42 of the Police Act, it was necessary for the plaintiff to give only one month's notice and not two months' notice as laid down in section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. It seems to me that the fallacy in the argument lies in this, that section 42 of the Police Act refers to "all actions and prosecutions against any person which may be lawfully brought for anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of the Police Act itself or under the general Police powers thereby given." The present suit for damages is brought against the Sub-Inspector for acts done by him in the exercise of the powers granted to him by the Criminal Procedure Code. What he did was nothing done under the provisions of the Police Act or the general Police powers given under the Act. I have been referred to sections 23 and 24 of the Police Act. Section 23 merely lays down that it is the duty of every Police Officer, among other things "to apprehend, all persons whom he is legally authorized to apprehend, and for whose apprehension sufficient grounds exist." This, no doubt, lays down what the Sub-Inspector's duty was but this does not give him any power to arrest. That power he receives under section 24 of the Police Act. Section 24 simply says that "it shall be lawful for any Police Officer to lay any information before a Magistrate and to apply for a summons, warrant, search warrant, or such other legal process as may by law issue against any person committing an offence." In the present case, the acts of which complaint is made were acts of arrest and prosecution in the Court of the Magistrate. Neither of these is an act which is contemplated by section 24 of the Police Act. The special period of limitation which was given in section 42 of the Police Act has been repealed by the subsequent Limitation Act, Act IX of 1871, Schedule I. That Act merely repealed so much as related to limitation of suits, but it did not alter the scope of section 42 of the Act which clearly related to acts done under the provisions of that Act itself or the general Police powers given by that Act. It cannot and does not relate to suits or actions brought in regard to acts done in the exercise of the powers granted by other Acts to Police Officers. In my opinion the decision of the lower Court is correct. Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code applies and the suit was instituted before the expiry of two months mentioned therein. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT No. 8 of 1914.

Prize Court—Enemy ship, capture of Goods consigned before war to enemy merchants, confiscation of—Test—Property in goods at time of capture—Risk—Confiscation, liability of.

In re CARGO, et S. S. RAPPENFELS.

The Rappenfels, a German merchantship, sailed from Calcutta on the 2nd of August 1914 with goods consigned by British subjects to British as well as German merchants. War was declared between Great Britain and Germany on the 4th of August 1914. The ship was captured and was in due course condemned as good and lawful prize by the Prize Court in Ceylon, but was sent to Calcutta in order that the liability to condemnation of the Cargo might be considered and determined by the High Court at Calcutta. The bills of lading of the goods were made out to the order of the consignors and were endorsed by them in blank and at the time of the capture of the ship the price was not paid and the bills of lading were still held by the consignors. The Crown maintained that they were liable to confiscation as the risk, not the property, was the test of liability to confiscation:

Held, (1) that in determining the question of liability to confiscation regard must be had to the property in goods and not the risk; [p. 176, col. 2.]

(2) that the sellers had not the idea of passing the property to the buyers at the time of appropriating the goods to the contract and that the property in the goods consigned, therefore, remained in the sellers; [p. 177, col. 1.]

(3) that under the circumstances the goods were not liable to confiscation. [p. 177, col. 2.]

Mr. G. H. B. Kenrick, K. C., Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. Pugh, for the Claimants.

JUDGMENT.—The Rappenfels, a German merchant ship, was captured after the outbreak of hostilities by one of His Majesty's ships of war, and was in due course condemned as good and lawful prize by the Prize Court in Ceylon. The cargo, however, was released, not absolutely, but merely in order that its liability to condemnation might be considered and determined by this Court. This curious arrangement was the result of an understanding between claimants of the cargo and the authorities. With its wisdom I have no concern, nor do I propose to discuss its propriety, for the cargo is now within the limits of this Court's jurisdiction and no one has questioned the Court's competence to deal with it. On the contrary, an adjudication by the Court has been invited by all concerned. The Rappenfels sailed from Calcutta on the 2nd of August last, having on board the goods which are now the subject of adjudication. War had not then been declared, and it is conceded on behalf of the Crown that the ship sailed and the material contracts relating to these goods were made without any contemplation of war; and that nothing has been left undone that should have been done by the claimants. The ship's destination was Hamburg. The goods it carried belong to a number of persons, and the position of the several claimants is not in all cases identical. Certain typical claims have accordingly been selected as probably governing all or most of the rest. It is with these that I now propose to deal.

(i) The claims of Messrs. Hari Singh Nihal Chand.

These claimants carry on business in Calcutta, and have been treated for the purpose of this case as British subjects. Five lots of jute were shipped by them for Hamburg in performance of five contracts for sale. The terms of these contracts are set out in five separate notes each of which records that Messrs. Campbell & Co. of St. Mary Axe bought of the present claimants the jute described in the note upon the terms and conditions of the London Jute Association Contract C. I. F.

The contract is for jute "to arrive," and one of the terms is that the contract is to be considered cancelled for any portion not arriving owing to loss of vessel or other unavoidable causes, but to be valid for any portion that may be shipped or transhipped on sellers' account and arrive by any other vessel [clause 6 (d)].

The bill of lading was made out to the order of the consignors, the present claimants, and was endorsed by them in blank. With regard to three consignments the claimants drew bills of exchange. These, in accordance with the usual course of business in Calcutta, they discounted with the Mercantile Bank transferring to the Bank at the same time the bills of lading as security for payment of the bills of exchange. The bills were forwarded to London. There they were not accepted but were returned, with the result that the claimants have re-paid the Bank. The bills of exchange with the bills of lading in respect of the remaining two consignments were passed through the Mercantile Bank for collection, but were not accepted. The result then is that the goods have not arrived and their price has not been paid, and the bills of lading are held by the claimants. Policies of insurance were taken out by the claimants but nothing turns on their terms or conditions.

In re CARGO ex. S. S. RAPPENFELS.

In these circumstances, the Advocate-General contends that the goods were shipped at the consignee's risk, and on this assumption maintains, in accordance with instructions emanating from the Secretary of State, that they are liable to confiscation even though the British vendor is unpaid. His proposition is that risk, not property, is the test of liability to confiscation.

Even if this test be accepted, it is difficult to see how it can justify condemnation in this case, for the dealings with the goods only disclose sellers and buyers, both of whom are British; and though under a C. I. F. contract, risk is ordinarily on the buyer, this is qualified in this case by the provision which makes arrival of the goods an essential term. The risk during the voyage was thus on the sellers to the extent indicated by this qualification and, in the events which have happened, has actually fallen on them. This conclusion would entitle the claimants to urge that even on the Advocate-General's own showing no case for condemnation has been made.

But as some of the other claims may require a decision as to whether property or risk is to be regarded for the purpose in hand, it will be better to deal with that problem at this point.

Whatever may have been the view in former times, International Law now (apart from exceptional cases) regards property as the test of liability to confiscation in the case of neutrals, and this finds direct expression in the 3rd Article of the Declaration of Paris where it is said, "La marchandise neutre, a l'exception de la contrebande de guerre, n'est pas saisissable sous pavillon ennemi."

At the same time the Declaration of London (Article 58) declares, "Le caractere neutre ou ennemi des marchandises trouvees a bord d'un navire ennemi est determine par le caractere neutre ou ennemi de leur proprietaire."

Why then should the goods of a British subject shipped before war was even contemplated, be in a worse plight? No reason has been disclosed in the course of the argument.

It is true that these International Declarations deal only with enemy and neutral goods, and the treatment by a State of its subjects' property is a concern not of International but of Municipal Law. But the position of a subject's goods has been considered and determined in a British Prize Court. Thus in

The Packet de Bilbao (1), claim was successfully made by a British merchant for goods shipped on an enemy ship before the outbreak of hostilities with Spain.

Sir W. Scott, as he then was, said, "the question is, in whom is the legal title? Because if I should find that the interest was in the Spanish consignee I must then condemn, and leave the British party to apply to the Crown for that grace and favour which it is always ready to show." Later he said, "under these circumstances, in whom does the property reside?" It, no doubt, is the case that reference is made to the incidence of risk, but as being a test of property and not as being in itself the occasion of confiscation or exemption.

That this is so, is, I think, apparent from the concluding portion of the judgment where it is said, "I must consider the property to reside still in the English merchant; it is a case altogether different from other cases which have happened on this subject flagrante bello. I am of opinion that, on all just considerations of ownership, the legal property is in the British merchant, that the loss must have fallen on the shipper, and the delivery was not to have been made till the last stage of the business, till they had actually arrived in Spain, and had been put into the hands of the consignee; and, therefore, I shall decree restitution of the goods to the shipper."

There may be cases in which the goods of a subject are in greater peril than those of a neutral, but that is where the Municipal Law sanctions the confiscation of the property of a subject for his illegal acts, as where he contravenes the law which forbids to a subject commercial intercourse with the enemy. But no such ground of confiscation is suggested here.

The conclusion then to which I come is that in determining the question of liability, to confiscation even in the case of a subject I must have regard to the property in the goods and not the risk except so far as it may assist me in determining where the property is. To whom then did the goods belong at the time of capture?

They were no doubt sold under a C. I. F. contract, but it was a contract "to arrive"

(1) (1799) 2 C. Rob. 133; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 209.

In re CARGO EX SS. RAPPENFELS, and it was an express term that it should be "considered cancelled for any portion not arriving owing to loss of vessel or other unavoidable causes."

So, even if risk be regarded as a valuable clue to property, in this case the risk during the voyage was on the seller to the extent indicated by this qualification.

But what appears to me to be decisive of this case, in view of the well-known mercantile usage that prevails in Calcutta, is the mode in which the sellers dealt with the bills of lading. They were taken to their own order and after the dealings I have already described, still are in the seller's possession.

The fair presumption in the circumstances of this case is that the sellers intended to retain and in fact did retain the property in the goods. This was a necessary reservation for the purpose of securing that method of commercial finance commonly employed by Calcutta shippers.

It will not be inappropriate to quote in support of this view certain remarks of Mr. Benjamin to be found in Chapter VI, Book II, of his Treatise on Sale of Goods (4th Edition, page 345):

"If A in New York orders goods from B in Liverpool, without sending the money for them, there are two modes usually resorted to among merchants, by which B may execute the order without assuming the risk of A's inability or refusal to pay for the goods on arrival. B may take the bill of lading, making the goods deliverable to his own order, or that of his agent in New York, and send it to his agent, with instructions not to transfer it to A except on payment for the goods. Or B may not choose to advance the money in Liverpool, and may draw a bill of exchange for the price of goods on A, and sell the bill to a Liverpool banker transferring to the banker, the bill of lading for the goods to be delivered to A on due payment of the bill of exchange. Now in both these modes of doing the business, it is impossible to infer that B had the least idea of passing the property to A, at the time of appropriating the goods to the contract. So that although he may write to A and specify the packages and marks by which the goods may be identified, and although he may accompany this with an invoice, stating plainly that these specific goods are shipped for A's account, and in accordance with A's order, making his election final and determinate, the property in the goods will nevertheless remain in B, or in the banker, as the case may be, till the bill of lading has been endorsed and delivered up to A."

So here, I think, it is impossible to infer that the sellers had the least idea of passing the property to the buyers at the time of appropriating the goods to the contract, and, were I sitting in the High Court's ordinary jurisdiction, I should hold without doubt that the property remained in the sellers.

Is there then any reason why I should not come to the same conclusion sitting in Prize? For I recognize that this question of property may be viewed differently in Prize from what it would be in a Court sitting in its ordinary jurisdiction and that any disposition or reservation of property made flagrante bello which would defeat the ordinary rules of Prize Law, is disregarded: The Abo (2).

But here all arrangements were made in time of peace and without any contemplation of war, and there is no suggestion of any fraud on the Prize Law. There is ample authority to support this distinction in favour of transactions concluded in time of peace. Thus in The Sally (3), the Commissioners of Appeal said: "It has always been the rule of the Prize Courts that property going to be delivered in the enemy's country and under a contract to become the property of the enemy immediately on arrival, if taken in transitu, is to be considered as enemies' property. When the contract is made in time of peace or without any contemplation of war no such rule exists."

The cases of The Vrow Margaretha (4), The Packet de Bilbao (1) and The Vrow Anna Catharina (5) may also be cited to the same effect.

I, therefore, hold, in the circumstances of this case, that the property in the goods is in the sellers, and it follows, in the absence of any illegality, that they are not liable to be confiscated.

BOMMADEVARA SATYANARAYANA v. DASIKA SRIRAMULU.

I accordingly decline to condemn the goods and direct them to be restored for the use of the owners thereof.

(ii) Messrs. Grossman & Co.

This claimant is a British India Company and its claim is in respect of goods shipped under four bills of lading.

The purchaser in each case was J. C. Gustav Schmidt, and the destination of the goods was Hamburg.

The bills of lading were in each case made out to the order of and retained by the Company in accordance with the commercial usage of Calcutta, to which I have already alluded. For the reasons I have explained in dealing with the first claim, I hold that the property remained in the seller, and as all the material transactions were prior to the contemplation of war, I decline to condemn the goods and direct restoration.

(iii) Messrs. Gladstone Wyllie & Co.

This claim is in respect of jute shipped on the Rappenfels in pursuance of three orders. The first of these orders was from Luther & Seyfert of Bremen for the shipment of goods from Calcutta in through-freight to Messrs. Luther & Seyfert Ltd., Accra; the 2nd was from Carl Tressman of Hamburg for the shipment of goods from Calcutta in through-freight to Lagos; and the 3rd was from Carl Tressman for the shipment of goods from Calcutta to Hamburg.

In each case the bill of lading was made out to the order of Messrs. Gladstone Wyllie & Co. It is proved in this case that the bills of lading were retained by these claimants and are still in their possession as the Banks refused to discount bills.

For the reasons I have stated at length in dealing with Messrs. Hari Singh Nihal Chand's claim, I hold the property in the goods is in Messrs. Gladstone Wyllie & Co. and as in this case too all the transactions relating to the goods were prior to the contemplation of war, I decline to condemn the goods and direct their restoration.

The order of restoration will in each case be subject to the payment of proper charges, if any.

Order accordingly.

BOMMADEVARA SATYANARYANA v. DASIKA SRIRAMULU.

December 1913, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—Plaintiffs-respondents are ryots holding under 3rd defendant-appellant—a zemindar, who represents 2nd defendant, now deceased. First defendant is the Secretary of State. Plaintiffs' case is that their holding is mamool wet inam and has always been held as such without payment of rent or water rate. So long as the zemindar made the collection of water rate on behalf of Government, there was as between him and Government no necessity to ascertain the identity of the mamool wet lands, since he could simply deduct the amount corresponding with their total extent from the total sum otherwise payable by him. When, however, before Fasli 1312 he abandoned the collection, an ascertainment of the mamool wet became necessary; and owing to the incorrect information, which 2nd defendant's servants gave, Government, represented by 1st defendant, collected water rate from plaintiffs, which they were not liable to pay, since their land was mamool wet. They sue to recover the payments made under protest for Fasli 1314. Their payments included not only the ordinary water rate, but also the penal water rate imposed in consequence of their having taken water without application.

The foregoing represents plaintiffs' case as stated in their plaint, its foundation as regards both the ordinary and penal water rate being given as against 2nd defendant as his tortious act in giving incorrect information to 1st defendant. The Court of first instance, however, in its judgment (after remand), dated 21st September 1910, treated the claim against both defendants as res judicata in circumstances to be referred to; and the lower Appellate Court, holding that there was no res judicata, treated it as based on section 70, Indian Contract Act, observing that the "zemindar had the benefit of the water for the rest of his lands to the exclusion of plaintiffs' inam" and presumably meaning that he had the benefit of plaintiffs' payment in consequence of the exemption of some part of the rest of his lands. It exonerated the 1st defendant, who is not a party to this appeal,

This, so far as the ordinary water rate is concerned, was a possible basis for the decision and may be regarded as covered by the very general issues framed. Moreover the grounds of appeal relating to the discrepancy between it and the pleadings have not been pressed as regards this part of the case. But, section 70 being in question, 3rd defendant's objection that the finding of fact above referred to is not supported by, or has not been reached after consideration of, the evidence must be allowed. The Court of first instance, no doubt, after dealing with the case as one of res judicata, admitted all the evidence adduced, but it simply recorded its findings without discussion of it or reference to section 70; and the lower Appellate Court found, as stated above, also without applying its mind to the evidence in detail and without attempting to decide whether it did or did not support its assumption that the zemindar had in fact been exempted from liability to an extent corresponding with the payment made by plaintiffs.

It is conceded that section 70 cannot justify plaintiffs' claim in respect of the penal portion of their payment and that it must be supported as one for compensation for the result of 2nd defendant's improper conduct. Neither of the lower Courts has dealt separately with this part of the case. As regards it also there must be a remand for a finding on fresh issues.

The question is next, whether the dispute between the parties or any part of it is res judicata. The facts are that plaintiffs sued 1st and 2nd defendants in Original Suit No. 434 of 1903, on allegations similar to those now before us for (1) a declaration that their holding was mamool wet inam, (2) refund of water rate paid under protest for Fasli 1312. Reference to the decree in the printed papers in this Court shows (what Exhibit A, the judgment, leaves obscure) that both reliefs were granted against 1st defendant, but only the first against 2nd defendant, the suit against him for the second being dismissed without costs. This result was not affected by the appellate judgments, Exhibits B and CC, plaintiffs' memorandum of objection against 2nd defendant having been filed after Exhibit A had become final. In these circumstances Exhibit A is prima facie an adjudication in 2nd defendant's favour, if not as to the nature of the holding, at least as to his obligations in respect of it. Plaintiffs' argument is then that incidentally to this disposal of their claim the matter in dispute was not heard or determined. They have not relied on the reasons adopted by the lower Appellate Court.

Firstly, as regards the nature of the holding, I have pointed out that the declaration claimed by plaintiffs was given against both defendants; and, though plaintiffs have not so far pleaded res judicata, the fact will be important, when the issues remanded are dealt with by the lower Appellate Court. At present the material facts are that, though Exhibit A, paragraph 17, contains the finding in plaintiffs' favour, it was expressed in paragraph 12 only as follows:—"Although I am prepared to find it proved that plaintiffs' holding is a wet inam, I think that it would be enough to find that the land is immemorial wet..... in other words, plaintiffs have an easement right by grant or prescription to irrigate these fields.....when, therefore, the Government agreed with the zemindar, etc., ...it should be taken to contract with him as representing all concerned, that the new source shall be subject to all their customary rights." This I understand to mean (1) that, though the land was inam, that fact and the possible responsibility of the zemindar for its irrigation were not material, because (2) it was mamool wet and entitled to receive water from Government on that ground. The Court adopted the second of these grounds and (perhaps because a decree against Government was considered by it a sufficient relief) refused to adopt the first as the basis of its decision.

The remainder of the judgment agrees with this,—since there is nothing in the ascertainment of the duties of the parties, which follows, inconsistent with the disposal of the case on the footing that land is ordinary mamool wet, not wet inam in connection with which the zemindar might be under special liabilities. Though, as stated, there is a finding in paragraph 17 that it is wet inam, the other finding, that the collection of water rate was wrong, relates only to the act of Government. In the circumstances the decision must be that the Court declined to adjudicate on 2nd defendant's conduct and that there has been no determination of the claim relating to it.

The result is that there must be a remand on the basis that the character of the land as mamool wet inam is res judicata against 3rd defendant in consequence of Exhibit A, against which 2nd defendant did not appeal. The following issues must be tried:—

1. Whether in consequence of plaintiffs' payment 2nd defendant was exempted from any liability for water rate and was benefited and (if so) to what extent?

2. Whether penal water rate was levied from plaintiffs in consequence of any wrongful or negligent representation to 1st defendant by 2nd defendant or his servants, and (if so) whether 3rd defendant is bound to compensate plaintiffs and to what extent?

3. To what reliefs are plaintiffs entitled?

Fresh evidence may be adduced. The finding should be submitted in six weeks from the re-opening of the Court. Seven days are allowed for objections.

TYABJI, J.—The plaintiffs are holders of land in the 2nd defendant's zemindari which, is a portion of the Nuzvid Estate. Their suit is against the Secretary of State and the zemindar (the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant's representative respectively) for a declaration that the plaintiffs are not liable to pay any water cess on the lands in their occupation, and for recovering back from the defendants the water cess levied from the plaintiffs at a penal rate.

It is not contended before us that the plaintiffs have any cause of action against the Secretary of State. For it is admitted the Government were entitled to recover from the plaintiffs the water cess, even though as between the plaintiffs and the zemindar no water cess may be due from the particular plots of land in the occupation of the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court has, however, decided against the zemindar and held that he is liable to refund the payment made by the plaintiffs.

It is argued for the zemindar in this appeal that the decree against him is erroneous, on the ground that there was no cause of action disclosed as against him, and that in any case the matter is res judicata between him and the plaintiffs. With reference to the later contention it is admitted that there were suits between the same parties in which the liability of the zemindar on the same basis as in the present case, was directly in issue. The lower Appellate Court held that the decrees in those suits did not operate so as to make the question involved in the present suits res judicata: "First, because the said judgments relate to different Faslis i. e., the plaintiffs' claim for Faslis 1311 and 1312, which was prior to Faslis 1314 to 1318; and secondly, because the cause of action for the present suits is also different." The learned Pleader who appeared for the respondent did not rely upon these reasons for contending that the matter was not res judicata, owing to the decision reported in Bommidi Bayyan Naidu v. Bommidi Suryanarayana (1).

The argument before us, however, was that in the previous suits, as a matter of fact, there was either no adjudication on the point at all, or, if there was, then it was in favour of the plaintiffs.

On referring to the records of the previous suits and appeals arising therefrom, it is found that the District Munsif in the Court of first instance decided the suits in favour of the plaintiffs: in doing so he purported "formally to record findings on the issues in favour of the plaintiffs." He seems to have considered the liability of 2nd defendant in the preceding paragraph of his judgment where he says, "on behalf of the 2nd defendant a curious argument was advanced. The argument is advanced only for the purpose of this suit and is not bona fide;" his decree embodied a declaration that the lands were mamool wet inam, which was a relief against the 2nd defendant also; and he made the 2nd defendant bear his own costs, though the decree was otherwise only against the 1st defendant. Holding that the cess was not due on the lands, he held as a consequence that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover back the payments made by them. As the plaintiffs were not entitled to get the money twice over, and also perhaps because there was no question that if the Government were bound to re-pay the money they would re-pay it, his decree for re-payment of the cess was only against the Government who had actually received the payment.

From the Munsif's decree, that the lands in question were mamool wet, that the 1st defendant should refund the payments made by the plaintiffs, and that the 2nd defendant should bear his own costs, there were appeals and cross-objections. The Subordinate Judge in appeal said: "That being the case it is clear that as against the 2nd defendant plaintiffs are entitled to get water for their land free of charge. If the zemindar, who was bound to include the extent of the plaintiffs' holding within the 120 and odd acres allowed in his favour by Government for irrigation free of charge, failed to do so, the fault was his and it seems to me that plaintiffs must look to him for the redress of their grievances so far as the Government are concerned. I fail to see how they are to blame for charging water rate from plaintiffs, because it is not plaintiffs' case that they have entered into any engagement with the Government by which they are entitled to irrigation free of charge. Under these circumstances the first Court was not right in directing the Government to refund to plaintiffs the water rate collected from them. I decide on the first point that since 1839 the plaintiff land has been enjoyed as mamool wet inam exempt from water tax, but that the 1st defendant is not liable for plaintiffs' claim. I need not record any finding on the 2nd point, as the first Court had not made the 2nd defendant liable and the plaintiffs' memorandum of the objections in Appeal Suit No. 198 of 1901 asking for the 2nd defendant also being made liable was presented out of time. The plaintiffs were served with notice of Appeal Suit No. 198 of 1905 on the 9th December 1905, and their objection memorandum was filed in Court only on the 25th November 1906."

The decision of the Subordinate Judge was, therefore, that the plaintiffs were barred by limitation from asserting their rights against the 2nd defendant in the Appellate Court. There was a second appeal (Second Appeal No. 1735 of 1908) from the appellate decree and the second appeal was dismissed.

Apparently, therefore, the only questions that can be considered to have been decided by the Courts in the litigation culminating in Second Appeal No. 1735 of 1908 were (1) whether the 1st defendant was liable to refund the cess and (2) whether a decree for payment could be given against the 2nd defendant or whether the plaintiffs' cross-objections were out of time. The 2nd defendant's liability with reference to the previous Faslis was not really adjudicated upon: by the Munsif because in his view it was unnecessary, by the Appellate Court because the plaintiffs had not taken cross-objections in time. Giving its full force to the decision of the Appellate Court, we have no adjudication upon the points now arising.

Under these circumstances, to hold that the question of the liability of the 2nd defendant to refund the water cess in respect of the Faslis 1314—1318 is res judicata, would be a denial of justice based on a fiction which is directly at variance with the facts, and which is not based on the principle underlying the doctrine of res judicata: that principle for the present purposes may be stated to be that neither the Courts nor the parties should be permitted to be harassed by the same question being repeatedly brought up for adjudication. It has been held that with regard to the previous Faslis the plaintiffs had forfeited the right to have their rights determined by the Courts. That is no reason why they should be placed under a similar disability in regard to the latter Faslis, though the reason for the forfeiture is absent. This is in accordance with the decisions of Chunder Coomar Mitter v. Sib Sundari Dassee (2), Nilvaru v. Nilvaru (3), Gungubishen Bhagat v. Raghuo Nath Ojha (4), Balkishan v. Kishan Lal (5).

The next question is whether the plaint discloses any cause of action against the 2nd defendant. The cause of action relied upon by the plaintiffs is as follows:—that the water cess which was levied from the plaintiffs was in fact due from other lands not in the occupation of the plaintiffs; that the 2nd defendant wrongfully represented to the 1st defendant that the lands from which water cess could be levied included the plaintiffs' lands: that by reason of such representation the plaintiffs were made to pay the water cess though the lands in their occupation were not subject to the water cess: and that the said other lands were exempted from payment of the tax, which would not have been exempted had the 2nd defendant represented the true facts. If all these facts are established by the plaintiffs then, it would seem that the plaintiffs have made payments which the 2nd defendant was bound to make, under such circumstances that the plaintiffs would be entitled to be compensated by the 2nd defendant under section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. In the alternative the plaintiffs' case may be stated to be that they have been compelled to make payments for the 2nd defendant (not intending to do so gratuitously), the benefit of which has been that other lands in which the 2nd defendant is interested have been exempted from payment of the water tax: this benefit has been enjoyed by the 2nd defendant; and in respect of it the 2nd defendant is bound to make compensation to the plaintiffs.

See Wilson v. Glossop (6) and Mohendra Ghoshal v. Bhuban Mardana (7).

The plaintiffs, however, claim to recover back from the zemindar the whole of the water cess paid by them to the Government, and that was levied at a penal rate.

The question, therefore, will also have to be considered whether the plaintiffs had any cause of action in respect of the sum which they had to pay as a penalty. That question would depend upon whether such extra sum can be considered to be damages arising out of the facts above referred to.

On none of these questions have the lower Courts given any express findings.

There are no findings on which we can proceed with reference to the questions—

(1) whether the 2nd defendant represented to the 1st defendant that the land referred to in the plaint did not form part of the lands exempted from payment of water cess; and if the answer to this question is in the affirmative,

(2) whether the 2nd defendant obtained an exemption from payment of the water cess which would have been due on other lands had he not made the said misrepresentation.

(3) Whether the penal rate of water cess was levied from the plaintiffs by reason of any act or omission on the part of the plaintiffs themselves which they ought to have done or abstained from doing.

(4) Whether even if the misrepresentation above referred to had not been made by the 2nd defendant still the plaintiffs would have become liable to pay water cess at a penal rate; and

(5) Whether if the 2nd defendant had not made the misrepresentation referred to in the first issue, then the penal rate of water cess would, in the events that have taken place, have become due from lands other than those referred to in the plaint, and would have been payable by the 2nd defendant.

It seems necessary, therefore, to send the case back for findings on the issues, which are mentioned in my learned brother's judgment.

In compliance with the above order of this Court, the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore submitted the following

FINDING.—I am directed to submit my findings on the following issues:—

(I) Whether in consequence of plaintiffs' payment the 2nd defendant was exempted from any liability for water rate and was benefited and (if so) to what extent?

(II) Whether penal rate was levied from plaintiffs in consequence of any wrongful or negligent representation to the 1st defendant by the 2nd defendant or his servants and (if so) whether the 3rd defendant is bound to compensate the plaintiffs and to what extent?

(III) To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled?

2. The plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 6 are the sons of 1st plaintiff. It appears from the evidence of 1st plaintiff as P. W. No. 1 that no water tax was levied from him in respect of the suit inam prior to Fasli 1312. It is alleged on behalf of plaintiffs, and not denied by the 3rd defendant, that prior to Fasli 1312 the zemindar (2nd defendant) used to pay to Government (1st defendant) water cess on all the lands in the village of Rajupeta, after deducting 120 acres of mamool wet area. That the suit land of 11 acres 30 cents was also included in the said extent of mamool wet area is clear from Exhibit F, dated 16th November 1895. Exhibit F1 is an account prepared by the 2nd defendant's karnam for Fasli 1305 and bears the signature of the then Tahsildar. With reference to Exhibit F, the present Tahsildar as D. W. No. 1 deposed that the suit inam (land) is shown as mamool wet in Exhibit F1 and that no application for water is necessary in the case of mamool wet lands recognised as such by the Collector and the Board. Till Fasli 1312, it is conceded by the zemindar himself that no water cess was levied from plaintiff in respect of the suit land as it was treated as a part of the mamool wet allowed to the zemindar. In other words, the extent of the mamool wet area of 120 acres included the suit land which, however, was shown in the accounts of the zemindar as a darimila inam without patta (vide Exhibit DD and also Exhibit IV).

3. It is next seen from the accounts (Exhibits D, E, F, F1) that prior to Fasli 1312 the zemindar (2nd defendant) used to apply for water for the whole village of Rajupeta and was paying water tax to Government (1st defendant) on irrigated area in excess of the mamool wet of 120 acres including the suit inam. In other words, prior to Fasli 1312 the zemindar (2nd defendant) acted as agent of the Government (1st defendant) to supply water for the whole village and that in consideration thereof received a commission of 10 per cent. (vide paragraph 3 of the 1st defendant's written statement). But in Fasli 1312 the 2nd defendant having met with obstacles in the collection of water cess from the tenants put an end to his commission contract and relinquished water for the whole village. The 1st defendant accepted the relinquishment (vide paragraph 3 of 1st defendant's written statement).

4. Exhibits G and H as also Exhibit J show that in the suits (Original Suit No. 126 of 1895 and 1372 of 1896) brought by the zemindar against plaintiffs for the recovery of gattuthumulu and other dues for Fasli 1295 to 1305, the zemindar's claim was disallowed and the suits were dismissed on the ground that the land was granted as a rent-free inam and that the inamdar was not liable to pay gattuthumulu and other cesses. According to the evidence of D. W. No. 2, gattuthumulu of old is the same thing as water cess of the present day. Relying upon the Court's decisions evidenced by Exhibits G, H and J, the 2nd defendant in paragraph 4 of his written statement contended that if the suit land is an old sarcadumbala inam he has no concern whatever with it. In paragraph 6 of his written statement the 2nd defendant further contended that the suit land not being treated by Government as mamool wet, it was not open to plaintiff to get separately localized his darimila inam as part of the mamool wet allotted to the zemindar.

5. The plaintiff's case is that so long as the zemindar made the collection of water cess on behalf of Government, there was as between him and Government no necessity to ascertain the identity of the mamool wet lands, but that before Fasli 1312 when 2nd defendant abandoned the collection, it became necessary for plaintiff to apply to the Settlement Deputy Collector to localize the mamool wet and that accordingly he put in a petition before the Settlement Officer on the 17th November 1901. This petition has been filed on defendant's behalf as Exhibit XIV (a) which shows that because the zemindar's officials wanted to exclude the suit inam from the extent of mamool wet allowed for the village, the plaintiff applied to the Deputy Collector to include his land in the extent of mamool wet allotted to the zemindar. Exhibit GG, dated 13th January 1902, is a certified copy of 1st plaintiff's statement in the matter of the mamool wet enquiry held by the Deputy Collector, Mr. P. Nageswara Rao (D. W. No. 2). Exhibit GG read along with Exhibit XIV (a) shows that the zemindar was claiming the suit land as being included in the mamool wet under the head "seri" and that, therefore, 1st plaintiff requested the Deputy Collector to separately localize the darimila inam as mamool wet. Exhibit HH, dated 14th January 1902, contains the zemindar's protest to the effect that the suit land cannot be converted into mamool pallam (wet), because it was a darimila inam and registered as such in the accounts of the estate. The Deputy Collector's order is evidenced by Exhibit FF, dated 5th February 1902, and it is to the effect that as the zemindar protests against the separate localization, the petitioner's (1st plaintiff's) request cannot be complied with. In other words, the 1st plaintiff's request for separate localization was refused by the Deputy Collector (D. W. No. 2) in consequences of the 2nd defendant's protest contained in Exhibit HH, dated 14th January 1902. The question then arises whether 2nd defendant was justified in protesting against the separate localization of the plaintiff's land? The Deputy Collector (D. W. No. 2) states in his deposition before this Court that if at the time of the settlement the zemindar instead of protesting had asked him (D. W. No. 2) to include the suit land as mamool wet, he would have done so only if it was a darimila inam. But the zemindar's contention that the suit land is a darimila inam and that plaintiffs were liable to pay water-cess in respect of the suit land, was found to be not true in Original Suit No. 126 of 1895 and 1372 of 1896 and this finding was confirmed in Appeal Suits Nos. 238 and 240 of 1899 (vide Exhibits G and H). Exhibit G shows that 1st plaintiff, who was defendant in the said suit, pleaded inter alia that the suit land was not a part of the zemindar's seri land but is a sarvadumbala inam granted to plaintiff's ancestors by defendant's ancestors prior to Fasli 1200. This plea of plaintiffs was upheld both in the Court of first instance and also in the Appellate Court (vide Exhibits G and H referred to above). The question as to the character of the suit land being mamool wet and that it is a pre-settlement inam as alleged by plaintiffs and not a post-settlement inam as contended by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 has, therefore, become res judicata between plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Such being the case, it was not open to 2nd defendant in the face of the above-mentioned finding to contend that the suit land was a darimila inam before the Deputy Collector, at the time of the mamool wet settlement enquiry by him in 1902. No doubt the 2nd defendant's contention was wrong with reference to the decisions evidenced by Exhibits G and H referred to above. But the real point is whether 1st plaintiff was right in asking the Deputy Collector to localize the suit land as part of the mamool wet allotted to the zemindar under the head seri. This was in effect the prayer of the plaintiffs in Exhibit XIV (a). The answer to this is furnished in paragraph 5 of 2nd defendant's written statement. The 2nd defendant's answer is that inasmuch as the suit land was decided to be an old sarvadumbala inam in the litigation set forth in paragraphs 6 and 10 of the plaint, the plaintiffs have no right to include the suit land in the extent of the mamool wet allotted to the zemindar. In other words, the suit land having been declared to be a pre-settlement inam by the Civil Courts, it was not open to plaintiffs to treat the same as darimila or post-settlement inam and include it in the mamool wet area allotted to the *zamin*dar. The proper course open to plaintiffs was to ask the Collector to determine the suit land as mamool wet and to obtain a title-deed immediately after the result of the litigation evidenced by Exhibits G and H.

6. With reference to the observations made in the foregoing paragraphs, I proceed to record my findings on the issues 1 and 2 upon the evidence now adduced after remand and also upon the evidence on record before remand. The payments made by plaintiffs are evidenced by Exhibit AA series which relate to Faslis 1312 and 1313. In the present case, the *zamin*dar (2nd defendant or 3rd defendant) had no interest in the suit land at the time of plaintiffs' payment. This is clear from Exhibits G, H and J (vide also Exhibit CC). The liability under section I of the Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865) is on the suit land. The suit land belongs admittedly to plaintiff. The plaintiff's case has been all along that the suit land is a pre-settlement inam, while 2nd defendant's contention was that it was a darimila inam or post-settlement inam. As between plaintiff and 2nd defendant it has been held that the suit land is a pre-settlement mamool wet inam, and not a darimila inam (vide Exhibits G and H). No doubt the suit land, although decided by the Court to be a pre-settlement inam, the title-deed in respect of it was issued to plaintiff only in 1911. The delay in the issue of the title-deed was wholly attributable to plaintiff's negligence. The 1st plaintiff's explanation in Exhibit XIV (a), dated 17th November 1901, was that because he was a minor and because nobody represented him at the time of the inam commission enquiry in 1864, it was not possible for him to get the title-deed. In Exhibit GG, dated 13th January 1902, the 1st plaintiff's explanation was that although he had attained majority he did not make any attempt to get the title-deed. And in Exhibit C, dated 7th February 1905, the 1st plaintiff stated that his co-sharers obtained title-deeds but he did not, because he considered it unnecessary. The conduct of 1st plaintiff, as evidenced by Exhibits XIV (a), GG and C, clearly shows that he was not anxious to obtain a title-deed although the suit land was declared to be a pre-settlement inam. The fact that on the strength of the description of the suit land as darimila inam in Exhibits XIV (a) and GG the 1st plaintiff wanted to get it localized as wet and included in the mamool area of 140 acres allotted to the *zamin*dar, lends support to the respondent's Counsel's argument that the 1st plaintiff remained quiet without obtaining a title-deed because he wanted to avoid payment of the quit-rent. For after the suit land was declared to be not a darimila inam, there was no obligation on the part of the *zamin*dar to apply for water on behalf of the *inam*dar of the ryots in the village (vide the evidence of D. W. No. 2). In other words, it was no concern of the *zamin*dar to see to the supply of water for the suit land which was declared to be a mamool wet pre-settlement inam. The plaintiff's case, as disclosed from the evidence of P. W. No. 1, is that the water tax for Faslis 1312 and 1313 was really payable by the *zamin*dar (2nd defendant), first, because the suit land was wrongly excluded by him from the list submitted by him to Government and secondly, because the *zamin*dar was benefited by reason of some other land of his being substituted for the suit land. As regards the first reason, neither the original list submitted to Government nor a copy of it has been produced. No doubt Exhibit VIII, as deposed to by D. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2, was in substance a relinquishment application for supply of water in respect of the suit land and certain other lands mentioned in Exhibit VIII. This application was put in long after the decision evidenced by Exhibits G and H as admitted by plaintiff, and it is argued for the respondent that 2nd defendant acted rightly because he had no concern with the suit land after the Courts found it to belong to plaintiff as a pre-settlement inam. In other words by Exhibit VIII, the 2nd defendant put an end to his commission contract to supply water and put in a relinquishment application. The Government (1st defendant), having accepted the relinquishment, called for water applications from 1st plaintiff (and other ryots), because there was no engagement between plaintiffs and Government in respect of the suit land which ceased to belong to the zemindar as his darimila inam, according to the decisions evidenced by Exhibits G and H referred to above. Next as to the second reason, that the zemindar has been benefited by virtue of some other land being substituted for the suit land, the 1st plaintiff's answer in his cross-examination is that he cannot say what that land is. According to the evidence of D. W. No. 3 the subsequent enfranchisement of the suit land in favour of plaintiffs as a mamool wet inam would not affect the 2nd defendant's mamool wet, because the suit land has changed its character. It cannot, therefore, be said that either section 69 or 70 of the Contract Act has any application to the facts of this case. Section 69 cannot apply, as the zemindar was not legally bound to pay the water cess. And section 70 cannot apply as the plaintiff, who paid the water-cess, did so on his own account and not on behalf of the zemindar. It cannot, therefore, be said that in consequence of the plaintiff's payments the 2nd defendant was exempted from any liability for water and was benefited. In other words, I find the 1st issue in the negative and against plaintiff.

7. With regard to the 2nd issue, penal water rate was levied from 1st plaintiff because he persistently refused to apply for water in Paslis 1312 and 1313. The 1st plaintiff had to pay the penal water tax because he failed to get the suit land determined as mamool wet, as required by Rule VI at page 4 of the Board's Standing Orders, Vol. II (Appendices). There was no wrongful or negligent representation to the 1st defendant by the 2nd defendant or his officers in putting in the relinquishment application as per Exhibit VIII. Under Exhibit VIII the zemindar ceased to be the agent to supply water to the inamdar and ryots in the village and they were called upon to make their own arrangements. There was nothing to prevent plaintiffs to make their own arrangements. The plaintiffs had three years' time between the date of Exhibit VIII and the date of the first payment, as per Exhibit AA. It follows, therefore, that plaintiffs' paying the penal assessment cannot be said to be the result of the zemindar's relinquishment as per Exhibit VIII. Even supposing it were so,

I hold upon the evidence that the act of 2nd defendant, as evidenced by Exhibit VIII, was not a wrongful or negligent representation to the 1st defendant by the 2nd defendant and that, therefore, 3rd defendant is not bound to compensate the plaintiff. I find the 2nd issue also in the negative.

8. It follows from my findings on the 1st and 2nd issues that plaintiffs have no cause of action as against 2nd or 3rd defendant and that, therefore, are not entitled to the relief sought with reference to the 3rd issue, which I find likewise in the negative.

These second appeals and the memorandum of objections coming on for final hearing after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—It is now found that the plaintiffs' land is a pre-settlement inam. The finding cuts at the foundation of the plaintiffs' case. The appeals must be allowed and the plaintiffs' suits dismissed with costs throughout. The memoranda of objections are also dismissed with costs.

Appeals allowed; Suits dismissed.

A judgment-debtor applied to set aside a sale on the last day of limitation and tendered the money to the Treasury Officer shortly before 3 P. M., the hour at which the Treasury is closed to the public. The Treasury Officer refused to take the money as it was too late to count it. He, however, observed that the money could be paid at any time within three days of the tender. The judgment-

Held, that the judgment-debtor having done all that was possible for him to do to pay the money into the Treasury within time, must be taken to have paid the money in accordance with law. [p. 188, col. 1.]

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Muttra.

Mr. Jawahar Lal Nehru (for Mr. Motilal Nehru), for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji (with him Mr. Sham Krishna Dar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a judgment-debtor against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Muttra, refusing to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree. The sale took place on August 7th, 1914. As September 6th was a Sunday the judgment-debtor was entitled to make an application under Order XXI, rule 89, and pay the sum specified in that rule on September 7th. The evidence shows that the judgment-debtor was not able to raise the money required for the purpose until about 2 o'clock on the afternoon of September 7th. According to the evidence on September 7th he made an application to the Court with tender in the prescribed form No. 43 duly filled in, and obtained thereon an order of the Court that the money should be deposited in the Treasury. He took the money to the Treasury shortly before 3 p.m., the hour at which the Treasury is closed so far as the public are concerned. The Treasury Officer looked at his watch and said that it was too late to count the money (Rs. 12,735-9) on that date and he observed that the money could be paid at any time within three days of the tender. He was probably referring to the words on the duplicate tender, "receive and credit the above sum if tendered to you within three days." But these words cannot be used for the purpose of extending the period of limitation allowed by law. They are intended to facilitate the checking of the accounts kept by the Court. The judgment-debtor says that he accepted the statement of the Treasury Officer as correct, and as the Treasury Officer declined to take the money, he took it away and paid it into the Treasury on the following day. The Subordinate Judge has held that it is not proved that the money was tendered before 3 p.m. on September 7th and has accordingly declined to set aside the sale. The evidence that the money was tendered to the Treasury Officer before 3 p.m. is, however, uncontradicted and should, we think, be accepted. The question, however, is whether under the circumstances, the payment required by Order XXI, rule 89, of the Code of Civil Procedure should be taken to have been made within the time allowed by law. The learned Counsel for the judgment-debtor relies upon the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Pandey (1), in which it was held, in accordance with the principle actus curiæ neminem gravabit, that the payment must be taken to have been made in time where the judgment-debtor had applied to the Court under rule 89, Order XXI, on the 30th day from the sale and was ready to deposit the required sum in Court and the challan to the Treasury had been duly filled up and placed in the hands of the proper officer, but the signature of the presiding officer of the Court could not be procured on that day as he had left the Court. The result was that the challan was signed on the following day and on the authority of it the money was received by the Treasury Officer. The Calcutta High Court held that the application of the judgment-debtor to have the sale set aside should under the circumstances have been allowed. The present case is not on all fours with the Calcutta case. In the latter it was quite clear that the Court by its own action had prevented the judgment-debtor from paying the money into Court within time. In the present case the question is what the Treasury Officer ought to have done when the money was tendered to him shortly before 3 p.m. on September 7th. We are not satisfied that the Treasury Officer could not have arranged for the safe custody of the money until it could be counted in the presence of the judgment-debtor, and we think that it is probable that he would have made some such arrangement if he had not been under the impression that the judgment-debtor was entitled to three days from the date of the tender within which to pay the money into the Treasury. Under the circumstances we think that it should be held that the judgment-debtor in this case did all that it was possible for him to do to pay the money into the Treasury on September 7th, i. e., within time, and that he was prevented from paying the money by the action of the Treasury Officer, who for this purpose must be regarded as an Officer of the Court. We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, and direct that the application be disposed of according to law. We make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2594 OF 1913.

April 9, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Napier.

VENUGOPALACHARIAR—DEFENDANT
No. 2—APPELLANT

versus

PADMANABHA ROW—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 4 (1), 5, 6, Appendix D, Forms 4, 11—Mortgage-decree—Costs—Declaration of personal liability, whether can be made against any person other than the mortgagor—“Defendant” in rule 6, meaning of.

The word “defendant” in rule 6 of Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, means only the mortgagor. Therefore a declaration of personal liability for the costs of the decree-holder in case the sale-proceeds were not sufficient to pay them as well as the mortgage-money, cannot be made against the purchaser of the mortgaged property after the mortgage, though it can be made against the mortgagor. [p. 188, col. 2; p. 189, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Court of the Sub-Judge of Tinnevely, in Appeal No. 424 of 1912, preferred against that of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 64 of 1912.

Mr. K. Jagannatha Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was on a mortgage and ended in a decree for recovery by sale of the property. The decree also contained a declaration of the personal liability of 2nd defendant for plaintiff's costs in case the sale-proceeds were not sufficient to pay them as well as the mortgage-money. Defendant No. 2, who appeals against this part of the decree, purchased the property after the suit mortgage.

His first objection, that such a declaration can in no case be included in a preliminary decree for sale, is answered by reference to Kamalamma v. Komandur Narasimha Charlu (1).

Next he argues that whilst such a declaration can be given, as in that case, against the mortgagor, none can be given against any other party, because it is only against the mortgagor that a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, (section 90, Transfer of Property Act) can eventually be passed. Costs, it is said, may be legally recoverable from 2nd defendant under the decree against him. But the mortgage-money will not be legally recoverable from him; and, as the assumption that the portion of the decree amount unsatisfied by the sale-proceeds represents costs, not the mortgage-money, will be inadmissible, the passing of a personal decree against him for it will not be justified by law.

We have been referred to English cases, in which this relief was given, Sharple v. Adams (2), Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson (3) and Griffith v. Pound (4). But in the first the defendant was in the position of the mortgagor, since he made the mortgage as his trustee and with his sanction; and in any case in the absence of statutory restrictions on the contents of the decree, English practice is conclusive. Such statutory restrictions are imposed in India by Order XXXIV, rules 4 (1) and 5, and the forms of decree, Nos. 4 and 11, Appendix D, of the Civil Procedure Code, the heading of the last-mentioned form, “Decree against mortgagor personally,” implying what (it will be seen) authority supports, that “defendant” in rule 6 means only the mortgagor. We have not been shown authority for disregarding these restrictions and do not feel entitled to do so.

The decisions in Ram Lal v. Sil Chand (5) and Matu Amber v. Sri Dhar (6) are that “defendant” in section 90, Transfer of Property Act, means only the mortgagor and that no subsequent decree can be made against any other defendant, when the preliminary decree has provided for recovery of costs only by sale of the property. The judgments, no doubt, support plaintiff by the suggestions contained in them, that personal decree for costs could have been made against such other defendants if they had been applied for when the preliminary decrees were passed. For, if such decrees could have been given with immediate effect, it is hard to understand why they should not be given, like that before us, as declarations subject to the result of the sale. But these suggestions were only obiter, and the distinction between liability for costs and mortgage-money, on which plaintiff relies here, was not referred to. That distinction was drawn, though as between mortgagee and mortgagor, in Damodar Das v. Budh Kuar (7) and Rutnessur Sein v. Jusoda (8). But the decree in those cases were for foreclosure; and the Court disregarded the distinction in two cases, in which the decrees were (as here) for sale: Raj Kumar Singh v. Sheo Narayan Sahu (9) and Panday Jagannath v. Junian (10). In the latter case the distinction was material between the parties to the mortgage with reference to limitation; and Chamier, J., whose conclusions we respectfully adopt, refused to draw it, holding that no such disintegration of the amount declared due under Order XXXIV, rule 4, was contemplated by the Legislature, and that no presumption in favour of the appropriation of sale-proceeds in any particular way was recognised by authority. It has not been shown how those principles, valid between mortgagor and mortgagee, are invalid between the former and other defendants.

Taking this view, we must decide for 2nd defendant, though the result of doing so will be to exempt him from liability for the expense which his deceitful and reckless pleading has imposed on plaintiff. The second appeal is allowed and the declaration regarding 2nd defendant's liability is expunged from the decree under appeal. In view of his conduct he will pay his own costs before the District Munsif. Plaintiff must pay his costs in first and second appeals.

Where there has been a partition of a certain mahal by a Revenue Court, resulting in a certain distribution of the lands of that mahal, if any error has been made in connection with this distribution to the prejudice of a particular co-sharer, the remedy of the latter is by way of application to the Revenue Court to correct its own mistake and not a suit in the Civil Court. Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge of Farrukhabad.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether this suit was barred by the provisions of section 233 (k) of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, Local Act No. III of 1901. According to that section the Civil Court is debarred from taking cognizance of any suit with regard to the partition or union of mahals. The section itself is drawn up in broad terms and it has been applied broadly by this Court ever since the Full Bench decision in Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram (1). That decision was under the former Land Revenue Act, No. XIX of 1873, the wording of which differed somewhat. The provisions of section 233 (k), as they now stand, were considered by two Judges of this Court in Lachman Das v. Hanuman Prasad (2). I understand that ruling as laying down the broad principle that where there has been a partition of a certain mahal by a Revenue Court, resulting in a certain distribution of the lands of that mahal being effected, if any error has been made in connection with this distribution to the prejudice of a particular co-sharer, the remedy of the latter is by way of application to the Revenue Court itself to correct its own mistake. Any exercise of jurisdiction on the part of a Civil Court which would disturb, or in any way affect, the distribution of land made on a partition, is barred by section 233 (k) of Act III of 1901. The facts of the present case are given at length in the very careful judgment of the learned Munsif. It appears that the mahal with which we are concerned had been divided by perfect partition in the year 1875. A number of pattis had been formed, one of which patti, No. 9, was known as patti shamilat and consisted of those lands which had not been divided amongst the co-sharers, that is to say, the joint lands in which all the co-sharers of the various pattis retained their rights according to their proportionate shares. In the year 1904 Daljit Singh, who is the defendant in the present case, presented an application for the separation, by perfect partition, of his share in pattis Nos. 4 and 5 and also of his share in shamilat patti No. 9. Notice of this application was issued to all the co-sharers of all the various pattis in the mahal. The Assistant Collector, however, came to the conclusion that there were objections to a perfect partition, and intimated as much to Daljit Singh. The latter thereupon presented a fresh application on the 25th of March 1905 asking the Court to separate his share by imperfect partition only, thus forming it into a new patti. The learned District Judge seems to have felt some doubt as to whether on this application any actual partition of the lands appertaining to the shamilat patti No. 9 could have followed, or actually did follow. Obviously, when Daljit Singh's application was limited to one for imperfect partition, no actual partition of the lands appertaining to the patti shamilat would follow. A new patti would be created by separating Daljit Singh's share in lands appertaining to pattis Nos. 4 and 5 from those of the other co-sharers in the same pattis. In the course of carrying out this imperfect partition the Assistant Collector laid hold of a plot 69, 69 of an acre in area, shown as No. 1956 in the village map. He treated this as appertaining to patti No. 4 and divided it amongst co-sharers of that patti, assigning to the defendant-appellant, 49, 49 acre as his share in the same. The plaintiff in this case, Shambhu Singh, has acquired since the partition the proprietary rights which belonged in the years 1904 and 1905 to a co-sharer named Dular Singh. He contends that plot No. 1956 above referred to never appertained to patti No. 4 at all, but formed part of the land appertaining to patti No. 2 in which Dular Singh was a co-sharer. He suggests that the proceedings of the Assistant Collector dealing with this plot in the course of the partition of 1905 were a pure mistake. The Courts below have gone into the question of fact. Apparently it was not a question which could be settled off-hand on a mere inspection of the village records. It turned upon a comparison of the existing village records with the older papers and the ascertainment and location of the older numbers which went to make up plot No. 1956 in the present village map. The Courts below have, however, found that plot No. 1956 did appertain to patti No. 2 and was wrongly included by the Assistant Collector in patti No. 4 and partitioned amongst the co-sharers of that patti. Assuming that this finding is correct, the plaintiff has suffered an injury, but the question remains whether his remedy is by way of suit in a Civil Court or, as was said in the ruling to which I have already referred, by way of application to the Revenue Court to correct its own mistake. Both the learned Munsif and the learned District Judge have taken the view that the case stood on an entirely different footing from the moment that Daljit Singh applied to the Revenue Court to separate his share from the rest of the mahal by imperfect instead of by perfect partition. It certainly cannot be denied that, if the proceedings had continued on the application for perfect partition as originally brought, and the Assistant Collector had, however erroneously, taken this plot of land and divided it amongst the co-sharers in patti No. 4, a suit would not have been maintainable in the Civil Court to disturb that apportionment. I understand the District Judge to mean that the sharers in the remaining pattis, other than pattis Nos. 4 and 5, ceased to have any interest in the partition, or to be under any obligation to watch the proceedings in the Assistant Collector's Court, from the moment that Daljit Singh's application was limited to an application for imperfect partition. The only reported case I can find which lends some support to the decision of the Courts below is that of Kishen Prashad v. Kadher Mal (3), which was a single Judge case. So far as I can discover from the reported cases of this Court it has only once been considered by a Bench of this Court, and that was in Jagan Nath v. Tirbeni Sahai (4). It was then distinguished against, though not expressly dissented from. It seems to me that the plaintiff is not entitled, in the present case, to ask the Court to treat the Assistant Collector's proceedings as a nullity. On Daljit Singh's application for partition the Assistant Collector had to ascertain what lands belonged to pattis Nos. 4 and 5 and to apportion them between the recorded co-sharers of the said pattis. He would have to do this equally on an application for imperfect partition as on an application for perfect partition. It may be that the Assistant Collector came to an erroneous decision when he included this plot No. 1956 in the area which he proceeded to apportion amongst the co-sharers of patti No. 4. Nevertheless he did so, and it seems to be impossible to say that he had no jurisdiction to do so. This case is really distinguishable from that of Kishen Prashad v. Kadher Mal (3), because in the present case all the co-sharers in the shamilat patti, including the proprietors of patti No. 2, had notice of the partition proceedings. I am not sure that I should myself have been disposed to regard this as in itself decisive, but it seems to me that I am bound to follow the general principle laid down in Lachman Das v. Hanuman Prasad (2), unless something can be shown to take the case before me outside the operation of that principle. In my opinion this appeal must succeed. The suit was not cognizable by reason of the provisions of section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act and should have been dismissed accordingly. I accept this appeal, and setting aside the decrees of both the Courts below dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal decreed.

Where in a suit for ejectment it appeared that the defendants' possession arose within 12 years before suit, but that during the remaining period of the 12 years the land in suit had been lying waste and uncultivated:

Held, that the lands were presumably in possession of the plaintiff who had title to them. [p. 192, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 205 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Tirupati in Original Suit No. 348 of 1909.

Mr. Rangachariar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. Sreenivasa Iyengar and K. Raja Iyer, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 11th March 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—So far as the plaintiffs' (respondents') title is concerned, we are not satisfied that the lower Appellate Court misconstrued any documents in arriving at its conclusion that the road A in the plaintiffs' plan is the extreme southern limit of the defendants' hamlet and that the plaintiffs have established that their title-deed covers the plaint land.

But as regards the question of limitation, though the learned District Judge correctly sets out the point which falls to be decided by him, namely, that the plaintiffs ought to prove possession within 12 years before suit: see Mohima Chunder Mozumdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi (1), he discusses only those facts on which he finds that the defendants' possession arose within 12 years before suit, but fails to find whether at sometime during the remaining portion (which might be called the first portion) of the 12 years, the plaintiffs had proved possession in themselves either directly or by the actual cultivators having attorned to them or by the lands having lain waste during the whole or any portion of that period and possession being, therefore, presumably with the person having title. However, we are able to accept the District Munsif's view as to the facts (which view, we take it, was intended to be adopted by the District Judge) that the plots B9 to B18 and the sandy waste B were not in possession of any person (other than the plaintiffs) continuously during the 12 years before suit.

We, however, cannot accept the District Judge's finding (as it stands) on the question of limitation as regards the plots B1 to B8 and we request the District Judge to submit a revised finding on this question with reference to the above observations, after the necessary discussion of the evidence and distinguishing (when necessary) the different plots according as they have been lying waste or had begun to be cultivated more than 12 years before suit.

The findings should be submitted within two weeks from the re-opening of the District Court after the midsummer vacation and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above order of this Court, the District Judge of North Arcot submitted the following

FINDING.— * * * * *

* * * I must, therefore, find that plots B1 to 5 and 7 were waste prior to Fasli 1310 and plots 6 and 8 were waste prior to Fasli 1313, and being waste they were presumably in the possession of the plaintiff who had title to them.

This second appeal and the memorandum of objections coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding and dismiss the second appeal with costs.
Appeal dismissed.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Transfer—Ex-proprietary holding exchanged for house—Illegal transaction—Suit for recovery of possession of house, if maintainable.

An exchange of a house for the ex-proprietary right of a holding is an illegal transaction and the owner of the house is not entitled to maintain a suit for recovery of possession of the house. [p. 193, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Farrukhabad.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen appear to be as follows. One Ram Ratan Lal obtained a decree against the defendants and in execution of that decree, he attached and sold the house which is in dispute in the present suit. It was purchased in the name of Lachman Dass, who is connected in some way with Ram Ratan Lal. It appears that after the sale, Ram Ratan Lal and the auction-purchaser had a considerable amount of difficulty in getting possession of the house from the judgment-debtors; finally on the 22nd of September 1905, a document was executed by both sides under which Ram Ratan Lal and Lachman Das transferred the ownership of this house to the defendants, while the defendants in return transferred to them their ex-proprietary rights in a certain holding. This holding included a large number of plots of land. As far as one can see the parties acted up to their words, possession of the house was given to the defendants and possession of the holding was given to Ram Ratan Lal and Lachman Das. Subsequently to this there was a difference about a grove. The defendants owned a grove and in execution of a decree the whole of the grove was attached, sold and purchased by Lachman Das. Under the decree, however, it was only a portion of the grove that ought to have been sold. The defendants thereupon brought a suit to recover possession of the excess amount which ought not to have been sold. In the course of that suit Lachman Das pleaded the exchange of the 22nd of September 1905, this grove apparently standing on one of the plots in which the defendants had held ex-proprietary rights. In that case the Court held that the transfer was an illegal transfer and was not binding on the defendants and the defendants got a decree for possession of that portion of the grove. The plaintiff, Lachman Das has now brought the present suit for possession of the house. In his plaint he said nothing about the deed of exchange or anything else. He has come forward as an auction-purchaser and says that though formal possession was delivered to him, he has failed to obtain actual possession of the property sold and on the basis of his title as auction-purchaser he claims possession of the house. Both the Courts below have held that the plaintiff has no right to re-gain possession of the house. On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged before me that he is quite willing to be put upon terms, that if he can get the house back, he would be quite willing to re-transfer the ex-proprietary holding. This was not what he stated in his plaint. The question is whether he is entitled to get back the house. It is quite clear that if he had purchased the ex-proprietary right, he would not have been entitled to recover the money by suit. The deed of the 22nd of September 1905 was practically a sale-deed, though instead of cash, property was given in exchange for property. The fact that the transaction was an exchange and not a sale makes little difference in the application of the principle on which the cases in this Court have been decided. The transfer of ex-proprietary rights is forbidden by law. The plaintiff has purchased property the sale of which he must have known was forbidden by law. The property has been handed over since by the vendor and he is not entitled to recover back his house, much more so in the present case, because it will be impossible to re-place the opposite party in the same position in which he was before the transaction was carried out. That was ten years ago. For ten years they have been out of possession of this ex-proprietary holding and the landlord of the village would probably object to their returning as ex-proprietary tenants, they having been out of possession for so many years. The plaintiff has nobody but himself to thank and I cannot see my way to helping him. Under the circumstances I hold that he is legally not entitled to recover possession of the house. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RAJA v. SANT RAIN DAS,

JUDGMENT.—On the 2nd October 1835, corresponding to the beginning of the Fasli year 1243, a certain Mithu Lal mortgaged Bhawanipur and Dhinji Khara, together with nankar rights worth Rs. 970 a year, to Mahant Gur Narain Das of Lucknow for Rs. 701. There is no evidence to show how the mortgagor came to part with his rights over the villages and with nankar rights for such a small sum of money. On the 24th April 1865 Sheo Din and Mendi Lal applied in the Court of the Settlement Officer for redemption of the mortgaged property against Charan Das, guardian of Har Charan Das and the manager of the estate. Har Charan Das, who was then a minor, was the successor-in-interest of Mahant Gur Narain Das. Mahant Gur Narain Das had been recognized as a Talukdar and his name was entered after his death in general No. 20, List I, and in No. 4, List II, of the Lists prepared in accordance with section 8, Act I of 1869. The suit for redemption of the property in question could not have succeeded at the time that it was instituted, as at that period the Legislature had failed to provide for the redemption of mortgages in cases in which a Talukdar was mortgagee in possession holding under a usufructuary mortgage at the time of annexation. Under the Summary Settlement and the terms of the Sanad Talukdars had been considered proprietors of lands so held in their possession; but subsequently by Legislation, which was contained in Act XIII of 1866, Act I of 1869 and Act XXXII of 1871, a power of redemption was given in certain cases. The lower Courts appear to have held that the Court of the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit which was brought by Sheo Din and Mendi Lal, because as the law stood such suit could not have been successful. We are of opinion that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, although as the law then stood the suit would have failed had there been a decision on the merits. It does not follow that a Court has no jurisdiction to decide a suit because the cause of action is bad. To give a simple illustration, a Court has jurisdiction to decide a suit when the cause of action is time-barred. The suit in question was not determined on the merits. A compromise was entered into between the parties on the 8th May 1865, under which the Talukdar agreed to transfer to Sheo Din and Mendi Lal possession over 51 bighas of sir land rent and revenue free and to pay them Rs. 450 nankar a year on the condition that, so long as they retained possession of the 51 bighas of land and received the Rs. 450 a year, they would have no right to redeem the mortgaged property. Mithu Lal was dead when this suit was brought. He had four sons, by name Sheo Din, Mendi Lal, Debi and Chandi, and a brother, by name Chet Ram. Mithu Lal was the sole mortgagor as has been already stated and the plaintiffs in the case were Sheo Din and Mendi Lal only. Sheo Din died without issue. Mendi Lal had a son, Puttu Lal, who had a son Raja, who had been born before 1865, and a son, Gauri Shanker, who was born after 1865. Debi had a son called Bhagwan Din, who married a woman called Bhagwana and died without issue. Chandi died without issue. Chet Ram had three sons, Ram Dayal, Kusehar Din and Kishan Dayal. The two latter lines are now extinct. Ram Dayal has left a daughter called Padmani or Tulshia. The suit for redemption was brought on the 22nd November 1909 by Raja, Gauri Shanker and Padmani. Bhagwana was joined as a defendant. This suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Unao and the appeal brought was dismissed by the Additional District Judge of Lucknow, on the grounds that the mortgage was irredeemable and that, even if it had been redeemable, redemption by the plaintiffs was barred under the terms of the compromise dated 8th May 1865. As the value of the property involved is stated to be more than Rs. 10,000, the second appeal in this case has been referred to this Bench.

The judgments of the Courts below are full and ample and such questions of fact as were before them for decision have been decided fully and completely upon the evidence on the record so as to become conclusive. As a Court of second appeal we cannot interfere with those findings. Certain of those findings may be stated at once. They are to the effect that Raja was born before 1865 and that he was from four to nine years old at the time. He thus attained majority at some period within the years 1874 and 1879. Gauri Shanker was not born till after 1865. Bhagwan Din verified the compromise. The Courts have found that he was a major at the time that it was executed. They have found this fact on the ground that he verified the compromise and that it was for the plaintiffs to prove that he was a minor and that they had failed to do so. We accept this conclusion as legally valid. They have further found that at the time that the mortgage was executed Mithu Lal and Chet Ram were separate. This finding is based on the following grounds. It was admitted that Mithu Lal and Chet Ram had separated in 1837. The plaintiffs sought to establish that the separation took place actually in 1837 and had not taken place in 1835. Mithu Lal was the sole mortgagor and the deed of mortgage does not recite that he mortgaged it as head of a joint family. The Courts found, and in our opinion found rightly, that on the evidence of the mortgage-deed, as it stood, there could be no presumption that Mithu Lal and Chet Ram were joint, that it was, therefore, for the plaintiffs to prove that the separation between Mithu Lal and Chet Ram had taken place after the deed of mortgage had been executed, and that they had failed to do so. We, therefore, accept the finding that Mithu Lal had separated from Chet Ram before the execution of the deed of mortgage. They further found that Bhagwan Din had accepted benefits of the compromise personally and that he had himself verified it. In these circumstances the claims of Gauri Shanker, Bhagwana and Padmani to redeem must fail in any case. Gauri Shanker has no right to redeem as he was born after the execution of the compromise. Bhagwana has no right to redeem as her husband accepted the compromise and verified it, being a major at the time, and derived benefits under its terms. Padmani or Tulshia has no right to redeem as her ancestor, Chet Ram, was no party to and had no concern with the mortgage. This leaves the case of Raja alone to be considered.

We have now to decide whether the mortgage would ordinarily be redeemable. The law governing the point will be found in sections 3 and 6 of Act I of 1869. We understand the provisions of the law upon this subject to be that in the case of a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed within 12 years of the date of annexation, which was the 13th of February 1856, the Legislature allowed a right of redemption, but that in the case of a usufructuary mortgage executed more than 12 years before the date of annexation, the Legislature refused a right of redemption, except in a case in which the mortgagor had been unable under the terms of the deed to redeem before 13th February 1856. The reasons for permitting redemption in certain cases and refusing it in others appear to have been that the Crown did not wish to enter ordinarily into the merits of old mortgages. It was ready to consider on the merits all mortgages which had come into existence within 12 years of the date of annexation but did not ordinarily wish to go into cases of mortgages executed beyond that period. As, however, it would have been palpably unfair to refuse the right of redemption to a mortgagor who could not under the terms of the deed, have obtained redemption before the date of annexation, the Crown made an exception in the favour of such mortgagors by laying down that, if a mortgagor had not been entitled to a right of redemption under the terms of the deed before the 13th February 1856, he should be permitted to redeem whatever was the date of his mortgage. We understand their Lordships of the Privy Council to have interpreted the provisions of the law upon these principles in the case of Rajah Kishen Dutt Ram Pandey v. Narendar Bahadoor Singh (1). The point was not raised distinctly for their determination. There it was alleged on one side that redemption had been possible in 1850 in which case the suit for redemption must fail, and on the other side that redemption was not possible till 1860 in which case the suit for redemption would succeed. Their Lordships decided on the evidence that redemption was possible in 1850, but the general terms of their judgment would denote that the principles governing redemption are as we have stated them to be. It has been argued that the decision in Thakur Kalka Singh v. Thakur Debi Singh (2) lays down that such a mortgage as this is irredeemable. In that case the question arose as to whether a mortgage could be redeemed in which the mortgagor agreed to redeem in 1852. Ryves, A. J. C., considered that in that case the instrument of mortgage had not fixed a term within which the property might be redeemed. In so far he interpreted the particular deed of mortgage, but he added the remark at page 238: "Act XIII of 1866" (the section of Act XIII of 1866 corresponds closely enough to section 6 of Act I of 1869 for a dictum as to its interpretation to apply to the interpretation of section 6, Act I of 1869) "applies, I think, only to such mortgages as were common before the annexation of Oudh in which a date was agreed upon between the parties as the last possible date on which redemption could take place." It has been argued from this that, inasmuch as no last possible date beyond which redemption can take place has been fixed in the present mortgage, the provisions of section 6, Act I of 1869, have no application and the mortgage remains irredeemable. The point referred to by Mr. Ryves did not arise in the case which he decided and the pronouncement is not of a nature which can bind us in deciding the point. Much of the argument that we have heard upon this point is based upon an assumption that a term cannot be fixed within which the property might be redeemed unless a specific date is fixed for redemption. We are of opinion that the introduction of this addition to the words of the section is unwarranted and would lead to a wrong interpretation of provisions. A term can be fixed for redemption without a specific date being fixed for redemption. A term may be fixed either by fixing a definite date or by placing the conclusion on the occurrence of an event. If a man agrees to give possession on a certain date, he fixes the term within which he will give possession. But if he agrees to give possession on the date of another person's death he also fixes the term, though in that case the period within which the term will expire will not be ascertained until the event of the death of that person has occurred. Here it would appear that a term was fixed within which the property might be redeemed. The time of redemption was to be the time when both the crops were cleared in 1860 or any year afterwards when Rs. 701 were paid to the mortgagee. Here there was a distinct term which concluded on the payment of the money in such particular month and that term had not expired before the 13th of February 1856. Therefore we are of opinion that under the provisions of section 6, Act I of 1869, a suit lay for the redemption of the mortgage.

It remains to be seen, however, whether Raja, who, as we have already shown, is the only person whose claims to redeem are not excluded on the findings of fact, has title to redeem the property. It is true that as a son born in a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law he obtained a vested interest in the ancestral property from the date of his birth, and that, as the property of which redemption is sought is proved to be ancestral property, he would in ordinary circumstances have a right to redeem in spite of the fact that his grandfather had lost his right. Was he, however, bound by the terms of the compromise? We can leave on one side the question whether the compromise was ineffective against Raja because no decree was passed embodying it. Even had a decree been passed embodying it, the decree would have been against Mendi Lal and would not have bound Raja. We have it, however, that Raja attained majority within the years 1874 to 1879 and this suit for redemption was not brought till 1909, that is to say, 30 years after the last possible date when Raja could have attained majority. During the whole of these 30 years the Talukdar has been allowing the parties to the compromise the use of 51 bighas of land rent-free and revenue-free and Rs 450 a year. It has been argued that there is evidence on the record to show that on the 14th November 1882 Puttu Lal, the father of Raja, transferred all his interests in Rs. 450 a year to the Talukdar for Rs. 2,300 and that in the same year he mortgaged and sold his interests in the sir land, but the facts that Puttu

RAJA v. SANT RAIN DAS.

Lal capitalised his right to receive an annuity and that he transferred his rights in the sir land to a third party, do not alter the fact that the Talukdar has kept his part of the bargain and that the father of Raja and Raja himself for a period of at least three years (for he was admittedly joint with his father) derived benefit from the terms of the compromise. In a case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, Mahomed Abdul Kadir v. Amtal Karim Banu (3), two ladies were held to be bound by the terms of a sulehnama, which had been executed by their mother when they were minors, out of which they had received no benefit, their mother being found to have no power to bind them under the terms of the sulehnama, because they had not taken steps to set it aside after the lapse of 20 years from the time of their attaining full age. Their Lordships observed at page 168: "Assuming that Khadija had no power to transfer the plaintiffs' share, or that they might have had the sulehnama set aside, their making no objection to it for so many years after they attained majority is sufficient evidence that they ratified and adopted it." In that case the ladies had received no benefit of any kind. The claim of Raja is much weaker than theirs, for not only has his father with whom he was joint received benefit, but he has received benefit himself and he has made no attempt to set up a title conflicting with the terms of the compromise for 30 years at least from the period when he attained majority. Thus we have no hesitation in finding that he adopted and ratified the arrangement and that he is estopped equitably from now asserting a right to redeem.

There is a further point to be considered. The appellants have asserted that redemption is possible because the Talukdar has broken the terms of the compromise. If this plea were accepted, Raja Gauri Shanker, Padmani and Bhagwana would all have a right to redeem. The assertion that there has been a breach of the terms of the compromise is based upon the evidence afforded by the proceedings in two instances. In suit No. 172 of 1906 in the Court of the Munsif of Purwa in the Unao District Sheo Prasad sued Har Charan Das for a portion of the nankar payable under the terms of the compromise. It appears that Sheo Prasad was a transferee of the rights of the beneficiary. The suit was brought because he had not received his quota. Har Charan Das applied for time to prepare his defence and, having obtained time, compromised the claim, and the suit was dismissed. There is no breach of the terms of the compromise on these facts. Har Charan Das is not shown to have been in a position to know that Sheo Prasad had any title to claim as a transferee. It appears that when he ascertained that he had such title, he settled his claim. The remaining evidence consists of a notice of ejectment on Fakir Muhammad issued by Har Charan Das calling on him to vacate a portion of the sir land. It appears that Fakir Muhammad was a vendee and mortgagee of Puttu Lal. Here again there is nothing to show that Har Charan Das had any knowledge of the fact that Fakir Muhammad had any title derived from the title of Puttu Lal. There is nothing to show that effect was ever given to this notice. It may well have been issued in ignorance of the facts with regard to the title of Fakir Muhammad and the circumstance that it was issued cannot go to prove a breach of the terms of the compromise. There is no other admissible evidence upon the point, and we are satisfied upon the evidence that there has been no breach on the part of the Talukdar of the terms of the compromise.

The tenth and eleventh grounds of appeal were withdrawn in argument.

This concludes the decision on all the arguments advanced to us in support of the appeal. We find that no right to redeem can be ascertained on the part of any of the plaintiffs or of Musammnat Bhagwana. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 7th March 1913.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Kalka Prasad Trivedi, for Respondent No. 2

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The plaintiff, Musammāt Chandra Kuar, brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur against Kuar Raghubar Singh and Kuar Balbhaddar Singh asking for a declaration that a certain deed of mortgage executed by the first defendant in favour of the second defendant was, so far as her interest in the property in her possession was concerned, of no effect. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit being of opinion that the document complained of was not one from which the plaintiff could reasonably entertain any apprehension of injury to her interest. We have heard Counsel in this case and in our opinion the appeal must be allowed and the decision of the Court below must be set aside. The facts admitted by both parties in this Court are as follows. The village named Mahrana, which was formerly the property of one Fateh Singh, consisted at one time of two hamlets, Mahrana proper and Ichchanagar. In the course of some partition proceedings which are said to have taken place long ago, this village was divided into three mahals, namely, Mahrana Khas, Ichchanagar South and Ichchanagar North. Fateh Singh, when he died, left two sons, Madho Singh and Sheo Bakhsh Singh. Madho Singh is dead and the plaintiff in this case, Musammāt Chandra Kuar, is his widow. Sheo Bakhsh Singh died leaving a son, Jagannath Singh, who had married two wives from each of whom he had children. From one wife Jagannath Singh had two sons, Jadunath Singh and Raghubar Singh, Raghubar Singh being the first defendant in the present case. From the other wife Jagannath Singh had a son named Arjun Singh. When the whole of the family property which had once belonged to Fateh Singh came to be divided, it appears that of the three mahals above-mentioned two, namely, Mahal Mahrana Khas and Mahal Ichchanagar North fell to the lot of Madho Singh who was the plaintiff's husband. It is admitted now that Musammāt Chandra Kuar is in possession of these two mahals with the estate of a Hindu widow. The other, Mahal Ichchanagar South, was divided between the sons of Jagannath Singh in the following proportions:

4½ annas to Jadunath Singh.

4½ annas to Raghubar Singh.

7 annas to Arjun Singh.

It is admitted further that the 4½ anna share of Raghubar Singh in Mahal Ichchanagar South was foreclosed by the second defendant, Balbhaddar Singh, some time ago and previous to the date of the mortgage of which the plaintiff complains. The result, therefore, was that at the time this mortgage of the 5th July 1912 was executed, Raghubar Singh had no immediate interest in any portion of the village of Mahrana. The only interest he had had, as already said, passed by foreclosure to Balbhaddar Singh. To turn now to this mortgage of the 5th of July 1912, it purports to be a mortgage of a 5-anna 4-pie share of the entire village of Mahrana. The mortgage is one by conditional sale and the period of the mortgage is seven years. The amount of the mortgage-money is Rs. 12,000 with interest at Re. ½ per cent. per mensem. It has been frankly admitted by the learned Counsel who appears here for the respondent Balbhaddar Singh that this deed of mortgage purports to transfer by way of mortgage property to which the mortgagor, Raghubar Singh, has at the present time no title. It is clear on the pedigree just given that at the present moment Raghubar Singh is one of the reversionary heirs of the plaintiff's deceased husband, Madho Singh; but any right he has at present in the property which belonged to Madho Singh is contingent. It is admitted that in the mortgage-deed no reference is made to the fact that the present owner in possession of two of the mahals of Mauza Mahrana is the plaintiff, Musammât Chandra Kuar, and it is further admitted that it is nowhere stated in the mortgage-deed that the interest which Raghubar Singh purported to transfer by way of mortgage was merely a reversionary interest. These being the facts we find ourselves unable to agree with the opinion of the learned Judge of the Court below to the effect that Musammât Chandra Kuar the plaintiff, has no right to obtain the relief she asked for. On the contrary, although her estate is merely that of a Hindu widow, it appears to us that she may rightly complain that some injury may be done to her by this mortgage transaction unless some declaration is obtained by her at the earliest opportunity that it is in no way to affect her rights. It is quite possible that she may survive for a long time after the period of the mortgage has expired and it is, therefore, not an unreasonable apprehension on her part that if the time of foreclosure should arrive she may be dragged into litigation with which she has really no concern. We are not called upon in the present case to discuss the relations which have arisen between the respondents out of the execution of this deed of mortgage, but we are certainly of opinion that Musammât Chandra Kuar is entitled to have the protection she asks for in the shape of a declaration that this transaction of mortgage in no way affects her rights as a Hindu widow in possession of the two mahals, Mahrana Khas and Ichchanagar North.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the decree of the Court below. A declaration in the above form will be granted to the plaintiff-appellant and she will be entitled to have her costs from the defendants-respondents in both Courts.

Where an appellant is not properly served although his Pleader is informed of the date of hearing, and the Pleader alone appears on that date but states that he is unable to prosecute the appeal for want of instructions, the appeal should not be dismissed in default. [p. 200, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 9th September 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Partabgarh, dated the 31st March 1913.

FACTS.—The plaintiff-appellant filed the appeal in the Commissioner's Court through a Pleader. The Pleader was not informed of the date of hearing fixed by the Court, nor was a notice to that effect properly served on the appellant. The appellant and his Pleader both, being absent on the said date, the Commissioner ordered another date to be fixed and notices to be served on the appellant as well as on the Pleader. Notices were accordingly issued, but although the Pleader was informed of the date the notice was not served personally on the appellant; but simply affixed to his house as he had gone out. On the subsequent date of hearing the Pleader appeared, but said that he was unable to prosecute the appeal as he had got no instructions from his client, the appellant. The Commissioner thereupon dismissed the appeal for want of prosecution. Thereafter the appellant applied to have the said order of dismissal set aside, alleging that he had been ill and could not, therefore, appear and instruct his Pleader. The Commissioner rejected this application, holding that the appellant should have taken steps to instruct his Pleader beforehand, and that Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, did not govern the case as there had been an appearance on behalf of the appellant by his Pleader although there was no prosecution of the case. An appeal against the order passed on the said application was preferred to the Board of Revenue.

HOLMS, J. M. (November 12th, 1914.)—The Commissioner ordered the notice to be issued again on the 1st of September 1913 on both the appellant and his Pleader. The notice was affixed to the appellant's house as he had gone off to Sultanpur and there was no proper service. This being so, the appeal should not have been dismissed in default.

I would set aside the order of the Commissioner and direct that he re-hear the appeal.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 28th February 1913.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mirza Sami Ullah Beg and Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption brought by the plaintiff, Raghunath Bakhsh, who is a minor. The suit was dismissed by the lower Court on the ground that the plaintiff had no title to maintain the suit.

The sale sought to be pre-empted was a sale of the superior proprietary rights of a village called Sadruddeenpur. The third defendant, Chaudhri Shafiq-uz-zaman, was the vendor and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were the vendees.

In the fourth paragraph of the plaint it was alleged that the plaintiff was an under-proprietor of the village and was also a member of the village community and, therefore, entitled to seek pre-emption. The vendees, in their written statement, denied these allegations, but did not definitely state grounds for their denial. It was only after the evidence had been closed and the arguments had commenced that these defendants challenged the plaintiff's title, on the ground that it was based upon a sale-deed executed in his favour in the year 1907. It was contended that a sale-deed in favour of a minor was void and passed no interest to the purchaser.

After this point had been raised, the parties were allowed to produce further evidence. For the plaintiff it was sought to be proved that the sale had been negotiated and carried through by one Ram Sahai, an uncle of the minor who was joint in family with him, and that the purchase had been made for the benefit of the joint family in the name of the minor. As an alternative case it was pleaded that the sale was good, as the transaction had been concluded by Ram Sahai who was the de facto guardian of the minor and who was acting as such for the minor's advantage.

The Subordinate Judge found against the plaintiff on these pleas and relying apparently on the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1) came to the conclusion that there was no valid sale and, therefore, no title in the plaintiff to sue. In the concluding portion of his judgment he stated that although the sale had, without doubt, been negotiated by the plaintiff's uncle, the transaction was nevertheless void by reason of the plaintiff's minority.

In appeal here the contention is that the view of the law that a transfer by a sale to a minor is void is wrong. The only authorities directly in point which have been cited in support of the view taken by the Court below are a judgment of a Bench of the Madras High Court reported as Navakoti Narayana Chetty v. Loyalinga Chetty (2) and the decision of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court to be found in Musammat Munni v. Madan Gopal (3). In both of these rulings it is laid down that a sale to a minor is void and this view has been arrived at by deduction from the law as laid down in the well-known case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (4), in which it was declared by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a mortgage made by a minor is void on the ground that he is a person not competent to contract, and that being so, any transfer of property made by a minor must necessarily be void under section 7 of the Transfer of Property Act, which by implication provides that there can be no valid transfer by a person who is under disability to contract.

The question with which we are concerned here is a different one, namely, the capacity of a person to acquire ownership of property by transfer from another.

The only provision of the Transfer of Property Act which relates directly to disqualification to take by transfer is to be found in section 6, clause (h), of the Act where it is laid down that no transfer can be made to a person legally disqualified to be a transferee. Who the persons so disqualified are, is not stated in the clause; to ascertain who they are we have to refer to other provisions of the law generally which declare the disqualification. We have, for example, the provision embodied in section 136 of the Act imposing incapacity upon Judges, Legal Practitioners and officers connected with Courts of Justice so as to prevent them acquiring interests in actionable claims.

Similarly in the Civil Procedure Code, Order XXI, rules 72, 73, we find restrictions upon the right of acquiring property placed upon holders of decrees in execution and upon officers or other persons who have duties to perform in connection with Court sales.

But nowhere do we find any express provision of law by which it is declared that competency to contract is to constitute a criterion of capacity to acquire property by transfer. Bearing in mind that the Legislature thought it necessary to lay down that want of contractual capacity is a disqualification for the purpose of answering ownerships, it might reasonably be expected that if the intention was to bar transfers to persons who cannot make a valid contract that intention would have been expressed in language no less clear. And if the policy of the law of property is to allow the free alienation and circulation of property, it does not appear to us to be legitimate to import into it a disqualification which it does not expressly contain so as to restrict the right of an owner of property to dispose of it as he pleases. "The right of alienation is, as a rule, incidental to and inseparable from the beneficial ownership of property" (Dart).

That the Transfer of Property Act does not regard want of capacity to contract as a bar to the acquisition of property by transfer is clear from a reference to the provisions of section 127 of the Act relating to transfer by way of gift. To render a transfer of this nature complete there must be acceptance by or on behalf of the donee (section 123), and section 127 provides that although a donee who is not competent to contract and who accepts property burdened by an obligation is not bound by his acceptance, he may become so bound if after becoming competent to contract, and being aware of the obligation, he retains the property which has been given to him. In other words, the want of competency in the donee to contract does not prevent the property being transferred to him.

A similar principle is recognised in section 248 of the Indian Contract Act, which provides for the case of a minor admitted to the benefits of a partnership.

Lastly we may notice that the definition of the expression "transfer of property" contained in section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act does not import any disqualification on the part of a minor to acquire property by transfer.

We can see no good reason, therefore, for the proposition that a minor, because he is not competent to contract, is debarred from taking property under a transfer by sale.

As for the argument that such a transfer should be deemed void because section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act imposes certain liabilities upon the purchaser, the answer appears to be that these liabilities do not arise out of contract. They are liabilities which the law declares to be incidental, not to a contract, but to a transfer of property in this particular way.

The law has thought proper to protect the interests of minors by declaring them incompetent to dispose of their property but we are unable to see how such a provision can be treated as, or transmuted into, a legal disability on the part of a minor to acquire property by transfer. We cannot, therefore, in the absence of any authority higher than those which have been cited to us, accept as good law the proposition that a sale to a minor is void. Nor can we agree with the Court below that such a principle is deducible from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1).

That was a case in which a plaintiff was suing for specific performance of a contract for the sale of immoveable property entered into by his guardian on his behalf while he was still a minor. It was held that it was not within the competence of the guardian to bind the minor or his estate by such a contract, that the minor was not bound and that accordingly there being no mutuality the minor was not entitled to have the contract specifically performed. There was no question of any transfer of property to the minor, for a contract for the sale of immoveable property does not operate to pass any interest in the property to which the contract relates and the judgment, in our opinion, cannot be treated as laying down by implication that a sale of immoveable property to a minor is void. It simply lays down that a guardian cannot bind the minor by any purely personal covenant.

We have before us in this case a transaction of sale evidenced by a duly registered deed executed in 1907, five years before this suit for pre-emption was brought. We have evidence to show that the negotiations for the purchase of the land were carried on through Ram Sahai, the uncle of the minor, who, if he was not the legal guardian of the minor at the time, may be treated as having acted on behalf of the minor's mother who was then his legal guardian. The full consideration was paid at the time of registration, the conveyance was made over and has been produced in Court on behalf of the purchaser, and he has been in possession ever since. In these circumstances we hold that there has been a complete transfer to the plaintiff of the property specified in the conveyance and by virtue of that ownership he is entitled to maintain the suit for pre-emption.

The price of the property is not in dispute; it was Rs. 17,970 and the plaintiff admitted that he was liable in addition to pay a sum of Rs. 180 on account of the stamp duty levied on the sale-deed. The vendees sought to charge the plaintiff with a further sum of Rs. 125 incurred for costs of registration, but the lower Court held that the plaintiff was not liable to pay this sum and the finding to this effect has not been challenged here in appeal.

The result is that we accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the plaintiff be given a decree for pre-emption in the usual form directing payment into Court, on or before a day three months from the date of the decree of this Court, of Rs. 18,150.

The plaintiff is entitled to costs both here and in the Court below against the defendants.

Lambardar, liability of—Gross negligence—Misconduct—Profits, suit for, by co-sharer.

A lambardar who deliberately neglects his duty as such in making no attempt to collect rents of a certain share and allows the tenants of that share to cultivate the holdings therein without paying any rent, is guilty of gross negligence and misconduct and is liable to pay the co-sharer his proportionate amount of profits.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances of this case are peculiar. A village belonged to four brothers, Sheo Gobind, Badri, Bans Gopal and Jagan Nath. Each brother owned a quarter share. The village was undivided according to the entries in the revenue papers, and Sheo Gobind was lambardar. Baij Nath obtained possession of Jagan Nath's share by virtue of a decree of the Civil Court. He has been unable to obtain any benefit from the share. Jagan Nath continued to retain possession of his sir, of which he had become ex-proprietary tenant, and of certain khulka land. He has according to representations made consistently refused to pay anything to Baij Nath as rent. Baij Nath endeavoured to dispossess him through the Revenue Courts. His attempt was defeated, as the Revenue Court held that according to the provisions of section 126, Act XXII of 1886, only Sheo Gobind, the lambardar, could eject Jagan Nath. Having failed to obtain satisfaction by ejectment and being further under the provisions of the same section debarred from suing Jagan Nath for the recovery of arrears of rent, Baij Nath has come into the Revenue Court to obtain his share of profits from the lam- bardar, that is, from Sheo Gobind, a brother of Jagan Nath. Sheo Gobind replied that he had never collected anything in connection with Jagan Nath's share, and that Jagan Nath made his own collections. The learned District Judge found that, as Sheo Gobind had collected nothing, Baij Nath could not obtain any profits from him. The appellant has thus been unable to obtain anything in respect of the share that is his, and owing to the decision of the Revenue Courts to the effect that everything must be done in this village through the lambardar, he is debarred from enforcing his own rights either against Jagan Nath or against the tenants. I cannot agree with the learned District Judge that in these circumstances he has also no claim against the lambardar. Upon the facts it is clear that Sheo Gobind has deliberately neglected his duty as lambardar. The Revenue Courts have held that the lambardar alone can eject, and from this it follows that he alone can collect rents. He admits that he made no attempt to collect rents of this share, and it is clear from the facts that he permits his brother, who has lost the share, to cultivate certain holdings without paying rent and to collect the rents of tenants. He has thus shown gross negligence and misconduct and is liable for the appellant's share in the profits, as decided in Shambhu Prasad v. Deputy Commissioner, Lucknow (1). The amount of profits has been calculated by the learned Assistant Collector, and I find that it has been correctly calculated.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and award the appellant a decree for Rs. 460 against Sheo Gobind, who will pay his own costs and those of the appellant in all Courts.

The cross-objections are dismissed. The objectors will pay their own costs and those of the appellant. Badri and Musamat Ram Pyari, widow of Bans Gopal, will pay their costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

The real or market-value of the matter in dispute is the test as to whether or not an appeal lies to the Privy Council. But where the plaintiff asserts in his plaint that such value is less than Rs. 10,000 and it is accepted by the defendants in their written statement and is not challenged even afterwards in appeal, they cannot subsequently be heard to say that in spite of their admission in the written statement, the real value is over Rs. 10,000 and claim that they have a right to have this matter investigated for the purpose of determining the question of their right to appeal to the Privy Council. JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to Appeal to His Majesty in Council made by Jagannath Bakhsh and Ram Ratan Lal who were defendants in a suit brought by Musammat Mendana and Sheopal Singh for recovery of possession of share in certain immoveable property.

The applicants in their petition have valued the subject-matter in dispute on appeal at about Rs. 14,000 and the application is opposed on the ground that this value is excessive. It is pleaded that the value is less than Rs. 10,000 and that the applicants have no right of appeal.

In this connection we have to refer in the first place to the pleadings.

In paragraph 12 (b) of the plaint it was alleged that the Government revenue payable in respect of the property in dispute was Rs. 436-13-4 and for purposes of Court-fee the valuation of the suit was five times that amount. The Court-fee on the plaint was paid in accordance with this calculation. It was further alleged that the market-value of the property in dispute was "about Rs. 7,300" and for purposes of jurisdiction the suit was valued at Rs. 7,300.

The defendants in their written statements did not challenge these valuations, but admitted them [See paragraph 12 (b) of the written statements filed by the defendants-applicants]. The suit of the plaintiffs was dismissed and they appealed to this Court valuing the appeal for the purpose of jurisdiction at the same figure, namely, Rs. 7,300.

An appeal so valued is cognizable by a single Judge of this Court.

On the 16th May 1913 a petition was put in, signed by Counsel for both parties, as being that the appeal should be referred for disposal to a Bench of two Judges. It was represented that the value of the property involved in the case was over Rs. 7,300 and that the question of the joint status of the family to which the parties belonged affected not only the property in dispute, but other property as well. It was further said that "in the interests of justice" it was expedient that the case should be decided by a Bench.

This petition was rejected. The Judge who heard it was of opinion, after consideration of the allegations in the plaint that there was no need to refer the appeal to a Bench for disposal. The case came up in due course and was heard by a single Judge who, by his judgment dated the 15th April 1914, allowed the appeal and decreed the plaintiffs' claim. And it is against this decree that the defendants now desire to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

It is to be observed here that nowhere in the petition of the 16th May 1913 was it alleged that value of the property was over Rs. 10,000. Had such a case been put forward and established by either of the parties, the appeal would necessarily have had to be laid before a Bench of two Judges.

The question now is whether in view of the facts above stated the defendants are entitled to come here and say that the true value of the property in dispute on appeal is over Rs. 10,000.

Mr. Jackson, who appears for the applicants, has referred us to Order XLV, rule 5, which empowers this Court in cases where there is a dispute regarding the valuation of the subject-matter to call upon the Court of first instance to determine what the actual value of the property is. And he has also referred us to various authorities which lay down the rule by which such value is to be determined. We need only refer to one of these, a Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court reported as Pichayee v. Sivagami (1). There it was held with regard to certain decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council that the real or market-value of the matter in dispute is the test as to whether or not an appeal lies to the Privy Council.

In Mohun Lall Sookul v. Debee Doss (2) their Lordships held, in a case in which the value was laid in the plaint as being under Rs. 10,000, that as the calculation was estimated with reference to the stamp-duty only, and that if satisfactory evidence was produced the real or market-value of the property exceeded Rs. 10,000, leave to appeal would be granted. A similar opinion was expressed in the case reported as Gourmonee Debia v. Khaja Abdool Gunny (3).

In Baboo Lekhraj Roy v. Kankya Singh (4) it was laid down that "the stamp-duties imposed for fiscal purposes are calculated on a certain rule fixed by law, but the right of appeal depends upon the value which is a matter of fact." But in the case now before us there can be no foundation for an argument that the valuation of the property was made upon an arbitrary basis prescribed for the purpose of determining the amount of stamp-duty leviable upon the plaint. The Court-fee was paid upon five times the Government revenue represented by a sum of Rs. 2,184-2-8 only. But it was asserted also that the real or market-value of the property was Rs. 7,300 and that valuation was accepted by the defendants and was not challenged even afterwards in appeal. We accept the proposition that the value of the property is a question of fact and that question has been settled by the defendants on their own admissions. They cannot, in our opinion, now be heard to say that in spite of their admissions, the property is worth over Rs. 10,000 and claim that they have a right to have this matter investigated for the purpose of determining the question of their right to appeal to the Privy Council.

The defendants are concluded by their own admissions and we hold, therefore, that the real market-value of the property is Rs. 7,300 only.

This being so there is no right of appeal to the Privy Council. We dismiss this application with costs.

Application rejected.

At that time the Court of the Subordinate Judge was the lowest Court in which a suit between Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000 could be instituted. Subsequently a Munsif was posted to Lucknow who had authority to try suits up to Rs. 2,000. The first application for execution was made in the Subordinate Judge's Court on the 3rd February 1906. The second was made in the same Court on the 10th August 1908. The third was made in the same Court on the 6th February 1911. The fourth was made in the Court of Munshi Fateh Bahadur, Munsif, on the 5th February 1914. Munshi Fateh Bahadur had taken over charge at Lucknow on the 21st January 1914 and his powers were then powers to try suits up to Rs. 1,000. He had evidently some reason to suppose that his powers were going to be raised, and as a matter of fact they were raised by an order dated the 21st February 1914 with retrospective effect to the 21st January 1914, and he was given the power to hear suits up to Rs. 2,000. Thus on the 5th February 1914, when the application for execution was presented to his Court he had the power to hear suits up to Rs. 2,000, although the notification authorising him to try suits of the higher value was not published till a few days later. It is clear that the delay in issuing the notification cannot affect his authority on the 5th of February 1914. But it is argued that in any circumstances this application for execution should have been made in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Reading sections 37 and 38 of Act V of 1908 together, I am of opinion that in such a case as this, where formerly jurisdiction in cases between Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000 was with the Subordinate Judge and subsequently a Munsif was appointed having jurisdiction over the same area with authority over cases from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000, the authority over such cases previously held by the Subordinate Judge passed automatically to the Munsif, and that the Munsif's Court must be considered, for the purposes of execution, as the Court which passed previous decrees in suits of that nature, although such decrees were, as a matter of fact, passed by the Subordinate Judge. Taking this view, the proceedings of the lower Courts appear to have been regular and their decisions to have been correct. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal. The appellant will pay his own costs and those of the respondent.

Although the order of a Revenue Court, passed in a suit to contest a notice of ejectment, to the effect that A is an under-proprietor, is not warranted by the pleadings in the case, yet it gives a sufficient cause of action to the landlord to go to the Civil Court and seek a declaration that A has no superior or inferior proprietary rights. [p. 207, col. 2.]

The plaintiff sued the defendants in the Civil Court for a declaration that the latter had no right, either superior or inferior, in the village, and the defendants admitted that they had no such right but pleaded that they were perpetual thekadars in the village. The Court found that the defendants held the land under certain qubuliats executed by their ancestors in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff and were estopped from setting up a perpetual tenancy:

Held, that in view of the defendants' own admission and the provisions of section 233, clause (i), of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, the Civil Court ought to have passed merely a decree for a declaration that the defendants had no superior or inferior proprietary rights, but was precluded from going into the question as to the nature of the tenancy. [p. 208, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the finding of the Civil Court on the question of estoppel was also erroneous. [p. 208, col. 1.]

It is open to a party, who claims a relief on more grounds than one, to give up any of the grounds at any time he likes before the case is decided. [p. 208, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 14th March 1914.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the superior of Mauza Munjar Sukul, which appertains to the taluqa of Birwa Mahnon. He sued the defendants for a declaration that the latter had no right, either superior or inferior, in the said village. The defendants admitted that they had no under-proprietary or superior proprietary rights in that village, but pleaded that they were perpetual thekadars of 13 annas 3 pies 11 kiran's share and had been in possession and occupation thereof from before the Regular Settlement. They further pleaded that they were declared perpetual thekadars by a judgment of the Revenue Court dated the 16th March 1893, and that the plaintiff had no cause of action for the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the defendants held the land under certain qubuliats executed by their ancestors in favour of the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiff and were estopped from setting up a perpetual tenancy and that the plaintiff had a good cause of action for the claim. He decreed the suit accordingly with costs.

The main question for consideration in this appeal is, whether the Court below was justified in going into the question of the nature of the tenancy and whether the plaintiff had no cause of action for the relief claimed. It appears that in the year 1320 Fasli the plaintiff issued a notice of ejectment against the defendants-appellants alleging that they were in possession of the village under an expired lease. The defendants contested the notice on the ground that they were perpetual tenants of the village by birt right and were also in possession as under-proprietors. They subsequently applied to the Revenue Court, withdrawing their claim as under-proprietors, and asking for permission to amend the plaint by removing the words "Aur ba tariq matahatdari ke qabiz hain" from it (Exhibit A 2). The Revenue Court disallowed the application as barred by time and proceeded on the strength of some orders passed in previous proceedings to hold that the defendants were in possession of the village as under-proprietors by dahyak right (Exhibit 7). It was open to the plaintiff-respondent to have challenged the propriety of that order, in the face of the defendants' own admission that they were not claiming under-proprietary rights, by an appeal to a higher tribunal, but he preferred to go to the Civil Court and sought a declaration that the defendants had no superior or inferior right in the village. The order of the Revenue Court gave the plaintiff a sufficient cause of action for such a suit. We are not concerned with the merits of that order, for which, judging from the application for amendment made by the defendants on the 27th May 1912 several days before that order was passed, the defendants were in no way responsible. On the defendants admitting in their written statement that they had no superior proprietary rights or under-proprietary rights, the proper course for the Subordinate Judge would have been to have passed a decree for a declaration that the defendants had no superior proprietary or under-proprietary rights, without going into the nature of the tenancy. Section 233, clause (i), of U. P. Act III of 1901 precluded the Civil Court from determining the class of tenancy to which the defendants belonged. The portion of the judgment dealing with that question will, therefore, be set aside. It is open to a party, who claims a relief on more grounds than one, to give up any of the grounds at any time he likes before the case is decided, and the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of estoppel is also erroneous. It appears that an attempt was made by the parties to settle the matters in difference between them and had so far succeeded in the Court below at the first hearing of the suit that the defendants agreed to the plaintiff getting a decree that they had no superior proprietary or under-proprietary rights in the village and the plaintiff consented to give up his costs, but the compromise failed because the plaintiff wanted the defendants to give up their claims to a perpetual tenancy in exchange for a tenancy at will (Vide the order of this Court dated the 12th December 1913). The plaintiff is, therefore, mainly responsible for the continuance of this litigation.

We dismiss the appeal, so far as it concerns the declaration granted to the plaintiff that the defendants are not entitled to any superior proprietary or under-proprietary rights in the village, but having regard to the fact that the defendants had, prior to the order passed by the Revenue Court, withdrawn their claim in regard to under-proprietary rights and had not set up any such right in this suit, we direct the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 23rd December 1914.

Syed Nabi Ullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. Muhammad Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are shortly as follows. The parties are related to each other and in the course of a suit which was brought by the respondent-decree-holder, Abdul Rahman, for partition of certain property a compromise was arrived at, which was embodied in a decree dated 25th February 1913. The present appeal has arisen out of proceedings taken in connection with the execution of this decree. The property which was to be divided consisted mainly of shares in revenue-paying lands, and under the terms of the compromise it was agreed, amongst other things, that the partition was to be effected either by the parties themselves, or if they could not agree, through a Vakil named Munshi Sajjad Husain, who was to be appointed as a Commissioner for the purpose. In paragraph 7 of this compromise it was stated that the amin (i. e., Munshi Sajjad Husain)

was to assess the land revenue which was to be payable in respect of the 4-annas share of the plaintiff, Abdul Rahman. This revenue, it was declared, would become payable either by the plaintiff himself or through the lambardar. There were other conditions in this compromise, some of which relate to the partition of house property. It appears that after this decree had been passed, proceedings were taken by way of execution and Munshi Sajjad Husain was appointed for the purpose of dividing the property. Certain objections were taken to the division effected by Munshi Sajjad, Husain but those were dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki on the ground that Sajjad Husain was acting as an arbitrator and that the parties were bound by his decision. In appeal to this Court, however, it was held that Sajjad Husain's position was not that of an arbitrator but merely that of a Commissioner appointed by the Court. The case was, therefore, sent back to the Subordinate Judge for disposal of the objections. Certain of these objections which were put forward by some of the judgment-debtors have been overruled by the Court below and hence this appeal. One of the objections (which were raised at a very late stage of proceedings) was to the effect that the Commissioner had no authority to carry out a partition of the revenue-paying lands. The Subordinate Judge got over this objection by holding apparently that the parties were bound by the compromise decree and that this compromise conferred a jurisdiction upon the Court to carry out the division of the revenue-paying lands by means of a Commissioner. It is argued here in appeal that if the law forbids the partition of such lands by a Civil Court, then no consent of parties can confer a jurisdiction which the law does not permit to be exercised. In this connection a reference has been made to section 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure and also to the provisions of Order XX, rule 18, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The point seems to me to be perfectly clear and, in my opinion, the decision of the Court below is wrong. Section 54 lays down that where the decree is for the partition of an undivided estate assessed to the payment of revenue to the Government, or for the separate possession of a share of such an estate, the separation of the share shall be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of his, deputed by him in this behalf, in accordance with the law, if any, for the time being in force, relating to the partition and the separate possession of shares of such estate. Similarly, provision is to be found in Order XX, rule 18, which lays down that when the Court passes a decree for the partition of property or for the separate possession of a share therein, in the case of land assessed to revenue, the decree is only to declare the rights of the several parties interested in the property, and ought to contain a direction for the partition or separation to be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate appointed by him in this behalf. I must hold, therefore, that it is not competent for the Civil Court in this case, acting through the amin, Munshi Sajjad Husain, to make a division of such of the property as consists of land assessed to the payment of Government revenue. It is, no doubt, an unfortunate thing that this matter was overlooked, and it is also true, as has been pointed out by the learned Counsel who appears on behalf of the decree-holder-respondent, that the objection was put at a very late stage. Be that as it may, the Court is bound to take cognizance of the plea which challenges the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to effect a partition of revenue-paying lands by an amin appointed by the Court or by the parties and the decree cannot be executed in contravention of the express provisions of section 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was sought to be argued that the division of these lands by the Commissioner might be supported on the ground that there was no attempt to distribute the Government revenue over the various shares, but as I have pointed out already, the compromise decree clearly contemplates the ascertainment and assessment of the shares of the revenue which was to be payable in respect of the 4-annas share awarded to Abdul Rahman. Apart from this, however, I think the language of section 54 is sufficiently clear and, in my opinion it prohibits altogether the division of a revenue-paying estate through any other agency than that of the Collector. I may also refer to the provisions of section 233 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. Under that enactment the partition of a revenue-paying property into separate shares is a matter which is exclusively reserved to the Revenue Courts. I must, therefore, allow this appeal. The decree, of course, can be executed so far as it relates to division of the house property. The question of any division of houses has not been argued before me. The only objection that has been pressed is with respect to division of revenue-paying land. So far as these latter lands are concerned, the only way the execution of the decree can be obtained is by application by any of the interested parties to the Revenue Courts for partition of the property in accordance with the shares declared by the decree. I, therefore, set aside the order of the Court below. The Subordinate Judge will refer the parties to the Revenue Court for partition of revenue paying lands. I make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Babus Provash Chander Mitter and Harihar Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ghosh (for Babu Asutosh Mookerji) and Babu Satyendra Nath Mookerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's case was that defendant No. 1 had executed an istemrari lease in his favour for consideration and registered it and put him in possession, but that he had lost the document and been subsequently dispossessed of a part of the lands sold: he, therefore, sued for declaration of title and recovery of possession of some lands and confirmation of possession in respect of others. The defendant's plea that she had executed the document under a misapprehension has been found against her. Her further plea was that the consideration had not been paid and she had taken back the document from the Registration Office and never parted with possession but that the document was lost in a flood. The lower Appellate Court has found that there was no payment of consideration, no delivery of possession and no delivery of the document. It is contended before us that the title of the plaintiff was complete by the registration of the document and he is entitled to a decree even if no consideration was paid and no delivery of possession effected, and that the delivery of the document was not at all material. It is not correct to say that the execution and the registration are always sufficient to pass title; see Mauladan v. Rughunandan Pershad Singh (1). It is always a matter of the intention of the parties. In this case the learned Subordinate Judge says: "Now even assuming that there was the delivery of the patta it amply appears from the certified copy of the patta itself and the oral evidence on the plaintiff's side that it was the intention of the parties that there should be immediate payment of the consideration money", and then finds that the evidence as to the payment of the consideration is unreliable. This being so, we think the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the transaction was not complete and no title passed. In this view of the case it is immaterial whether the landlord recognised the plaintiff and when he did so. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal, presentation of, to wrong Court—Bona fide mistake—Sufficient cause—Saving of limitation—Proper Court, delay in filing appeal to, when excusable—Minor appellant—Counsel not engaged, effect of.

A presentation of an appeal to a wrong Court under a bona fide mistake may be sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 212, col. 1.]

Dadabhai Jamsetji v. Maneksha Sorabji, 21 B. 552 and Brij Mohan Das v. Mannu Bibi, 19 A. 348; A. W. N. (1897) 86, referred to.

Thus, where proceedings were conducted on behalf of a minor appellant by his mother unaided by Counsel and she filed the appeal in a wrong Court but, the memorandum of appeal being returned for presentation to the proper Court, she presented the memorandum to the latter Court beyond the period of limitation:

Held, that the mistake in filing the appeal in the wrong Court was bona fide and that the delay in presenting the appeal to the proper Court was excusable. [p. 212, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been up before me already. By an order dated 10th December 1914 it was sent back to the Court of the Additional District Judge of Lucknow so that a proper judgment might be written. The short question for disposal is whether or not the appellant here showed good cause to the Additional Judge for the admission of an appeal which was undoubtedly presented beyond time. It appears that the case had its origin in the Revenue Court. The appellant, Sheo Pal Singh, as a minor acting under the guardianship of his mother, Musammât Janaka, filed an objection to an application for partition brought by a woman, Musammât Kripala. The objection undoubtedly raised a question of title, for it was asserted that Kripala had no share in the village by reason of her having become unchaste. The Assistant Collector held that the widow's unchastity was no reason for depriving her of her share. The objection of Sheo Pal Singh was, therefore, dismissed. An appeal was then taken to the Deputy Commissioner, where it was kept pending for some time for various reasons to which I need not refer. Eventually the Deputy Commissioner having had his attention drawn to the matter came to the conclusion that the appeal did not lie to him. He returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the Court of the Additional District Judge. The Additional District Judge has held that no good cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act has been shown which would justify the entertainment of this appeal beyond the period of limitation. Section 14 of the Limitation Act, of course, cannot help the case of the appellant for that section applies only to suits and applications. But it has been held in various rulings, of which I need refer only to Dadabhai Jamsetji v. Maneksha Sorabji (1), that a presentation of an appeal to a wrong Court under a bona fide mistake may be sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act. Brij Mohan Das v. Manu Bibi (2), which is a Full Bench ruling, is to the same effect. I have looked into the record of this case and I find that the proceedings have been conducted on behalf of this minor appellant by his mother and that no Counsel seems to have been engaged for the purpose of filing the appeal after the Assistant Collector had passed the order dismissing the objection. In these circumstances, I think, it may very well be held in the appellant's favour that the taking of the appeal to the Court of the Deputy Commissioner was a bona fide mistake and having regard to all the circumstances I think the delay in presenting the appeal in the Courts of the Additional Judge may very well be excused. I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and direct the Additional District Judge to entertain the appeal now and dispose of it in accordance with law. I pass no order with regard to costs in this Court.

The facts are simple. The manager of an infant used the money of the infant for the purpose of buying property on the infant's behalf at an execution sale. He admits that the infant was the real purchaser, but he maintains that he is able to deprive the infant of the property because of section 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If that were the true view, then that section of the Code would be the occasion of a grave fraud. It appears to me that the conduct of defendant No. 1, the manager, was and has been found to be fraudulent and section 317 does not furnish any answer to the plaintiff's claim.

We must, therefore, reverse the judgment of Mr. Justice Richardson and restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

Babu Basdeo Lal, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to a share of 1 biswa 5 biswansis of a village called Sarora Khurd. The facts are somewhat complicated and it is necessary to refer to a number of transactions which have led up to the present situation. One Muhammad Husain Khan was the owner of a hamlet called Badal Nagar and also of a 6-biswas share in Mauza Sarora Khurd. In the year 1885 he made a mortgage of Badal Nagar and of a 2-biswas 10-biswansis share in Sarora Khurd to one Nil Kanth. This mortgage was by way of a conditional sale. In the year 1895 Nil Kanth, the mortgagee, was given possession as owner over the whole of the hamlet of Badal Nagar. He was also put in possession as mortgagee of the 2-biswas 10-biswansis share of Sarora Khurd. In the mutation proceedings which took place in this connection, it seems to have been put on record that the area of the Badal Nagar hamlet was 289 bighas 9 biswas and on this footing Nil Kanth was given possession. As a matter of fact the total area of Badal Nagar was only 229 bighas. In consequence of this, in the year 1900 a suit was brought by Muhammad Husain Khan for the recovery of possession of 60 bighas odd. This suit was instituted against the two sons of Nil Kanth, namely, Prag Dat and Sundar Lal. A decree was passed in favour of Muhammad Husain Khan. He was given possession of 60 biswas odd and was also awarded costs and mesne profits. On the 27th of May 1901 Prag Dat and Sundar Lal mortgaged the hamlet of Badal Nagar to one Sahdeo. In their mortgage they described the area of Badal Nagar as being 289 bighas and 9 biswas. The mortgage-deed contained a covenant that if by any reason the mortgagee came to lose possession of any portion of this area, the mortgagors were to be liable to give him compensation out of their other property, moveable and immovable. The result of the suit brought by Muhammad Husain Khan was, therefore, to deprive this mortgagee, Sahdeo, of an area of 60 bighas. On the 9th of November 1906 one Kunj Behari took a mortgage of the half of Badal Nagar from Sundar Lal and in February 1907 he redeemed the mortgage which had been executed in favour of Sahdeo on the 27th of May 1901. Having done this Kunj Behari, on the 16th of February 1907, brought two suits. One of these suits was against Sunder Lal. This was a suit for possession of one half of Badal Nagar based upon the mortgage executed in his favour by Sunder Lal on the 9th of November 1906. The second suit was against Prag Dat. This was a suit for possession of the other half of Badal Nagar on the strength of the mortgage in favour of Sahdeo which the plaintiff, Kunj Behari, had redeemed. In this latter suit Kunj Behari alleged that 60 bighas out of Badal Nagar had been lost by reason of the decree obtained by Muhammad Husain. Prag Dat was liable to give him compensation to the extent of his share. He, therefore, asked for possession of 1 biswa and 5 biswansis of Sarora Khurd, that being the share which was in possession of Prag Dat as mortgagee. Both these suits of Kunj Behari were decreed on the 23rd of April 1907 and he was awarded possession of Badal Nagar and of the 1-biswa 5-biswansis share of Sarora Khurd in the month of June in that year. We have now to consider certain proceedings which were taken subsequent to the decree passed in favour of Muhammad Husain Khan. It has already been mentioned that Muhammad Husain obtained a decree not only for possession of 60 bighas of Badal Nagar but also for costs and mesne profits. He assigned his interest in this decree, so far as it concerned the costs and mesne profits, to one Fakir Muhammad and in the month of December 1906 Fakir Muhammad put in an application for execution of so much of the decree as related to costs. He asked for attachment of property belonging to the judgment-debtors including the share in this village of Sarora Khurd. These execution proceedings were dealt with in a file which is described as File No. 386 of 1906. I have not before me the full record of what took place in these execution proceedings, but at any rate there is upon the record a copy of the attachment order which was issued in this case. In March 1907 Fakir Muhammad made another application for execution of the decree which had been assigned to him. This time he was seeking execution so as to recover the amount of Rs. 500 odd which had been awarded as mesne profits. In this application, which is contained in a separate Execution File No. 76 of 1907, Fakir Muhammad asked for attachment of the property which had already been put under attachment in pursuance of his application of December 1906. It would seem that attachment had not been raised in the meantime. In pursuance of this latter application for execution of the decree for mesne profits the mortgagee rights of Prag Dat and Sundar Lal in Mauza Sarora Khurd were sold and purchased by one Ram Sahai for Rs. 2,405-4. The date of this purchase was the 25th of July 1907. Ram Sahai is the plaintiff in this case and his claim is that by reason of this purchase at auction he is entitled to possession of the property he purchased. On the contrary Kunj Behari, who was the third defendant in the case, pleads that he is entitled to retain possession as against Ram Sahai by virtue of the decree which he obtained against Prag Dat in the month of April 1907. He pleaded that Ram Sahai's purchase having been made pendente lite cannot, in any way, affect his (Kunj Behari's) right under the decree which he had obtained. Both the Courts below rejected this defence and decreed the plaintiff's claim. It is contended here that the decision of the Courts below was wrong, that it ought to have been held that the doctrine of lis pendens applied to the plaintiff's purchase and that he was bound by the decree which had been passed in favour of Kunj Behari. In my opinion both the Courts below are wrong. There can be no doubt whatever that the application for execution which led to the sale of this property purchased by the plaintiff, Ram Sahai, was made while the suit brought by Kunj Behari against Prag Dat was still pending. The Court of first instance (Subordinate Judge) refused to entertain this plea of lis pendens, on the ground that this second application for execution was merely a continuation of the execution application which had been presented by Fakir Muhammad in the month of December 1906. I am unable to accept this view of the matter. It seems to me quite clear that there were two distinct and separate applications for execution and that it cannot be said that the second application was in continuation of the first. The first application was for execution to satisfy the decree for costs. The second application which was dealt with entirely separately was an application for execution of the decree for mesne profits. There can be no dispute that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to execution sales, and it seems to me quite clear, therefore, that the execution proceedings which were taken during the pendency of Kunj Behari's suit and which resulted in a sale to the plaintiff, Ram Sahai, of the property in dispute some months after Kunj Behari had actually got his decree, were proceedings pendente lite which cannot be allowed in any way to affect the rights which Kunj Behari got under his decree of April 1907. Even if it be assumed that the second application was an application in continuation of the first application of December 1906, I do not see how that alters the situation. It may be that the property in suit was attached in consequence of that first application and that that attachment was still continuing at the date when the second application for execution was made, but the mere attachment of the property does not confer any title upon any one. It only prevents the property being alienated by the person to whom it belongs during the continuance of the execution proceedings. Fakir Muhammad acquired no title to this property by putting it under attachment and so it is difficult to understand how this auction-purchaser, Ram Sahai, can, in any way, set up a right against the right which Kunj Behari obtained under his decree. A number of authorities were cited to the Judge of the lower Appellate Court—authorities which he thought it was not necessary for him to consider inasmuch as he agreed with what he calls "the broad view" taken by the Court of first instance. In my opinion this "broad view" was entirely erroneous. I can see no reason whatever why Ram Sahai should be held to be in a position to insist upon possession as against the prior title of the appellant, Kunj Behari—a title which, according to the doctrine of lis pendens, could in no way be affected by the proceedings which ended in the purchase made by Ram Sahai.

I, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and direct that the suit of Ram Sahai be dismissed with costs. The defendant-appellant, Kunj Behari, is entitled to his costs against Ram Sahai in all three Courts.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed possession of an occupancy holding. The holding at one time belonged to one Parbhu. He died before the present Tenancy Act came into force. He was succeeded by his widow, who remained in possession for a number of years and died after the present Act came into force. The plaintiffs alleged themselves to be brothers and nephews of Parbhu, and two of them allege that they were joint in cultivation with Parbhu. The principal defendant is the daughter of Parbhu. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's suit and this decision was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court.

On behalf of the appellant the case of Musammal Sumari v. Jageshar (1) has been cited; also an unreported decision in Second Appeal No. 1148 of 1914. On the other side the case of Dulari v. Mul Chand (2) and also the case of Deoki Rai v. Parbati (3) are cited. It seems to us that the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment had to prove a title vested in him which gave him a right to the possession of the land in dispute. Section 22 of the Agra Tenancy Act provides for the devolution of the interest of an occupancy tenant, but it is perfectly clear from the language of the section that it only provides for such devolution where the tenant dies after the passing of the Act. If we regard Parbhu's widow as the full tenant of the occupancy holding, the plaintiffs have no right, because they are not the male lineal descendants of Parbhu's widow, nor did they share in the cultivation with her. If we consider that Parbhu was the last full tenant and that his widow only succeeded to a widow's estate, then it seems to us that section 22 of the Tenancy Act has not provided for the devolution in such a case. It is admitted that at the time of Parbhu's death the present plaintiffs could not have succeeded even if Parbhu left no widow. In the unreported case to which reference has been made a learned Judge of this Court says, "the Board of Revenue appears to have taken a decided view that in circumstances like the present a succession would be governed by the provisions of section 22 of Act II. of 1901". We doubt if this statement is quite accurate. So far as we are aware the practice of the Board of Revenue is to look upon the party who has succeeded to the occupancy holding as the "full tenant". We have pointed out that even if this be the true aspect, the plaintiffs would have no right to succeed. We think that in principle the present case is governed by the case of Deoki Rai v. Parbati (3). We think that the view taken by the Courts below was correct and ought to be affirmed. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family property—Evidence, nature of—Self-acquired property, when becomes joint property—Nucleus of joint family property, accretion to—Son's liability to pay father's debts—Debts contracted for immoral purposes—Proof, nature of.

In order to establish that a certain property constitutes joint Hindu family property, it must be shown that the property falls within one or other of the three classes, viz., (1) ancestral property, i. e., property inherited from a direct male ancestor, (2) property acquired by the members of a joint family by or with the assistance of joint funds or by their joint labour, and (3) property originally self-acquired but afterwards voluntarily thrown by the owner into the joint stock with the intention of abandoning all separate claims upon it. [p. 217, col. 2.]

Very strong evidence is required to prove that the property falls in class (3) mentioned above. Thus, it cannot be established that the property which had come to a father as self-acquired became the joint property of the family consisting of himself and his sons, merely from the fact that they lived together. [p. 218, col. 1.]

A self-acquired property obtained previously to an ancestral property cannot be said to have accreted to the nucleus of joint family property formed by that ancestral property, although it may be proved to have been voluntarily thrown into the joint stock. [p. 218, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 30th May 1914.

Mr. St. George Jackson, for the Appellants.

Babu Jiban Krishna Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the two plaintiffs-appellants against five defendants. The fifth defendant in the case was the father of the plaintiffs by name Babu Ram Singh. The first four defendants were persons who had obtained money-decrees against Babu Ram Singh and were seeking to execute those decrees by sale of certain villages which, they alleged, belonged to Babu Ram Singh. One of the plaintiffs in the suit is a minor. The claim put forward on behalf of the plaintiffs was that the property in suit consisting of three villages, Akhyapur, Alladadpur and Muhammadpur, constituted joint family property in which they had shares amounting to 2/3rds, while the remaining 1/3rd share was owned by the fifth defendant, their father. In paragraph 3 of the plaint it was alleged that the decree obtained against Babu Ram Singh by the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had been got in respect of debts which Babu Ram Singh had contracted with them for immoral purposes. The plaintiffs, therefore, pleaded that they were in no way liable for the discharge of these debts and that no property of theirs could be taken in execution of decree to satisfy them. The lower Court dismissed the suit. It found that the villages referred to in the plaint were not joint property of the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 5. With regard to the debts the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that although it had been shown that Babu Ram Singh was a man of licentious habits, the plaintiffs had failed to prove that any of the particular debts in respect of which decrees had been obtained by the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had been incurred for immoral purposes. The plaintiffs have appealed. We think their appeal must be dismissed on the finding of the Court below that the villages which the plaintiffs claimed to be the joint family property of themselves and their father are not joint family property. The position with respect to these villages is very clear. It appears that they belonged to the taluka of Akhyapur which was originally in possession of Bhikham Singh, whose name was entered in Lists 1 and 3 of the Lists prepared under section 8 of Act I of 1869. After Bhikham Singh's death this taluka descended to his son, Lal Bahadur Singh. Lal Bahadur Singh was the maternal grandfather of Babu Ram Singh and it is admitted that Babu Ram Singh came into possession of the villages now in suit under a Will executed by Lal Bahadur Singh. The Will was dated the 24th of December 1888 and it appears from the documentary evidence on the record that two at least of these villages now in suit were entered in the revenue registers in the name of Babu Ram Singh in October 1889. There can be no contention, therefore, that on the history of these villages they are in any way ancestral property in the hands of Babu Ram Singh. As is pointed out by Mr. Mayne in his work on Hindu Law, 7th Edition, paragraph 275, et seq., co-parcenary property falls into three classes. In the first class we have ancestral property, that is to say, property which a man inherits from a direct male ancestor. In such property some acquire an interest by birth. Next, the property may be joint property without having been ancestral. For example, the case in which members of a joint family acquire property by or with the assistance of joint funds or by their joint labour, and thirdly, there is the case of property which being originally self-acquired may become joint property by being voluntarily thrown by the owner into the joint stock with the intention of abandoning all separate claims upon it. In order to succeed in proving that the property in suit constituted joint family property it was for the plaintiffs to show that it falls within one or other of these three categories. Plainly it does not fall within the first category, for it is not property which had been inherited from a direct male ancestor. Neither can it be said to be joint property acquired with the assistance of joint funds or by the joint labour of members of a joint family. Obviously no question of the expenditure either of funds or of labour belonging to the joint family could arise in a case where a man acquires property as here under a Will. Lastly, it appears to us that there can be no ground for holding that this property, which was undoubtedly in its inception self-acquired, was ever thrown by the owner into the joint stock with the intention of abandoning separate claims upon it. Very strong evidence would be needed to make out a case of this kind and the most we can find on the record is that the fifth defendant and his two sons, the plaintiffs, have been living together. This, in the case of a father and his sons, is what would naturally be expected. But it cannot be inferred from the fact that, because Babu Ram Singh keeps his sons in the house and maintains them, it is established that the property which came to Babu Ram Singh as self-acquired property has thereby become the joint property of the family. An attempt was made in the Court below to show that the property here in suit should be treated as an accretion to joint property, which was already in the family. It seems that in the course of some litigation regarding the estate of his own father, Babu Ram Singh by means of a compromise got possession of a village called Pandapur and we have been asked to hold, therefore, that this village of Pandapur constitutes a nucleus of joint family property to which the villages now in suit have accreted. It has, however, been pointed out by the Subordinate Judge that Pandapur did not come into Babu Ram Singh's possession until after he had got possession of the villages now in dispute; and this disposes of the argument to the effect that the property now in question accreted round a nucleus of property consisting of the village of Pandapur. We find no evidence at all which would justify us in assuming that the villages regarding which this suit has been brought have ever been voluntarily thrown into the joint stock. Indeed as observed by the lower Court in its judgment, it would be difficult to say that there was any joint stock at all belonging to the plaintiff and the fifth defendant, into which this property could be thrown. We are satisfied that the property in suit is in no way joint property and that consequently the plaintiffs were not entitled to have any relief by way of declaration such as they sought. It is not necessary for us to discuss the other issue involved in the case at any length. But we agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that until definite evidence is forthcoming that a particular debt was incurred for immoral purposes the sons cannot claim to be exempted from their liability to discharge it. General allegations as to the immorality of their father would not entitle them to have relief of this kind.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 13th December 1912.

Babu Ishuri Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mirza Sami Ullah Beg, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to Manza Datai, which forms a part of Birwa Mahnon Estate. The plaintiff is the superior proprietor of an 8-annas share in the said village by purchase from Ardawan Singh and has acquired the remaining 8-annas share by purchase at auction in execution of a decree against Achal Ram during the pendency of this suit. The defendants-appellants claim to be the under-proprietors of the said village. The plaintiff sought to eject them through the Revenue Court, treating them as tenants-at-will, but was unsuccessful. The present suit was filed by him to obtain a declaration that the contesting defendants had no right to hold possession of the village as superior proprietors or under-proprietors. The learned Subordinate Judge found against the defendants and decreed the claim.

The main grounds urged in the appeal are that the defendants-appellants are entitled to under-proprietary rights in the village by virtue of a Settlement decree dated the 1st February 1872 and by reason of their prescriptive possession for more than 12 years, that the plaintiff has no cause of action for the suit and that he is in any case not entitled to a decree in regard to more than an 8 annas share owned by him on the date of the suit.

It appears from the judgment of the Extra Assistant Commissioner dated the 22nd December 1870 that Sheo Sahai Misra, the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants-appellants, sued Musammam Sarfaraz Kunwar, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff, for pukhtadari or sub-settlement of the village, basing his claim on a birt jangal tarashi, said to have been granted him in 1205 Fasli by Musammam Jura Kunwar, the then proprietor of the village (Exhibit 4). It was asserted that the claimant had been in continuous possession of the village from 1250 to 1263 Fasli and that the talukdar gave haq dahyak, when he held the land under kham tahsil. The existence of the alleged under-proprietary right was denied by the Court of Wards, which took charge of the Birwa Mahnon Estate on the death of Musammam Sarfaraz Kunwar. The Extra Assistant Commissioner found that the claimant had failed to establish the patta or grant on which he relied and had not succeeded in proving that any dahyak dues were realized by him. He accordingly dismissed the claim. On appeal the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division set aside that order and gave a decree in the following terms:—"There seems quite sufficient reason to believe that the patta for 1262-63 is genuine and taken in connection with other documentary evidence substantiates the appellants' claim to dahyak. Dahyak in Manza Pura Datai, Pargana Gonda, is decreed to appellant, order of the lower Court modified accordingly" (Exhibit 5). It is obvious from this order that what the Commissioner did was to modify the order of the Court of first instance in so far as to decree the claim for dahyak without disturbing the decree of the Court below, disallowing the sub-settlement. Sheo Sahai Misra appears to have thereafter continued in possession of the village under the lease of 1262-63, which the Commissioner had affirmed, and his successor, Khushi Ram Misra, subsequently renewed the tenancy by executing other leases in favour of the Court of Wards on the 15th December 1872 and the 23rd April 1878, agreeing to pay the rents secured by the said leases for the periods therein mentioned. The taluqa thereafter passed into the possession of Achal Ram, who in 1890 applied for the issue of a notice of ejectment against Jaddu Misra, Bhagwan Din Misra and other persons who had succeeded to the holding. Jaddu and Bhagwan Din contested the notice of ejectment on the ground that they were not tenants but birtdars, holding under a decree of the Settlement Court dated the 1st February 1872 and entitled to claim all zemindari rights, including mal and sayer. The Court of first instance upheld the notice, but on appeal the Board of Revenue cancelled it on the ground that the appellant held "a decree for daswant from the Settlement Court, having been in possession of the village before and at Settlement and ever since; and being prima facie possessed of rights superior to those of a tenant [as defined in section 4 (10) of the Rent Act] ought not to be ejected by notice under section 53 of the Act" (Exhibit A10).

CHANDAN SINGH v. BHABHUTI SINGH.

It is conceded on behalf of the defendants-appellants that their names were never recorded in respect of the village in question in the under-proprietary register, but they continued to pay the rent reserved to the talukdar after deducting the dahyak decreed to them by the Settlement Court. No decree for under-proprietary rights or sub-settlement was passed in their favour, and as held in Deputy Commissioner, Gonda v. Bhagwan (1) though rights to dahyak and daswant are in a sense under-proprietary rights, a right to a cash nankar or to dahyak or daswant does not necessarily connote a right to possession of land as under-proprietor or in any other capacity. In Parmeshar Dat v. Raja Mohammad Abul Hasan Khan (2), where certain persons brought a suit in the Settlement Court for sub-settlement on the assertion that they held the village in birt tenure and their claim for sub-settlement was disallowed and all that they were held entitled to was a decree confirming their existing possession, coupled with a condition that the talukdar was always to retain the power of fixing their rent and of renewing the lease, subject to an allowance of 10 per cent. on account of dahyak on the rent fixed by the talukdar, and there was a further condition that if they refused to accept the terms they were to be paid 10 per cent. out of the annual rental received by him, it was held that whether or not the right to receive dahyak was heritable and transferable, a right of possession, such as was conferred by the above decree, was in no sense so. The possession of the defendants-appellants and their predecessors-in-title continued in this case by virtue of the patta for 1262-63 Fasli and the leases of 1872 and 1878 above referred to, and no connection is shown to have existed between the right of dahyak under the decree of the Settlement Court and their right to possession of the village under the decree aforesaid. The patta of 1262-63 Fasli has not been filed, and in the face of the Settlement decree which merely grants a right to dahyak, we are not prepared to hold that the defendants-appellants are entitled to the possession of under-proprietary rights in the land of the said village as distinguished from the right to dahyak decreed to their ancestor.

The plaintiff has a good cause of action for the suit, inasmuch as zemindari or under-proprietary rights were set up in the ejectment proceedings which preceded the suit. In Amrit Lal v. Jang Bahadur Singh (3), where the plaintiffs in a suit to contest a notice of ejectment claimed to be under-proprietors of the land, and the notice was cancelled by the Revenue Court on the finding that they had greater rights than those of a mere tenant, it was held that the decision of the Revenue Court afforded a cause of action to the landlord to go to the Civil Court for a declaration that the plaintiffs did not possess any under-proprietary rights.

No question of adverse possession or of limitation arises in this case, because the possession of the defendants-appellants and their predecessors-in-title has continued under the leases already referred to. An assertion of an under-proprietary title in face of the Settlement decree and the leases cannot invest the defendants-appellants with a right inconsistent with that under which they entered into possession. We are not concerned with the determination of the class of tenancy to which the defendants-appellants belong, for its determination is exclusively within the cognizance of the Revenue Courts.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 12th November 1913.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A certain Meharban Singh died about the year 1888 leaving landed property to which his widow, Mithana Kuar, succeeded. She died on the 27th February 1909. Meharban Singh was the son of Laik Singh. Laik Singh had a brother, Pem Singh. On the death of Mithana Kuar, Bhabhuti Singh and Chandika Singh succeeded to the property as the sons of Pem Singh. The present suit has been brought by Chandan Singh with his transferees, and he claims to succeed to the property on the following allegations:—

He alleges that he is the legitimate son of Bahadur Singh; that Bahadur Singh's grandfather, Pirthi Singh, and Laik Singh's grandfather, Khushal Singh, were own brothers, being the sons of Partab Singh, and that he is the nearest reversioner to Meharban Singh, Bhabhuti Singh and Chandika Singh being on his allegation the illegitimate sons of Pem Singh.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that Chandan Singh has failed to establish that the line of Pahar Singh, another brother of Khushal Singh and Pirthi Singh, is extinct, that there were two descendants of Pahar Singh by name Gulab Singh and Champa Singh who, if they were alive, would be nearer reversioners to Meharban Singh than Chandan Singh could be, and that Chandan Singh has failed to show that Gulab Singh or Champa Singh is dead. Further he has found that Chandan Singh has failed to establish that he is the legitimate son of Bahadur Singh. On these two findings he dismissed the suit. Chandan Singh and his transferees have filed the present appeal.

The learned Counsel for the appellant admits that it was necessary for Chandan Singh to establish, in accordance with the principles laid down in Mathura Prasad Singh v. Bhulan Singh (1), that there is no intermediate heir in existence with a better claim to succeed to the property of Meharban Singh than he asserts. But he argues that on the evidence on the record it should be found that Gulab Singh and Champa Singh are dead, and that the claims of Khetal Singh and Bharat Singh having been dismissed in a previous suit, Chandan Singh has established that he is the nearest reversionary heir to Meharban Singh on the allegation that Bhabhuti Singh and Chandika Singh are illegitimate.

The evidence adduced by the appellant upon this point is both inadequate and untrustworthy and has been rightly discredited by the learned Subordinate Judge. That evidence consists in the main of the deposition of a certain Din Dyal Brahman, who appears to me, as he appeared to the learned Subordinate Judge, to be an absolutely unreliable witness. The learned Counsel for the appellant can only support his argument, apart from the evidence of this witness, by asking this Court to draw deductions from the fact that no claim has been brought on behalf of Gulab Singh or Champa Singh to this property, to the effect that both these men must be dead. No legal deduction or presumption arises upon any of the facts brought out in evidence on which it could be possibly found that either of these men is dead. Therefore, upon this point alone the appeal must fail. But in addition, the appeal fails upon another point. Chandan Singh has not been able to establish that he is the legitimate son of Bahadur Singh. The other side denied that he was the son of Bahadur Singh, either legitimate or illegitimate, and the burden of proof was distinctly upon him to establish his legitimacy. The learned Counsel for the appellant has drawn my attention to a decision of this

(1) 14 Ind. Cas. 339; 15 O. C. 364.

CHANDAN SINGH v. BHABHUTI SINGH.

Court, Aparbal Singh v. Narpal Singh (2), and asks me to form, on the principles enunciated in that decision, the conclusion that in this particular case it was not for Chandan Singh to prove his legitimacy but for the other side to prove his illegitimacy. The facts in that case were not similar to the facts in the present case. There it was laid down that in a case in which certain persons sued for the redemption of a mortgage on the ground that they were the sons of one of the mortgagors and the other side did not contest their legitimacy directly in the written statement, but only asserted that they were not the representatives of the mortgagor, and in which the evidence showed that they had been recognized as the legitimate sons of the mortgagor and had succeeded to his property as his legitimate sons, the burden of proof was on the mortgagees to establish in an unequivocal manner that they were not the legitimate sons. But here the case is very different. The defendants deny all knowledge of Chandan Singh. They say that they do not know who he is, or who is his father, and they put him to the proof, as they had every right to do, to establish his claim, one necessary element for the establishment of the claim being that he is the legitimate son of Bahadur Singh. In such a case as this in which a man comes forward to claim property, he has usually in absence of acquiescence to establish his descent and his legitimacy, and, therefore, the burden of proof was rightly placed upon Chandan Singh. He called several witnesses to establish his legitimacy.

The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed the evidence that he has produced at considerable length, and it is not necessary for me to do more than indicate generally the conclusion at which I have arrived as to the value of this evidence.

The first witness whom he called was a certain Pohkar. The learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out strong defects in the evidence of Pohkar and those defects are apparent. I consider that he was justified in discrediting the evidence of Pohkar absolutely. The next witness is Din Dayal who, as I have already found, gave unreliable evidence as to the deaths of Gulab

Singh and Champa Singh. His evidence with regard to the legitimacy of Chandan Singh is equally unreliable. The next witness was Rukmin, the mother of Chandan Singh. She made many slips in her evidence which would be hardly possible if she were telling a true story. For example, she stated that Khushal Singh, Bahadur Singh's father, was alive at the time of her marriage. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that it is satisfactorily established that Khushal Singh had died before the date of the alleged marriage. It is not only for this reason that I find her evidence unreliable. It is sufficient to say that I do find it absolutely unreliable. This is all the direct evidence as to the marriage between Bahadur Singh and Rukmin.

The remaining evidence led to prove the legitimacy of Chandan Singh is evidence led to prove the treatment of his mother and himself as the wife and legitimate son of Bahadur Singh. The first witness on this point was a certain Kuar Singh who showed himself ready to swear to practically anything that he thought would help Chandan Singh's case and whose evidence was rightly rejected as of no value. The next witness on the point was a certain Bhure Singh. His evidence is palpably false as he swore to what had happened at Chandan Singh's marriage, and it is admitted that Chandan Singh has never been married. The next witness was Becha Singh, who flatly contradicted what he stated in his evidence during the mutation proceedings, and who is as false a witness as Bhure Singh. The evidence of the remaining witnesses Menda Singh and Kundan Lal, carries no weight as to Chandan Singh's legitimacy. On this evidence it is impossible to find that Chandan Singh has established that he is the legitimate son of Bahadur Singh, and thus his case must fail. As Chandan Singh's case has failed on the facts, it is not necessary for me to go into the question whether the learned Subordinate Judge was or was not right in finding that the defendants had been unable to prove that they were the legitimate sons of Pem Singh. Chandan Singh has failed to establish his title as the legitimate son of Bahadur Singh.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 70—Contract, alleged, not proved—Compensation, reasonable, for work done—Court, right of, to grant relief.

Where the plaintiff alleged a contract under which the defendant had employed him to negotiate a loan on a promise to pay him a certain commission, and it was found that he had really done the work for the defendant but he failed to prove the alleged contract:

Held, that having regard to the provisions of section 70 of the Contract Act, the plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to a reasonable compensation for the work done by him. [p. 224, col. 1.]

Application against the order of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 7th September 1914, modifying that of the Munsif, Gonda, dated the 4th July 1914.

Mirza Sami Ullah Beg, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. P. Kain, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—These are cross-applications in revision. They are directed against an order passed by the District Judge of Gonda in an appeal which was preferred to him by one Jwala Prasad. The facts are as follows. Jwala Prasad was the defendant in the Court of first instance. The suit against him was brought by Bachcha Ram who claimed to recover Rs. 300 on the business on an alleged contract. The story was that Jwala Prasad, being in need of money and having occasion to raise a loan of Rs. 15,000, employed the plaintiff, Bachcha Ram, to negotiate the loan on a promise to pay him 2 per cent. commission. The plaintiff's case was that in pursuance of this contract he managed to raise the loan of Rs. 15,000 on mortgage from one Prag at the rate of 6 per cent.

per annum. The mortgage was executed, the money was advanced, and the allegation was that the defendant refused to pay the plaintiff his commission. The defence was that there was no such agreement for commission, and it was stated by the defendant that he had negotiated the loan himself and that the plaintiff had done nothing for him. The Munsif who tried the case found that the contract alleged by the plaintiff was proved and he, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 300. On appeal to the District Judge it was held that the plaintiff had not established by satisfactory evidence that there was any contract between himself and the defendant for the payment of the commission at the rate of 2 per cent., but the learned Judge found, and there is plenty of evidence on the record to support the finding, that the plaintiff had done work for the defendant in connection with the raising of this loan and, in short, that had it not been for the exertions of the plaintiff, the defendant would not have been able to procure the loan on such favourable terms. Consequently, although the learned Judge was unable to find that a contract according to the terms alleged by the plaintiff was proved, he was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to a reasonable compensation for work done. I understand this judgment of the learned Judge to be based upon the principle which is recognised in section 70 of the Contract Act. Both parties come here in revision. The defendant's case is that as the Judge found that the plaintiff had failed to establish the contract set up by him, he ought to have dismissed the claim altogether. On the other hand the plaintiff by way of reply states that the Judge ought to have found that the contract was established. This contention, however, is not open to the plaintiff in these proceedings and in fact it was admitted that the plaintiff would not have applied for revision had not the defendant filed an application for revision before him. I have listened to the argument of Counsel and have come to the conclusion that there is no ground upon which I should be justified in interfering in revision. I do not think it is open to the defendant's Counsel to argue that the Judge was bound to dismiss the suit in toto because the plaintiff had failed to prove the terms of the agreement relating to the compensation for work done. It seems to me that on the materials before him the Judge was entitled to grant the plaintiff any relief to which he considered he had a right and I can see no reason in law why the Judge should not have taken action under section 70 of the Contract Act and given to plaintiff the decree he did. I am clearly of opinion that there is no case of the learned Judge having acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The result is that I dismiss both these applications for revision with costs.

The question of the personal liability of a mortgagor depends upon the construction of the instrument in each case, the test being the remedy provided for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. [p. 225, col. 1.]

Where the remedy provided for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt is transfer of the mortgaged property by way of sale to the mortgagee, there is no personal liability on the part of the mortgagor to pay. Nor can such liability be inferred from a provision in the mortgage-deed that in case of there being any dispute as to the title to the mortgaged property or in case of any defect in title coming to light the mortgagor would be personally liable, so long as no such contingency has arisen. Nor does a mere promise to pay the money within a certain fixed period import the liability, for such a covenant is entered into in every form of mortgage. [p. 224 col. 2; p. 225, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 14th November 1914, exercising Small Cause Court powers.

Babu Jiban Krishna Banerji, for the Applicant.

Babu Basdeo Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act for revision of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad sitting in the exercise of his Small Cause Court jurisdiction. The facts appear to be as follows. On the 21st July 1911 the defendant, who is the applicant here, executed a mortgage by way of conditional sale in favour of the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 300. The document was not registered and consequently the plaintiff brought this suit in the Small Cause Court for the recovery of principal and interest amounting in all to Rs. 416 and odd. The principal issue for decision in the case was whether the defendant was personally liable. The defence which was set up was based upon a ruling of this Court reported as Musammatt Kuraishi Begam v. Mumtaz Mirza (1). That was a case in which a suit similar to the present was brought. There was in that case also a mortgage by conditional sale. The deed had not been registered and a suit was brought to enforce the personal contract. It was held, with reference to the language of that deed that the defendant was not personally liable and that the suit could not succeed. The Judge of the Court below has attempted to distinguish the facts of the case now before me and the case reported as Musammatt Kuraishi Begam v. Mumtaz Mirza (1), and on his construction of the mortgage-deed there was personal obligation upon the mortgagor to re-pay the mortgage-debt. I am wholly unable to agree with the interpretation which the Court below has put upon the instrument and I am of opinion that he has altogether failed to distinguish the present case from the one to which a reference has already been made. The learned Subordinate Judge laid hold of a certain clause in the mortgage-deed, which provided that in case of there being any dispute as to the title to the mortgaged property or in case any defect in title should come to light the mortgagor was to be personally responsible. But it is quite clear that in the present instance no such contingency has arisen so as to render the mortgagor personally liable. In short, the case for the mortgagee was that the money had not been re-paid and that he was, therefore, entitled to recover it personally from the mortgagor. The view of the case taken by the Judge of the Court below is, in my opinion, wrong. As is explained in the reported case above-mentioned, a mere promise to pay the money within a certain fixed period does not import a personal liability, for such a covenant is entered into in every form of mortgage. The test is, what is the remedy provided for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt in each case. A reference was made in this case to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Kalka Singh v. Paras Ram (2). There it was held that the question of the personal liability of the mortgagor must depend upon the construction of the instrument in each case. In the present case, the remedy provided for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt was the transfer by way of sale to the mortgagee. I am unable to hold that there was any personal liability on the part of the mortgagor to pay. I allow this application, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the plaintiff's claim be dismissed with costs. The plaintiff opposite party will pay the applicant's costs of revision in this Court.

Application accepted.

Trust—Gift for charitable purpose—Construction of document—Cypres doctrine of, when applicable.

If a gift is for a charitable purpose the question is, is the testator's intention to promote some specific and well-defined purpose and that only, or is there a general charitable intention, which the testator wishes to carry out in a particular way, in which latter case the Court will give effect to his wishes cypres. [p. 226, col. 2; p. 229, col. 1.]

A deed creating a charity and providing for its conduct by competent members of the family is void for uncertainty as it is difficult to ascertain who are the competent members. [p. 227, col. 1.]

Webb's case, 1 Roll. Ab. 609 (D) 1.

An Indian Christian executed two deeds of trust under the first of which he gave certain property to a chattaram which he recited as having been built by himself. The chattaram was in fact never built, and the property was, with the acquiescence of the settlor, applied to a purpose quite different to that of the trust. In a suit by the plaintiffs claiming as trustees under the deed for recovery of the property, the subject of the trust:

Held, that the purpose of the trust failed as the chattaram did not come into existence, and as no general charitable intention could be gathered from the deeds, the doctrine of cypres did not apply. [p. 227, col. 1; p. 229, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is a suit by the plaintiffs claiming as trustees under two deeds of trust, Exhibits A and B, executed in the years 1851 and 1853 by the deceased Selvanayagam Pillai, a Roman Catholic Christian, to recover from the defendants possession of the suit properties, which are alleged to be the subject of the trust. The Subordinate Judge has found that it was not the intention of Selvanayagam to create any trust by these instruments, and that if it was otherwise, the trust was merely for the maintenance of the institution therein referred to, a chattram on the Tanjore Road in Trichinopoly alleged to have been built by the settlor, that this purpose failed as the institution never came into existence and that, as no general charitable intention can be gathered from the deeds, there is no occasion for applying the cypres doctrine and the gifts must be held to have failed and a resulting trust to have arisen for the settlor and his heir.

According to the translation of Exhibit A given by the Subordinate Judge, the property was given as sarvamanyam (or endowment) "to the chattram which I have built for charity in the new road to Tanjore opened by the Engineer, Mr. Lapport, east of Varaganeri village and near the Vayakōndan river, for the expenses of the upkeep and maintenance of the said chattram and for the daily feeding of poor paradesis in the said chattram." Paradesi means stranger and is frequently applied to the Hindu religious mendicants who wander about the country and to pilgrims. Now it is quite clear that the object of the charity which was not varied by Exhibit B, was the maintenance of the chattram at that particular spot and the feedings of paradesis there. As already stated, the settlor had not constructed any such chattram at the date of the deed, Exhibit A, and did not do so subsequently and in fact there never was any such chattram. It may be that at the time he intended to construct one, and that he afterwards abandoned the idea because, as suggested somewhere in the evidence, the local Brahmins successfully opposed the grant of a site for the building, or as alleged in Exhibit I, because his female grandchild subsequently gave birth to a son. However this may be, it is quite clear the chattram never came into existence and that the gift under Exhibits A and B cannot be applied for the specific charitable purpose therein stated. We are asked, however, to hold that Exhibits A and B indicate a general charitable intention on the part of the settlor and the Court is invited to give effect to it cypres. Assuming that the decisions of the English Courts on this subject are applicable here as part of the rules of justice, equity and good conscience, I think that, as observed by Kennedy, L. J., in In re University of London Medical Sciences Institute Fund, Fowler v. Attorney-General (13), the question is correctly stated in Theobald on Wills, 7th Edition, at page 373: "If the gift is for a charitable purpose, the question is, is the testator's intention to promote some specific and well-defined purpose and that only, or is there a general charitable intention, which the testator wishes to carry out in a particular way," in which latter case, the Court will give effect to his wishes cypres. On the facts I do not think that any such general intention is sufficiently made out. Chattrams or feeding places for poor paradesis, mostly religious mendicants, were to be found on all the main roads in pre-railway days and it was probably thought that one was required at the place indicated on the new road from Trichinopoly to Tanjore opened by the Engineer Mr. Lapport as mentioned in Exhibit A. At the same time this form of charity is not likely to have appealed very strongly to an Indian Christian, and when the settlor came forward to supply the want, he was probably actuated by a desire to show his munificence and public spirit and to enhance his consideration with his fellow-citizens of all classes who joined in attesting these deeds. Subsequently in circumstances which cannot now be precisely ascertained, he abandoned the intention of erecting the chattram for the maintenance of which provision was made in these deeds, and shortly before his death and most probably with his knowledge and at his suggestion, part of the endowment was diverted to the support of a convent of nuns of his own religion. In the circumstances, I do not think we should be warranted in finding that he had any general charitable intention of feeding religious mendicants elsewhere than at the institution to be founded by him which never came into existence. A great many English decisions have been cited, but in none of them did the facts resemble those of the present case and I do not think it necessary to refer to them. They show, however, that the general charitable intention must be clearly made out and this, I think, has not been done.

There is one point taken for the respondents which it is desirable to notice. It is said the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim to succeed to the trusteeship under Exhibit B, as the settlor had no power to alter the succession to the office of trustee provided for in Exhibit A, which did not reserve any power of revocation. Exhibit A provided that after the settlor's decease those members of his family who were competent to manage the affairs of the said chattram should manage it. It seems to me that this was bad for uncertainty and did not preclude the founder from subsequently exercising his right in Exhibit B to provide for the succession to the trust. In Jarman on Wills, Volume I, Chapter, XIV, III, page 470, there is a reference to Webb's case (20) where it was held that if a man devise to twenty of the poorest of his kindred, this is void for uncertainty who may be adjudged the poorest. I think the provision in Exhibit A is void for the same reason, and that the Court cannot be required to undertake an investigation as to the competency of the various members of the family to manage the endowment. However, the appeal fails on the other grounds and must be dismissed with costs.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs as descendants of one Gnanamuthu Pillai, otherwise known as Appavu Pillai, to have themselves declared the trustees of certain property which originally belonged to a Native Christian convert called Selvanayagam Pillai, and to be put in possession of it. Their title, if any, rests on two documents filed as Exhibits A and B in the suit. By the first, which is described as a deed of charity, dated 3rd April 1851, Selvanayagam Pillai purported to devote the suit lands as "manyam (i.e., endowment) to the dharma chattram (choultry or rest house for charitable purposes) constructed in my name by me. ...For the maintenance of the charity of the chattram constructed for the purposes of charity by me in the new road to Tanjore and for the daily feeding of poor paradesis (mendicants) in the said cha'tram." The document goes on to provide that the settlor shall manage the charity during his life-time, and that after his death "those members of my family who are competent to manage the affairs of the said dharma chattram shall manage the said charity." Selvanayagam Pillai procured the signature of upwards of 50 persons to this document, among them Brahmins, Muhammadans and Native Christians. Three years later he executed the second document, Exhibit B, described as a karar or agreement, dated the 7th February 1854, and this document was also executed by his daughter, Vedanayagam Ammal. It recites the former donation to the dharma chattram and allocates a further Rs. 10,000 worth of Government securities to the fund. It proceeds to vary the provisions of the former deed with regard to the management of the charity, which is now vested in the settlor and his daughter for their lives, and after the decease of the survivor of them is to pass to Gnanamuthu Pillai and his sons.

The facts proved or admitted are set out in the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge. We are not seriously pressed to disturb them nor do I see any reason for doing so. They disclose a somewhat remarkable history. Selvanayagam Pillai had not in fact built any chattram at the time he executed Exhibit A, nor did he afterwards at any time build one or provide any fund for doing so. Selvanayagam Pillai died some time in 1858. On the 4th June 1858, by a deed of that date (Exhibit C), Vedanayagam Ammal conveyed the Government securities dealt with by the agreement of 7th February 1854 (Exhibit B) to the Catholic Bishop of Madura as a charitable gift to a nunnery in his diocese. There is no direct evidence to show whether Selvanayagam Pillai was alive or not at the date of the last alienation; but, as will be seen hereafter, there is good reason for thinking that he was and that he concurred in it. The next piece of evidence is a document executed by Vedanayagam Ammal on the 31st July 1884 (Exhibit I); this document could only in the first instance be admissible as against the defendants but both parties crave it in aid and agree that its recitals, in so far as they are statements of fact, are reliable. From them we can complete the history. Shortly before the death of Selvanayagam Pillai, his grand-daughter, Thangathammal, the daughter of Vedanayagam Ammal, gave birth to a male child, there being up to that time no male in the family in the direct line of descent. Selvanayagam Pillai thereupon finally abandoned his design of building a chattram, gave the Government securities to the nunnery, and in the words of his daughter in Exhibit I "reserved the land as usual for the maintenance of the family." This must mean that he resolved to do so, not that he executed any document purporting to have that effect. The first document purporting to affect the lands was Exhibit I itself, executed by Vedanayagam Ammal in 1884, whereby she conveyed them to her grandson and another male relative, from whom the present defendants derive their title. Finally, an attempt was made at the trial to prove that both Selvanayagam Pillai and Vedanayagam Ammal fed poor pariales at their house, despite the non-existence of the chattram. The learned trial Judge heard the evidence as to this, and characterised it as contradictory and unworthy of belief and I accept his finding of fact that nothing of the kind ever took place. Vedanayagam Ammal remained in possession of the land and personal enjoyment of its proceeds till her death in December 1910. In April 1912 the plaintiffs instituted the present suit. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed their suit on a variety of grounds, and they have appealed to this Court against that dismissal.

The substantial question for our determination is whether the documents of April 1851 and February 1854 constituted a good and valid charitable gift; or whether the gift failed with a resulting trust for the benefit of the settlor, by reason either that it was intended for a particular purpose which could not be carried out, or that it never was and never was intended to be a valid charitable gift ab initio. Of one matter, I may dispose at once. It was said on behalf of the respondents that even if there were a good charitable gift, it was incompetent to the present plaintiffs to sue, as they were not in any event the persons entitled to be trustees, Selvanayagam Pillai having settled the devolution of the trusteeship by the deed of 1851, and having thereby rendered it incompetent to himself to vary the devolution by the later document of 1854 upon which the plaintiffs' claim to be trustees rests. The settlor's first appointment was of "those members of my family who are competent to manage the affairs of the said dharma chattram." I think that such an appointment, in the absence of a designated tribunal to determine what persons were competent, was too vague to be enforceable, and that the settlor's hands were free to make a subsequent valid appointment. This objection, therefore, fails.

On the main question, in the course of two learned and exhaustive arguments, most, if not all, of the English cases on the subject were brought to our notice. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar indeed entered upon that field under protest and with this large reservation that we ought to give the go-by to all the English cases and consider ourselves as unfettered by them. He urged that the English Courts adopted a principle of construction in regard to charitable trusts which was at variance with the principles applied in all other matters; that this was due to the historical accident of the past connexion of charitable trusts with the Anglican Church and the civil law which that Church favoured; and that Indian Courts should determine such matters in the light of "justice, equity and good conscience." Accepting this to be so, I nevertheless think that a construction beneficent to a bona fide charitable gift is in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience; and I am ready to follow the English cases, whether they be binding on me or not, as guides to those desirable goals. The principle of the English decisions is clear, though its application may be difficult, and it is concisely stated by Kindersley, V. C., in Clark v. Taylor (16): "There is a distinction well-settled by the authorities. There is one class of cases in which there is a gift to charity generally, indicative of a general charitable purpose, and pointing out the mode of carrying it into effect; if that mode fails, the Court says the general purpose of charity shall be carried out. There is another class in which the testator shows an intention not of general charity, but to give to some particular institution; and then if it fails, because there is no such institution, the gift does not go to charity generally." This is the principle which we have to apply, and I do not think any useful purpose would be served by a detailed examination of reported cases in which it has been applied to different words in other documents. Such a proceeding seldom offers much enlightenment, and is particularly unlikely to do so in the present case, which has one feature in it which, so far as I know, is unique and particular to itself. In this case the settlor purported to endow an institution which not only did not exist, but which he knew not to exist and which nevertheless he recited to exist and to have been founded by himself. That circumstance is so remarkable that, in my opinion, it must dominate any construction of the deed. It is said for the appellants that that consideration is conclusive as ascribing to the settlor a general charitable intention; he settled property to feed certain persons in a chattram, the chattram to his knowledge did not exist, therefore, his paramount intention must have been to feed the designated class of persons. That at first sight is a cogent argument, but I do not think it is sound. In the first place, the document itself continuously harps on the chattram: the lands are given "as manyam to the chattram;" the chattram is the one "constructed in my name"; the gift is "for the maintenance of the charity of the chattram"; the purpose is that of feeding "any mendicant in the chattram;" the lands "have been given for the expenses of the said chattram;" the affairs to be managed by the trustees are "the affairs of the said dharma chattram." This language all seems to suggest that what Selvanayagam Pillai had in mind was a chattram built in a particular spot, bearing his name, and standing as an outward and visible monument of his beneficence to the community. His position as a well-to-do Hindu Christian convert, and his anxiety to get men of all creeds and classes to witness his deed support the same conclusion. Moreover, if his intention be supposed to have been generally charitable, who were to be the objects of his charity? If and when the chattram came into being, they became ascertainable at once—such mendicants as choose to avail themselves of its shelter. The chattram when built would have a definite limit of accommodation and a definite site. But in its absence what mendicants are to be fed? There is nothing to limit the gift to mendicants from all over India, to mendicants in the district or to mendicants in the village. It may be assumed that he intended to build a chattram at the date of the deed of gift, and because of that intention he spoke of it as a thing already done. But I think that there is equally little doubt that his gift was what he described it to be, an endowment of that particular contemplated chattram; and he made it solely with a view to its employment in the chattram; and that in the absence of the chattram there was no general charitable purpose actuating him, inasmuch as without its existence the objects of the charity are incapable of limitation or ascertainment. In fact he revoked his intention of building the chattram; and with that revocation, I think that the deed of the gift which was conditional on the erection of the chattram falls to the ground. I think, therefore, that assuming Selvanayagam Pillai to have intended a charitable gift, it became incapable of attainment, and that the plaintiffs' appeal fails. This is sufficient to dispose of the case on the view most favourable to the plaintiffs; but it is impossible not to feel grave doubts as to whether any bona fide charitable gift was intended at all. Sham gifts to charities are often made in India to keep property out of the reach of creditors, actual or potential. It is difficult to see why a Native Christian should found a charity for the benefit of a class of persons of whom the great majority if not the whole would be Hindu or Muhammadan devotees; indeed some would translate 'paradesi' as meaning 'religious mendicant.' The false recital of the existence of a chattram is also a circumstance of grave suspicion. Nor are the doubts raised at the origin of the alleged charity in any way resolved by the subsequent conduct of the settlor. He not only took no steps whatever to carry out his charitable intention, but within a few years of his gift was dealing with the property as if no charitable gift were in existence. However, though the whole translation is full of suspicion, it is unnecessary to decide against its genuineness, and my construction is adverse to the plaintiffs even on the assumption that it was genuine.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—In execution of a decree a certain house was attached and brought to sale. On the 11th July 1914 the house was knocked down to a certain Wilayat Husain for Rs. 110. Under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 84, it was incumbent upon Wilayat Husain to pay a deposit of Rs. 27-8 immediately after he was declared to be the purchaser. He did not pay that deposit and the officer conducting the sale apparently endeavoured to extend the time in which the deposit could be paid, for I find that he issued a notice to Wilayat Husain directing him to deposit the money by the 17th July 1914. The officer conducting the sale had no authority to extend the time. The words of the rule are clear. The amount of the deposit has to be paid immediately; the rule does not direct that it is to be paid within a time to be fixed by the officer conducting the sale. The officer again extended the time to the 18th July 1914. Wilayat Husain, after having received notice that it was necessary for him to deposit the amount of Rs. 27-8 by the 18th July 1914 at latest, made no appearance and made no deposit, and on that day the Court passed an order that the property should be re-sold after issuing a fresh sale-proclamation and that Wilayat Husain would be held responsible for the deficiency in price, if any.

ALI MUHAMMAD v. ALIA KHANUM.

On the 23rd July 1914 Wilayat Husain filed an application stating that he had not been bidding on his own behalf but on behalf of the decree-holder, and that he was not responsible for the payment of anything. The Court refused to consider his application and a fresh sale-proclamation was issued directing a re-sale on the 25th July 1914. On the 23rd July Wilayat Husain put in another application stating that he had transferred his rights as auction-purchaser to Ali Muhammad (who was not the decree-holder) and that Ali Muhammad would deposit the purchase-money, and asked that Ali Muhammad's tender should be accepted and that a sale-certificate should be issued to Ali Muhammad. Ali Muhammad put in a tender and was ordered to deposit the money. On the 28th July 1914 Ali Muhammad presented another tender. On the 1st August 1914 the Court issued an order that notice was to issue to the judgment-debtor for the 11th August 1914 to show cause why the sale in favour of Ali Muhammad should not be confirmed. Service of this notice on the judgment-debtor (who is a pardanashin lady) was made by affixing the notice on her house. She did not appear and made no objection, and on the 11th August 1914 the sale was confirmed in favour of Ali Muhammad. The sale was thus confirmed in favour of a person who had never made a bid at all and who was not even the alleged principal of the last bidder. The last bidder, Wilayat Husain, had not complied with the imperative direction of Order XXI, rule 84, in the matter of depositing 25 per cent. of the purchase-money. He subsequently came forward and alleged that he had been bidding on behalf of the decree-holder and that he had no interest in the matter. No permission had apparently been obtained by the decree-holder under Order XXI, rule 72, for bidding at the sale. But even overlooking these points and assuming (though there is no reason why such an assumption should be made) that Wilayat Husain had been bidding on behalf of the decree-holder and that the decree-holder had a right to bid, it is difficult to understand how the lower Court could have seen reason to confirm the sale in favour of Ali Muhammad. According to Wilayat Husain he was not the purchaser. The decree-holder was the purchaser. But the decree-holder had not transferred the house to Ali Muhammad.

Wilayat Husain, who on his own showing had no title to transfer the house, was the person who transferred it to Ali Muhammad. Thus Ali Muhammad without any legal transfer in his favour, without having made a bid and without having taken any part in the sale, or complied with any of the provisions of the Code, was declared to be the purchaser of the house. There has been considerable argument before me as to whether a failure to deposit the 25 per cent. of the purchase-money is merely irregular or whether such failure vitiates the sale ab initio. In favour of the view that such an omission is a mere irregularity, the learned Counsel for the appellant has quoted the decisions in Bhim Singh v. Sarwan Singh (1), Ahmad Bakhsh v. Lalta Prasad (2) and Munshi Mahomed Ali Mia v. Srimati Kiberia Khatun (3). In support of the opposite view the decisions in Intizam Ali Khan v. Narain Singh (4) and Amir Begam v. Bank of Upper India, Limited (5) have been put forward. According to the two latter decisions the omission to deposit one-fourth of the purchase-money vitiates the sale ab initio, and the decision in Mahomed Ali Mia v. Srimati Kiberia Khatun (3) goes to support that view in a case such as this in which the bidder has never deposited anything. There may be some difference of opinion as to whether the fact that a deposit has been made late or whether the fact that one-quarter of the purchase-money has been deposited inadvertently, constitutes more than an irregularity. But there is no difference of opinion as to the fact that a failure to deposit anything vitiates the sale. But apart from this the order confirming the sale in favour of Ali Muhammad was absolutely erroneous. Ali Muhammad was not the bidder and in no circumstances could he be declared an auction-purchaser at a Court-sale. At the best he might have been considered the transferee from the auction-purchaser at a Court-sale. But in such case the sale-certificate should have been given to the auction-purchaser and not to the transferee. For the above reasons

LACHHMAN PRASAD v. FIDA HUSAIN.

I have no hesitation in deciding that the order of 11th August 1914 confirming the sale in favour of Ali Muhammad is insupportable, and that no sale has ever taken place.

I next come to the question whether the Court had a right to set it aside. No question of limitation arises here, for this is not a case in which a judgment-debtor has sued to set aside a sale under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 90. It is a case in which a Court has itself set aside an order because it discovered that it had no authority to pass it. I find that the learned Munsif had every right to correct his mistaken order. It is true that the lady applied under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 90. But in the circumstances of the case there was no reason for her to do anything more than bringing the error to the notice of the Court. The Court had jurisdiction to set aside this order under the provisions of section 151, Act V of 1908, and this is what it has done. There has been no legal sale and the order now passed, that there should be a sale, is the proper order that should be passed.

For the above reasons I dismiss this appeal. The appellant will pay his own costs and those of the judgment-debtor-respondent.

The word "thing" as used in the definition of "exchange" in section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, does not include tangible things only, but intangible things as well, such as the equity of redemption. [p. 232, col. 2; p. 233, col. 1.]

No right of pre-emption can be exercised in a case where the mortgagee in order to avoid pre-emption gets the equity of redemption by way of exchange and not by way of sale. [p. 234, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mohanlalgunj, Lucknow, dated the 30th May 1913.

Babu Ishwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a certain Jugraj Brahman had mortgaged two separate properties to a certain Syed Fida Husain. Subsequently he transferred his right of equity of redemption in favour of Fida Husain in consideration of Fida Husain assigning to him proprietary rights over lands in a certain village subject to the payment of Rs. 4 per annum in lieu of land-revenue. The value of these rights was stated to be Rs. 1,600.

A certain Lachhman Prasad instituted a suit for pre-emption of the proprietary rights of Jugraj thereby conveyed to Fida Husain, on the allegation that the transaction was in fact a transaction of sale. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the transaction was a transaction of exchange and that no right of pre-emption could accrue upon it under the provisions of Chapter II, Act XVIII of 1876. According to the terms of the document the right of equity of redemption over certain property was transferred for proprietary rights over another property subject to the payment of a small sum as land-revenue.

The present appeal is against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge. The first point taken before us in appeal is that as under the provisions of section 118, Act IV of 1882, exchange can only take place when one thing is transferred for another thing, the transaction is not an exchange inasmuch as the equity of redemption is not a "thing." It is advanced in support of the argument that an equity of redemption is not a "thing," that a "thing" must be tangible. It is impossible to accede to this argument. In section 54 of Act IV of 1882 things are classified as tangible and intangible and a reversion is given as an example of an intangible thing. A right of equity of redemption is also an intangible thing and would fall within the definition of the word "thing" in section 118.

It was next argued that the transaction set forth in the deed was purely imaginary, that no transfer was made to Jugraj of land, but that he gave up his right of equity of redemption over the property mentioned in the deed to clear off a different debt which was due from him. We are unable to find any evidence in support of this assertion. In the first place there is evidence on the record, which we see no reason to disbelieve, to the effect that Jugraj has obtained possession of the land transferred. There is nothing in the terms of the deed which could be set forward as showing the satisfaction of any other debt. The deed could not be operative in clearing off any other debt due from Jugraj.

The next argument was to the effect that on the evidence properly considered it was established that the parties had agreed to a sale, and that the document executed was false from beginning to end and came into existence simply to cover the real nature of the transaction. We were referred to the evidence of Abdul Ali, the manager of the Salempur Estate, who deposed that on the 26th May 1911 Jugraj approached him with the suggestion that his employer should purchase the right of equity of redemption. Fida Husain has deposed that Jugraj wanted money, that he did not feel disposed to advance him money or to purchase the equity of redemption from him, inasmuch as, if he purchased that equity of redemption, he would be exposed to a suit for pre-emption. He, therefore, suggested an exchange. We see no reason to distrust the statement of Abdul Ali, but we further see no reason to distrust the statement of Fida Husain. The two statements together show that Jugraj wished to sell the right of equity of redemption to the Raja of Salempur, who did not agree to buy it, and that he afterwards tried to obtain a loan from Fida Husain, that Fida Husain refused to buy the equity of redemption from him but agreed to exchange something else for the right of equity of redemption. Fida Husain said in effect that he would not buy but that he would exchange, and there is nothing in the fact that he did so to show that the transaction was a sale and not an exchange. Abdul Ali has deposed that Fida Husain approached him after the transaction took place and requested him to use his influence to persuade the Raja to refrain from instituting a suit for pre-emption. But if Fida Husain made endeavours to prevent his title being challenged, that circumstance does not show that he had no title. There is further evidence that a third person endeavoured to buy the right of equity of redemption from Jugraj who refused to give him an answer. Upon this evidence it is impossible to find that a sale really took place but that a fictitious deed was executed to give the transaction the colour of an exchange.

Reliance is placed on a passage in a recent ruling of a Bench of the High Court of Madras in Ariyaputhira Padayachi v. Muthukumaraswamy Padayachi (1). This decision does not help the appellant in any way. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., considered at page 428 whether the word "price" as used in section 54 of Act IV of 1882 was necessarily the price paid in current coin or whether it might not consist simply of a release from debts due prior to the transaction. He was inclined to give a broader meaning to the word "price" but at page 429 he suggests that in the case of a release from a debt the transaction would be an exchange rather than a sale. Here Fida Husain gave certain rights in land and received a right of equity of redemption. Neither of the things can possibly be held to be a "price." It is true that both have an estimable value. In the ordinary transaction of business articles exchanged would have an estimable value. If two men exchange horses each horse has an estimable value but neither horse could be considered to be a "price."

We have examined the terms of the deed carefully and are satisfied that on the face of it it is a deed of exchange and not a deed of sale. We have further considered the evidence and find that there is nothing in it to show that the transaction was fictitious and that the parties really sold the property and drew up an absolutely fictitious deed of exchange to conceal the nature of the actual transaction. It is perfectly true that Fida Husain deliberately refused to purchase the right of equity of redemption and exchanged something else for it in order to avoid the possibility of pre-emption. His Counsel is frank upon that point and admits that as his client knew that if he purchased the property he would be liable to have to give it up again if a suit for pre-emption were brought against him, he, therefore, deliberately adopted a form of transfer which would not lay himself open to such a claim. There are many rulings of this Court which show that in such circumstances no right of pre-emption arises. The argument in support of this proposition has perhaps been put most forcibly in the judgment of a Bench in Majida Bibi v. Malik Fazl Karim (2), where at page 18 the proposition is summed up as follows:—

(1) 15 Ind. Cas. 343; 37 M. 423; 12 M. L. T. 425; 23 M. L. J. 339; (1912) M. W. N. 854.

JANGI RAM v. SHEORAJ SINGH.

"Nor is it forbidden to a person to circumvent the law of pre-emption by taking a transfer which falls short of a sale but which may eventually have the same effect as a sale."

The Legislature has created in Chapter II, Act XVIII of 1876, a right of pre-emption which arises under the provisions of section 10 when a person proposes to sell any property or when he forecloses a mortgage upon any property in respect of which any person would have a right of pre-emption. It does not arise when a person proposes to exchange any property, and by no possible construction of the terms of the chapter, upon which alone the title of the appellant is based, can it be held that the right of pre-emption can be exercised with respect to an exchange. As we find that the transaction was an exchange, this appeal necessarily fails and is dismissed. The appellant will pay his own costs and those of the contesting respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

It was found, however, that the mortgagee did not set up any higher rights than those of a mortgagee at any time since the date of the mortgage and that the mortgage could not be fictitious:

Held, that section 92, clause (4), of the Evidence Act did not apply to the case, as prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act there was no law which required the sale of immoveable property to be in writing and as the mortgage-deed which evidenced the oral agreement rescinding or superseding the previous sale-deed was also registered. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 13th October 1913.

Messrs. St. George Jackson and A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain and Babus Chhail Behari Lal and Puttu Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption brought by the plaintiffs-respondents in respect of a mortgage, effected by Bahadur Singh in favour of Durjan Dube on 25th February 1879. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the mortgagor died on 20th November 1889, leaving a son, Ratan Singh, and a widow, Musammāt Sabit Kunwar, that Ratan Singh died childless on the 21st March 1890, leaving a widow, Musammāt Muna Kunwar, who succeeded to his estate, that Musammāt Muna Kunwar died on 5th October 1908 and was succeeded by Musammāt Sabit Kunwar, who relinquished her rights in favour of the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs as the nephews and the nearest reversioners of the original mortgagor thus became entitled to the estate. They further alleged that the defendants had cut trees and groves standing on the mortgaged property worth Rs. 2,500, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of Rs. 6,000 on account of the balance of the mortgage-money.

The defendants are the heirs and representatives-in-interest of the deceased mortgagee. Their defence was that Bahadur Singh had sold his rights in the mortgaged property to Durjan Dube prior to the mortgage, that the mortgage relied on by the plaintiffs was effected with the ostensible object of defeating a right of pre-emption, sought to be asserted in respect of the said sale, that the mortgage was in reality fictitious and without consideration, that Ratan Singh died in the life-time of his father, Bahadur Singh, whose widow, daughters and grandsons by those daughters were alive, that the plaintiffs had no right to sue for redemption or claim the estate of Bahadur Singh as his reversioners, that the trees cut down by the defendants were worth not more than Rs. 338-12, that the defendants constructed two wells on the mortgaged property at a cost of Rs. 1,500 and that they were entitled to add the costs of improvements effected to the mortgage-money. In reply the plaintiffs pleaded that Durjan Dube surrendered his rights under the sale-deeds executed in his favour by Bahadur Singh when he took a mortgage and that there was a custom in the family of Bahadur Singh by which daughters and their issue were excluded from inheritance.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the mortgage-deed superseded the previous sale-deeds by mutual agreement, that Ratan Singh died after Bahadur Singh, that the daughters of Bahadur Singh and their issue were excluded by family custom, that the defendants had cut trees worth Rs. 338-12 and had not established any necessity for the construction of the wells the cost of which was claimed, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem the mortgage subject to the payment of Rs. 8,161-4 on account of the balance of the mortgage-money.

In appeal it is contended on behalf of the defendants-appellants that the plaintiffs have no reversionary or other kind of interest in the mortgaged property and that the mortgage relied on by them was fictitious and without consideration.

We see no reason, however, to differ from the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge. It appears that Bahadur Singh was the owner of a 3-annas share in two villages named Malthu and Kundai. On the 10th August 1878 he sold a one-anna share in each of the villages to Durjan Dube, the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants, in lieu of Rs. 2,500. On the 12th September 1878 he sold the remaining two-annas share in the two villages to Durjan Dube in lieu of Rs. 6,000. The vendee got mutation of names effected in respect of the first sale-deed, but before any steps could be taken to obtain mutation of names in respect of the second sale, something appears to have happened which led the vendor and the vendee to re-consider their position and to arrange to re-place the sale-deeds by a mortgage. The explanation for the substitution, as given in the mortgage-deed, is that Raghu

JANGI RAM v. SHEORAJ SINGH.

Nath Singh, the elder son of Bahadur Singh, then alive, was disputing the right of his father to transfer the ancestral property without his consent; and that explanation is borne out to some extent by the deposition of Raghu Nath Singh in the suit for pre-emption, subsequently filed by Ishri Singh, uncle of Bahadur Singh, wherein he stated as follows:—"My father sold one anna to Durjan Dube. Then he sold two annas. My father did not consult me about these sales. He usually consulted me and my brother but he did not do so on this occasion. I was angry about the first sale of one anna and when I heard the sale of two annas, I was very angry. I said that an equal money could be got by mortgage. I complained to Durjan. He said he did not want to buy and that if I paid the money he would return the deeds of sale. I then said that if he took mortgage for one year, I would raise the money and pay him. He said that he would not allow more than one year. I had to do khushamad to get Durjan to agree to this. The sales had been completed. He took the price of the stamp and costs of registration of the deeds of sale from me..... No one has ever claimed a right of pre-emption. The mortgage was not substituted for the purpose of causing injury to the plaintiff..... I consented to mortgage to Durjan to supersede the sales." (Exhibit 17). According to the statement of Babu Pitam Rai, a Pleader who appeared in the pre-emption case on behalf of the vendee, the vendee had not obtained full possession until the mortgage was executed, and though an application had been made for mutation of names in respect of the one-anna share, nothing had been done with reference to the sale of the remaining two annas (Exhibit 16). The mortgage-deed in suit was executed on the 25th February 1879, that is, within six months of the execution of the second sale-deed, to secure the payment of Rs. 8,500, being the aggregate amount of the consideration moneys paid under the two previous sale-deeds. Applications for mutation of names were made in pursuance of the mortgage soon afterwards (Exhibits 2 and 4); and on the 19th April 1879 orders were passed directing that the name of Durjan Dube should be entered as mortgagee in respect of the disputed property and that the previous entry in respect of the sale of a one-anna share should be treated as cancelled (Exhibits 3 and 5).

On the 31st March 1879 Ishri Singh, uncle of the vendor, sued for pre-emption in respect of both the sale-deeds, alleging that the mortgage effected in substitution for the sale-deeds was illusive and fictitious (Exhibit 15). The defence of Durjan Dube was that Ishri Singh had no right to sue for pre-emption in respect of the sales which had been superseded and cancelled by mutual agreement, and that in any case the vendee had a preferential right of purchase (Exhibit 6). The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance (Exhibit A 2), but dismissed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the mortgage was not fictitious and, even if the sales were operative, inasmuch as the vendee was a nearer co-sharer, he was entitled to preference. On further appeal to this Court, the finding of the Court below that the vendee had a superior right was upheld (Exhibits A 3 and A 4).

It appears that Durjan Dube did not set up any higher rights than those of a mortgagee at any time since the date of the execution of the mortgage. He had four brothers, Gokul, Sital, Parmanand and Partab. In 1893 he consented to the entry of their names in the revenue papers in respect of the property in dispute as his co-mortgagees (Exhibits 12 and 13), and in 1894 he filed a suit against certain persons, claiming possession of a grove by escheat in the village Malthu, describing his interest in the village as a vendee of a two-annas share from Jwahir Singh and a mortgagee of three-annas share of Bahadur Singh (Exhibit A 3).

It is contended by the learned Counsel for the defendants that a registered sale-deed could not have been cancelled by an oral agreement, and that the mortgage which is the subject of redemption was fictitious and invalid for want of consideration. The mortgage-deed, however, provided for foreclosure, if the mortgage-money was not paid in Jeth 1286 Fasli or 1287 Fasli, and the substitution of mortgage-deed for a sale-deed could have the effect of postponing the exercise of the right of pre-emption but not of preventing it (Vide section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act). No object could, therefore, have been gained by a fictitious mortgage.

JANGI RAM v. SHEORAJ SINGH.

Section 92, clause (4), of the Evidence Act does not apply to the case, because prior to the passing of Act IV of 1882 there was no law which required a sale-deed of immoveable property to be in writing. The mortgage-deed, which evidenced the oral agreement, rescinding or superseding the previous sale-deeds, was moreover registered, and there was nothing in law to prevent the vendee from surrendering his rights under the sale-deeds in any manner he thought proper. A mortgagee, besides, could not go behind the mortgage to dispute the right of the mortgagor to enforce redemption.

The surrender by the vendee of his rights under the sale-deeds was the consideration for the mortgage executed by the vendor in favour of the vendee, in lieu of the consideration money which he had previously received, and, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (1), it is competent to an absolute owner of an estate to enter into an arrangement by which he may surrender the estate held by him under a grant to the grantor, and receive it back again from the grantor under a different grant, so long as there is no law describing the form in which the surrender is to be made.

The rules of the Hindu and Muhammadan Law relating to the transfer of property by sale were not abrogated till the passing of Act IV of 1882, and the effect of the transaction of surrender was to rescind the previous sale-deeds by mutual agreement and to substitute therefor a mortgage which now forms the subject of redemption.

Bahadur Singh was succeeded on his death by Ratan Singh, who is proved by the evidence to have died several months after the date of the death of the former. The mutation proceedings instituted after the death of Bahadur Singh and Ratan Singh and the evidence of the witnesses adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs, including Mahabir Prasad, one of the sons-in-law of Bahadur Singh, leaves no room for doubt that Ratan Singh survived Bahadur Singh, and that mutation of names was effected on his death in favour of Musammam Muna Kunwar, his widow, and Musammam Sabit Kunwar, his mother, by mutual consent.

It is unnecessary to refer to the statements said to have been made by Musammam Muna Kunwar, Musammam Sabit Kunwar and Jugal Kishore, the patwari of the village, during the pendency of the mutation proceedings, for the report of the Tahsildar, which embodies the result of the inquiry and was accepted by the Sub-Divisional Officer, clearly establishes the order in which Bahadur Singh and Ratan Singh had died. There is no reliable evidence on behalf of the defendants to prove to the contrary. On the death of Musammam Muna Kunwar, Musammam Sabit Kunwar succeeded to the estate as the holder of a life-estate which she subsequently relinquished in favour of the plaintiffs, who are the nephews and nearest reversioners of her husband, under a deed of release, dated the 5th January 1909. The execution of that release is satisfactorily proved by the evidence of the plaintiffs, who are consequently entitled to sue for redemption. The effect of the release was to accelerate the vesting of the estate in the reversioners of Bahadur Singh or at all events at transferring the life-interest, held by Musammam Sabit Kunwar, to them for life.

It is not necessary, therefore, to determine whether the daughters of Bahadur Singh and their issue would be excluded from inheritance by a custom or not. The plaintiffs have a right to sue for redemption in either event. Even as reversioners their right to redeem cannot be denied [Gumani Singh v. Chakkar Singh (2)].

The defendants have not shown that there was any necessity for the construction of the wells, the cost of which is claimed by them. Section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act permits a mortgagee to spend such money as is necessary for the due management of the mortgaged property and the collection of the rents and profits thereof and for its preservation from destruction, forfeiture or sale, but as pointed out in Arunachella Chetti v. Sithayi Ammal (3), it does not permit a mortgagee to make improvements at the expense of the mortgagor with the object of deriving greater benefit during the period of his enjoyment from the mortgaged property, and to add the costs of the same to the mortgage-money. No other grounds have been pressed in the appeal.

The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have inadvertently passed a decree directing the sale of the mortgaged property in case redemption is not effected, though the mortgage-deed provided for foreclosure.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs except in so far that in case of non-payment of the mortgage-money within the period allowed, the mortgage will be liable to be foreclosed.

The defendants appellants will bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Where a property is sold subject to a mortgage, as provided for in Order XXI, rule 62, Civil Procedure Code, only the judgment-debtor's right of redemption is sold, so that the purchaser does not acquire any greater rights than those of redeeming the mortgage, and the purchaser cannot question the validity of such a mortgage. [p. 238, col. 2.]

Where a property, although encumbered, is sold subject to no encumbrance, the purchaser is nevertheless liable to discharge the encumbrance. Neither the provisions of sections 52 and 53 of the Transfer of Property Act nor those of section 64, Civil Procedure Code, help him to escape the liability. [p. 239, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 21st February 1913, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 29th May 1912.

Mr. K. Darabji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 7th May 1904 Musammatt Bachni attached one house and certain plots in execution of a simple money-decree. Both these properties had been mortgaged by a mortgage of a date prior to the 7th May 1904. On the 22nd July 1904 and the 23rd May 1905 the judgment-debtor executed deeds of further charge with regard to both the house and the plots. There is nothing to show that the beneficiary under the deeds of further charge had any knowledge of the attachment of 7th May 1904. On the 15th July 1905 the house was sold for Rs. 10 and purchased by the decree-holder herself. In the proclamation of sale no mention was made of prior encumbrances. On the 17th January 1906 a proclamation of sale was issued with regard to the plots in which it was declared that they were subject to the original mortgage and to both the deeds of further charge. On the 28th March 1906 the decree-holder purchased the plots herself. There is an order dated 17th January 1906, which, in my opinion, is clearly an order under section 282 of Act XIV of 1882 which was then in force. The learned District Judge has held that the purchaser of the plots is liable to satisfy only the mortgage and not the deed of further charge. I find that he is in error upon this point. It was decided in Shib Kumar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (1), that in a case in which property is sold subject to a mortgage, as provided for in section 282, only the judgment-debtor's right of redemption is sold, so that the purchaser does not acquire any greater rights than those of redeeming the mortgage, and that it is not open to the purchaser to question the validity of such a mortgage. The decision is approved in Ram Kumar v. Dwarka Parshad (2). Following these two decisions I hold that, as the sale was under section 282 of the old Code and both the mortgage and the charges were declared at the time of sale, it is not open to the purchaser now to question the validity of either the mortgage or the charges. But the case of the house is different. It was sold subject to no encumbrance. The learned District Judge has held that the purchaser is liable to satisfy the deed of mortgage. I need not discuss this point, as it was for the respondents to appeal against that decision of the learned District Judge, and they have not done so. All that I have to consider with regard to the house is whether the learned District Judge was right in holding that the purchaser is not liable on the charges of the 22nd July 1904 and the 23rd May 1905 which were not declared in the sale proclamation. The learned District Judge bases his conclusion on the point on the terms of section 52 of Act IV of 1882. I do not agree with him with regard to the application of this section. There was no transfer pendente lite, for the right to the house was not directly or specifically in question in the course of a contentious suit or proceeding. I have considered the effect of the provisions of section 276 of Act XIV of 1882. Here there was a private alienation of the house after attachment, which under the provisions of that section is void against all claims enforceable under the attachment. I do not, however, consider that the title to hold the house unencumbered by the subsequent charges can possibly be considered to be a claim enforceable under the attachment of a house in execution of a simple money-decree. Nor can the provisions of section 53, Act IV of 1882, be invoked to assist the purchaser, as the beneficiary under the deeds of further charge was a transferee in good faith and for consideration. This appeal, therefore, must succeed.

I set aside the decision of the learned District Judge and restore the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge upon this point. The respondents will pay their own costs and those of the appellant in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The suit related to a deed of gift, said to have been executed by a parda-nashin lady in favour of her brother, Ata Husain, who was acting as her manager, in respect of her entire zemindari and house property. It was found by this Court in concurrence with the Court below that the lady executed the deed of gift without realizing its purport or understanding its consequences, that the signing of the deed was due to the trust reposed by her in the good will of Ata Husain, and that the gift was not accompanied or followed by delivery of possession and was not consequently valid and enforceable. It was further found that the gift being invalid for want of delivery of possession under the Muhammadan Law, the claim was not barred by limitation or by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

The valuation of the suit exceeds Rs. 10,000. But the appeal does not involve any substantial question of law, not previously determined by several decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

There was no variation between pleading and proof, for the lady alleged in the plaint that she did not execute any document by way of a deed of gift or transfer, so as to divest herself of her entire property that she was an old, rustic, pardanashin lady, possessing no capacity to understand a transaction or the purport of a deed, that she had completely fallen under the influence of the defendant who was managing her estate, and used to believe everything he told her, that it was possible that he might have obtained her signature on some deed by misrepresentation and fraud and that if her signature was obtained on any such deed it was void, as having been improperly obtained without her having been made acquainted with the real purport and contents thereof, or given an opportunity of obtaining independent advice. She also alleged in the plaint that she had not delivered possession. The findings of fact arrived at by this Court and the Court below on the question of the fiduciary relationship, and the circumstances under which the deed of gift was obtained and in regard to the non-delivery of possession, are fatal to the defendants' appeal and as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Karuppanan Servai v. Srinivasan Chetti (1) and Saijad Husain v. Nawab Abid Husain Khan (2), no appeal lies unless there is a substantial question of law arising on the findings of fact concurrently arrived at. The questions of burden of proof and of the invalidity of a deed of gift not accompanied by delivery of possession according to the Muhammadan Law have been settled by a long course of decisions of the Privy Council, ending with Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (3), Khajooroonissa v. Rowshan Jehan (4) and Chaudhri Mehdi Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (5). No question of limitation arises if the gift is in itself void and unenforceable.

The application is, therefore, disallowed with costs.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 10th September 1912.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought by Parmeshri Das, Babu Ram and Baldeo Prasad, residents of Lucknow, for the removal of the defendant, Girdhari Lal, from the office of trustee of a temple known as Thakurdwara Dwarka Dhish in Lucknow.

PARMESHARI DAS v. GIRDHARI LAL.

and for the appointment of new trustees to take charge of the management of the temple and its property. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that Jogi Mal, a Khattri of Lucknow, died about 45 years ago, leaving a sister, Musammat Sohni Bibi, and her husband, Gattu Mal, as his successors, that in accordance with the directions left by Jogi Mal, the temple in question was built by Gattu Mal in 1875 out of the funds left by the deceased, and that Gattu Mal subsequently purchased a share in Manza Pahia Azampur at auction out of the said funds and set it apart for the expenses connected with the temple. Gattu Mal died in 1880 and was succeeded by his widow, Musammat Hiradei, whom he had married after the death of Musammat Sohni Bibi. Musammat Hiradei was succeeded in 1888 by Kalka Das, a cousin of Gattu Mal, who left a Will bequeathing a life-estate to Sardi Bibi, the widow of his brother, Makhan Lal, and the remainder to his sister's son, Girdhari Lal, with directions to apply a specified portion of the usufruct of the property bequeathed to the upkeep and maintenance of the temple in the manner directed by the Will. The plaintiffs stated that after the death of Musammat Sardi Bibi, which took place in 1897, the defendant became the manager of the endowed property by virtue of the said Will and that he was not properly carrying out the instructions contained in the Will.

The defence was that the defendant was the owner of the property in dispute, including the thakurdwara, under the Will of Kalka Das, that the temple in question was not intended for general or public worship and that the allegations that the property in question was dedicated to the idol and that the defendant was not carrying out the instructions in the Will were incorrect. The learned District Judge found that the temple was not a public temple, that no property was dedicated to it and that the story of mismanagement or breach of trust was not made out.

The suit was instituted under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure with the permission of the Legal Remembrancer. But two of the plaintiffs' Parmeshari Das and Babu Ram, died during the pendency of the appeal and their heirs were not brought on the record. Two other persons, who were not the heirs or legal representatives of the deceased appellants applied to be substituted in their place on the ground that they were interested in the subject-matter of the appeal, but as they were not among the persons who had originally obtained leave to institute the suit, their application was rejected. The preliminary question arising for disposal under the circumstances is whether the surviving appellant is competent to carry on the appeal.

Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that in the case of any alleged breach of an express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature a suit to remove a trustee or for an appointment of a new trustee shall be instituted by two or more persons having an interest in the trust, after obtaining the consent in writing of the Advocate-General to the institution of such a suit. The section makes no provision for the carrying on of such a suit after it is formally instituted if any of the persons who joined in instituting the suit withdraw from the same or die before its decision or during the pendency of the appeal. We have, therefore, to fall back upon the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1, and Order XXII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, to find out whether under these circumstances the surviving plaintiff can be permitted to carry on the suit or appeal. Order XXIII, rule 1, forbids a Court from permitting one of several plaintiffs to withdraw from a suit without consent of the others and Order XXII, rule 2, allows a surviving plaintiff to continue a suit, if the right to sue survives to him alone. The question, therefore, is whether the right to sue survives to the remaining appellant, Baldeo Prasad. The right to sue asserted by Baldeo Prasad rested on the interest claimed by him as one of the persons entitled to worship at the temple and having a right to prevent a mismanagement of the temple property. The interest has not abated by the death of the other co-plaintiffs whose heirs did not come forward to join in prosecuting the appeal, and the fact that a decree has been passed in favour of the so-called trustee, adverse to the interest of the beneficiaries including

PARMESHRI DAS V. GIRDHARI LAL.

Baldeo Prasad, renders it necessary that the right of Baldeo Prasad to have the validity of that decree tested on appeal should not be denied to him. The necessity for the co-operation of another person is restricted by the language of section 92 of the Code to the institution of the suit. After its decision, the will of one person cannot control the action of another, for it is conceivable that one plaintiff may feel aggrieved by the decision and another may be willing to accept it. Order XLI, rule 4, therefore, provides that where there are more plaintiffs than one in a suit and the decree appealed from proceeds on any grounds common to all the plaintiffs, any one of the plaintiffs may appeal from the whole decree and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants as the case may be. Order XLI, rule 33, similarly authorizes the Appellate Court to pass any decree which the interests of justice may require, notwithstanding that the appeal is as to a part of the decree. If one of the plaintiffs can appeal from a decree and get it modified or varied on a ground common to all the plaintiffs, there is no reason why if a suit has fructuated into a decree in favour of one party or another, any one of the plaintiffs or defendants should not be allowed to appeal from the decree by reason of the death of the other plaintiffs or defendants unless the right to sue has abated. It may be argued that a right to sue under section 92 vests in two persons jointly and cannot be exercised at any stage of the proceeding by one without the co-operation of the other. But no such co-operation is required for the prosecution of an appeal from a decree passed in such a case. In Ohetikulam Prasanna Venkatachala Reddiar v. Collector of Trichinopoly (1), where a suit was brought for removing a trustee and manager of certain charities and for a declaration that the Will in favour of the alienee of the lands belonging to the charities was invalid, it was held that the death of the trustee during the pendency of an appeal filed by the alienee did not lead to the abatement of the suit. Reliance is placed on behalf of the defendant-respondent on the decision in Sarabjit Bharthi v. Lagan Dei (2). But in that case the remaining trustee was found to have had no real interest in the subject-matter of litigation. Suppose the decision in that case had been adverse to the trustee. Would it not have been unreasonable to refuse to allow the trustee to proceed with his appeal, if one of the persons who brought the suit against him had died or withdrawn subsequent to the decree and there were no other persons willing to carry on the suit in co-operation with the surviving plaintiff? The object of section 92, as explained in Sarabjit Bharthi v. Lagan Dei (2), is to enable the Civil Courts to control the administration of public trusts of a charitable or religious nature at the instance of persons interested in their proper administration and where such control has been exercised or withheld by a Court of original jurisdiction, the right of a party to challenge the exercise or withholding of such control by an appeal to a higher Court cannot be taken away by the death of the successful party or the death or unwillingness of one of the persons belonging to the losing party to proceed with the case. The right to sue in such cases is, generally speaking, personal except in so far as any costs or the liability to pay the same may have been incurred and the omission to implead the personal heirs of such a person would not affect the right of the surviving plaintiff to file an appeal. We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff-appellant, Baldeo Prasad, is competent to carry on the appeal.

The next question is whether the thakurdwara and the other property in dispute constitute a public trust of a religious nature and whether any mismanagement of the trust property has been made out by the plaintiffs. It appears that Jogi Mal died sometime in 1868 leaving his entire property to this sister, Musammatt Sohni Bibi, and her husband, Gattu Mal, for their own absolute use and benefit. The Will contains no direction for the construction of a temple or the purchase of any property out of the funds of the deceased and there is no reliable evidence to show that the deceased left any such instructions. The thakurdwara in question was built by Gattu Mal in 1875, many years after the death of Jogi Mal. He formally consecrated it for the worship of the idol installed there. Janki Nath and Janardan state that they attended the consecration ceremony, and there is ample evidence to show that the temple has been open since then for public worship. A pujari has been working in the temple as a priest from the date of the consecration, carrying on worship and making offerings of bhog or food at stated intervals in accordance with usage. The bhog used to be cooked in one of the back apartments attached to the temple, and the various religious festivals falling during the year were publicly celebrated there every year. A staff of a mali and a kahar was in attendance to minister to the needs of the worshippers and to keep the place tidy and in good order. A stone inscription was affixed over the door of the temple, describing the building as the temple of Sri Dwarka Dhish built by Gattu Mal Khattri, son of Daulat Ram, and the date of consecration was noted thereon as Monday, Magh Sudi 10th, Sambat 1931. Mr. Warburton, the District Judge, who visited the temple on the 21st February 1912 in the company of the Pleaders of the parties, observed that it was a substantial building of a considerable size situated in a thickly populated part of the Lucknow city, looking, as far as appearances and surroundings went, as a temple intended for public worship, and not a place for private or family worship. The parties agreed before him (vide his notes of inspection) that the founder of the temple and the present manager of it lived in a house in another street of the Lucknow city about 200 or 300 yards away from the temple with several houses intervening. The statement made in the evidence that the defendant and the female members of his family lived in the back portion of the temple and that the temple was meant for worship by only the members of the family, cannot under the circumstances be trusted. The inscription describes it as a temple and not as a dwelling house, and there would have been no need for any inscription at the gate, if the building represented nothing more than a dwelling house, with a private idol installed in a portion of it. In the account books kept by Gattu Mal and his successors the building is described throughout as a thakurdwara, and the expenses of bhog (offerings of food), establishment and festive celebrations connected therewith are separately entered and debited to the account of Thakurji or thakurdwara from the date of the construction of the temple till 1911. We have no doubt, therefore, that the temple in question is a public temple intended for public worship.

There is nothing, however, to show that beyond the thakurdwara building, which bears the inscription, any other property stands dedicated to it. The share of Mauza Pahia Azampur purchased in 1876 was not purchased in the name of the temple or the idol installed there. The litigation which subsequently ensued to obtain possession of the property purchased was carried on in the name of Gattu Mal and in the account books of Gattu Mal the income derived from the village was credited year after year along with the income derived from other sources in one joint account. The expenditure over the maintenance of the temple amounted in the life-time of Gattu Mal to about Rs. 25 per mensem. The income of the village as described in the Will amounted to Rs. 1,300 per year and there is nothing to indicate that Gattu Mal kept the surplus income of the village apart and credited it to the temple fund. No deed of endowment was executed by Gattu Mal, or by any of his successors, and as observed in Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (3) and Abdul Ghafur v. Mahant Shyam Sundar Das (4), the mere fact that Gattu Mal was spending a portion of his income to the upkeep of the temple is insufficient to establish that the corpus of the property was dedicated to its use. Gattu Mal was succeeded on his death by his widow, Musammam Hiradei. She was a minor and was not in a position to dedicate any property. The entry made in the khewat of Mauza Pahia Azampur in the column of co-sharers against her name, declaring that she was holding the property subject to a liability to spend its income for the maintenance of the thakurdwara (ba shart sarf thakurdwara Thakur Dwarka Dhish) is, in the absence of proof of an earlier dedication, not entitled to any weight. The order for mutation of names dated the 18th December 1880 therein referred to has not been filed. The entry subsequently made on the death of Musammat Hiradei in favour of Kalka Das merely repeated what had previously been entered when the name of Musammat Hiradei was recorded and is similarly of no value. An entry made in a Revenue Register without any explanation as to show how it originated or was brought into existence is, if inconsistent with other known facts, not entitled to any weight. In the Will executed by Kalka Das on the 29th June 1891 bequeathing the property in succession to Musammat Sardi Bibi and Girdhari Lal, there is no reference to the dedication of the corpus of the property, but provision is made for the application of Rs. 526 per year out of the income of the property to the maintenance and upkeep to the temple and the celebration of the worship and festivities there. The Will purports to devise the corpus of the property after the death of Musammat Sardi Bibi to Girdhari Lal in absolute proprietorship, subject to the trust created in favour of the temple to the extent of the income above specified. Reliance is placed on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant on certain partition proceedings instituted by Arshed Ali Khan, a co-sharer of Mauza Pahia Azampur, in 1901 wherein Girdhari Lal was described as a representative of Musammat Sardi Bibi and a separate mahal was constituted in respect of the share belonging to him in the name of "Thakur Dwarka Dhish, manager Girdhari Lal." Girdhari Lal does not appear, however, to have taken any active part in the partition proceedings. His agent, Raghuber, may have attended it at times. The partition proceedings directed that the mahal should be called by the name of Girdhari Lal, and it is not clear how it came to be constituted in the name of Thakur Dwarka Dhish contrary to the previous entries which stood in the name of Girdhari Lal. On the death of Musammat Sardi Bibi, Girdhari Lal obtained mutation of names in his favour (Exhibit A 18) and he was appointed a lambardar in his own right. It was not open to the partition officer to convert private property into waqf property by giving it a particular designation and his proceedings, in regard to the distribution of and title to the land, are not conclusive as between a party to the partition and strangers.

The defendant has given evidence to show that he has been applying the income set apart for the purposes of the temple to its upkeep and maintenance, and the celebration of the festivals and religious worship prescribed by the Will. He has filed detailed accounts of the expenditure incurred by him in connection with the thakardwara from the 2nd January 1898 to the 1st October 1911, and though the account books do not appear to have been very regularly kept and mix up the defendant's personal account with the account of the temple in a very undesirable manner, they contain sufficient materials to show that the defendant has not been neglecting his duties in connection with the temple, and that the instructions contained in the Will of Kalka Das have been duly carried out. The only material variation noticeable is that in the supply of bhog or offerings of food for which the Will allowed a sum of Rs. 12 per mensem, the defendant states that he has been making arrangements for the supply of bhog from his own kitchen and there is no reason to disbelieve his statement. The food offered to a diety is generally eaten by the pujari after it is offered, and it is not stated that any trouble has arisen in connection with it. In regard to the celebration of festivals and arrangements for lighting and worship the evidence makes it clear that there has been no default. A pujari is still maintained, and though no kahar or chaukidar is now employed, inasmuch as the amount allowed for the said purpose by the Will is too small, the work of dusting the place and keeping it neat and clean is duly carried out. No cow is kept because milk can be otherwise easily procured. There are cows kept in the village, which can be sent for when in milk, and no interruption either in the celebration of festivals or worship is proved to have occurred in consequence. The allegations made in paragraph 13 of the plaint regarding the cutting of trees and removal of moveable property belonging to the temple have also not been established. The defendant should not have mixed up the expenditure incurred in connection with the temple, including the bhog, with his personal expenditure, as he has thereby rendered the tracing of unspent annual balances difficult. He should separate the two accounts and keep the savings made from the allotted annual expenditure to meet extraordinary contingencies, such as repairs, white-washing and the like, that may from time to time be necessary. He is not unwilling to carry on his duties in connection with the trust as directed by the Will and to render accounts when called for, and as no misfeasance is established we see no reason to remove him from the trusteeship.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 26 (2)—Land acquired temporarily—Damage to land—Compensation, when to be calculated—Principle underlying such compensation.

Where culturable land is acquired temporarily for the purpose of quarrying kankar therefrom, compensation for re-levelling the land and making it fit for cultivation shall be calculated at the expiry of the period for which the land has been temporarily acquired, inasmuch as it is impossible to say in advance what damage will be caused to the land and what it will cost to make that damage good. [p. 245, col. 2; p. 246, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Moradabad, dated the 7th of June 1913.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hameed-ullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings taken under section 35 of the Land Acquisition Act. Government acquired an area of four acres, twenty poles, situated in the village of Manakpur Naroli, temporarily for a term of two years under the section for the purpose of quarrying kankar. The land was culturable land in the hands of tenants. Compensation was offered to the tenants for the period of their ouster and a sum of Rs. 105-6 was offered as compensation to the zemindar and it was explained to him that on the expiry of the two years' term, he would be entitled to further compensation for any damage done to the land, under section 36, clause (2), of the Land Acquisition Act. He objected to the amount offered to him and he put forward his plea in this way that by reason of the kankar being dug, the surface of the land would be lowered, earth would have to be brought from elsewhere to raise it and make it fit for cultivation. This being so he was entitled to two sorts of compensation, (1) to two years' rent for the period of occupation and (2) to compensation at the rate of Rs. 18 per bigha kham for levelling the ground and for bringing earth from other plots to make the ground fit for cultivation. This he put forward on the 24th of October before the Collector. The Collector refused to grant him any sum more than the amount offered and he applied for a reference to the District Judge. Before the District Judge he again claimed the same compensation and asked for an order awarding compensation for levelling the ground after the two years. The learned District Judge awarded to him the sum of Rs. 198-8. He arrived at this figure by calculating approximately the amount of kankar which would probably be dug out of the area occupied and valued it at Rs. 7-8 per bigha. The total area being 26 bighas 19 biswas he awarded Rs. 198-8. Government has appealed and the respondent has also filed objections, claiming that he is entitled to compensation at the rate of Rs. 18 per bigha as he has all along claimed. In our opinion the method adopted by the learned District Judge is absolutely wrong. There was no question of the valuation of the kankar at all. The respondent put forward no claim thereto. He had asked merely for two years' rent plus compensation at the rate of Rs. 18 per bigha to cover the cost of re-levelling the land and making it fit for cultivation. We have to point out that the compensation offered by the Collector amounted to four times the annual rent paid by the tenants of the land. It is quite clear that the respondent is also entitled to compensation under section 36, clause (2), of the Act, i.e., compensation which is to cover the cost of re-levelling the land and making it fit for cultivation. But an examination of the section will show that this amount of compensation has to be calculated at the expiry of the period for which the land has been temporarily acquired. The reason of this is obvious, for it is impossible to say in advance what damage will be caused to the land and what it will cost to make that damage good. The respondent has really in his petition asked for the payment of that compensation in advance. But he is not entitled to this in "this" proceeding. His application in respect thereto is premature. He only asked for two years' rent. The Collector awarded him four years' rent. In our opinion he has been liberally treated. We, therefore, allow the appeal. We set aside the award of the District Judge. We award to the respondent Rs. 105-6 as offered to him by the Collector in the beginning. It will still be open to him on the expiry of the period for which the land has been acquired to apply for the compensation mentioned in section 36, clause (2), which he has claimed at Rs. 18 per bigha and in respect to which we express no opinion in the present proceeding. The objections are disallowed with costs and the appellant will have his costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 141, O. II, r. 2, O. XX, r. 12—Execution—Decree for possession and mesne profits—Separate execution for possession and mesne profits, if allowable.

A person who holds a decree for possession of immovable property and mesne profits can execute it first for possession only and then afterwards for mesne profits.

Balasubramania Chetti v. Swarnammal, 21 Ind. Cas. 32; (1913) M. W. N. 685; 14 M. L. T. 196; 25 M. L. J. 367; 38 M. 199, followed.

Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen, 19 Ind. Cas. 683; 41 C. 1, referred to.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Ganjam, in Original Execution Petition No. 67 of 1913, in Original Suit No. 6 of 1903.

FACTS.—The holder of a decree for possession of immovable property and mesne profits first executed it for possession without asking for mesne profits. Some years later an application was made for executing the decree so far as it related to mesne profits. The District Judge allowed the application. The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

Mr. P. Somasundaran, for the Appellants:—The application does not lie as the decree-holder failed to include the present prayer in his application for delivery of possession filed in 1911. Vide section 141, and Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. See also Safdar Ali v. Kishun Lal (1).

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondent:—The case is covered by the decision reported as Balasubramania Chetti v. Swarnammal (2). It was quite competent to the decree-holder to apply for execution piece-meal. Section 141, Civil Procedure Code, is not applicable to execution applications. The case of Safdar Ali v. Kishun Lal (1) is as conflict with the later decision reported as Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (3).

JUDGMENT.—We follow Balasubramania Chetti v. Swarnammal (2) with the reasoning in which we respectfully concur, in preference to Safdar Ali v. Kishun Lal (1). The decision in the latter, moreover, appears to be irreconcilable with that of Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (3). The fact, therefore, that petitioner applied for execution in 1911 without making his present claim for mesne profits is not material. The appeal against order is dismissed with costs.

In a mortgage suit a judgment-debtor against whom an ex parte decree had been passed submitted an application under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code asking to have the ex parte decree set aside, and with the consent of both the parties the decretal amount was deposited in Court by the judgment-debtor, but afterwards the decree-holder objected to this deposit. The Munsif overruled his objection and passed an order declaring the validity of the deposit and granted the application for rehearing the suit. JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The facts out of which this application arises are as follows:—The petitioner obtained a mortgage-decree on the 20th August 1908 on contest against one Behari and ex parte against defendant No. 2, Ramdhani, who is now the opposite party. Behari appealed to the District Judge but his appeal was dismissed. The decree-holder then applied to have the decree made absolute and after securing an order to that effect, he took out execution proceedings and caused the mortgaged property to be sold. He purchased it himself and was put in possession on the 15th September 1914. On the 30th November 1914, Ramdhani, against whom the decree had been passed ex parte, submitted an application under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, asking to have the ex parte decree set aside. On the 30th of January, some sort of agreement was arrived at between the parties to the effect that Ramdhani should pay into Court the decretal amount: and on that being done, the decree-holder should relinquish his claim to the property. Ramdhani deposited in Court the decretal amount as set out in the original decree which had been passed some six or seven years earlier. The decree-holder objected to this deposit and on the 10th March, the learned Munsif heard Pleaders on both sides and recorded the following order:—“In this view of the case the deposit made should be considered to be good. The rehearing petition should be granted after setting aside the decree. After this the necessary orders will be passed on the applicant moving the Court.” The decree-holder obtained a Rule from this Court on the opposite party to show cause why the order just mentioned should not be set aside on the grounds stated in the petition.

It has been urged before us on behalf of the decree-holder, firstly, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain an application under Order IX, rule 13; secondly, that he acted with material irregularity in not requiring from the judgment-debtor compliance with the requisition of Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code; and thirdly, that the judgment-debtor's application was barred by limitation.

With regard to the first contention, the argument on behalf of the decree-holder is that inasmuch as the defendant, Behari, appealed to the District Judge against the original mortgage-decree and that appeal was dismissed, the Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain an application under Order IX, rule 13; and our attention has been drawn to the case of Sankara Bhatta v. Subraya Bhatta (1). That case seems to me authority for holding that the Munsif had no longer jurisdiction to entertain an application under Order IX, rule 13, in respect to the mortgage-decree. The same view was taken in the case of Kumud Nath

(1) 17 M. L. J. 436; 30 M. 535.

RAMAYANAM JOGAMMA v. ENAMANDRA RAMALAKSHMI.

Roy Chowdhry v. Jatindra Nath Chowdhry (2). I think, therefore, that the Munsif's order restoring the original mortgage was made without jurisdiction.

It has been urged, however, by the learned Vakil for the judgment-debtor that this is a case in which we should not interfere. It appears to me, however, that the order passed by the learned Munsif has left matters in such confusion that if it is allowed to stand, the parties may be put to extremely contentious litigation. I find it impossible to understand what the Munsif really intends to do. Another reason which influences me is this: the judgment-debtor alleges that there was a binding compromise between the parties that if the amount due under the decree at the date on which it was originally made were deposited by the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder would give up the property. The decree-holder, however, denies that the compromise was exactly in these terms. He says that what he stipulated for was the amount due under the decree at the time when he purchased the property. The only piece of evidence is the order recorded by the Munsif and I think that as the decree-holder differs regarding the exact terms of the compromise, he should be allowed an opportunity of proving that the terms were as he states. That is the second reason for thinking that the case is not one in which we should decline to interfere. I, therefore, make the Rule absolute, reverse the order of the Munsif setting aside the original decree and restoring the original suit. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, I make no order as to costs.

ROE, J.—I agree, for the reasons given by my learned brother, that the ex parte decree could not be set aside by the Munsif. There being no application on the record to set aside the sale, that sale must stand good. The judgment-debtor may take such steps as he may be advised to take for enforcing the compromise arrived at between the parties on the date of the Munsif's order.

Rule made absolute.

Compromise decree, penal clause in, if can be relieved against.

The power of the Court to grant relief against the enforcement of a penal clause is not confined to contracts between landlord and tenant but extends to compromise decrees also. [p. 249, col. 1.]

Bheema Venkataramana v. Bonnini Gurappa, 28 Ind. Cas. 970; 2 L. W. 537; 28 M. L. J. 488 and Ana Sheik Mohidin v. Vadivalagiamambia Pillai, 22 Ind. Cas. 37; (1914) M. W. N. 92, followed.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Godavari, in Appeal Suit No. 175 of 1913, dated the 18th of December 1913, preferred against the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Amalapuram, in Execution Petition No. 369 of 1913, in Original Suit No. 592 of 1865.

FACTS.—A suit by a Hindu widow for the recovery of possession of certain immoveable properties was compromised, whereby the defendants agreed to pay to the widow Rs. 14 every year on a particular date and in case of failure to deposit the same in Court within 15 days of the specified date and that in default, the widow could recover possession of a portion of the suit properties in execution of the decree in the suit. A decree followed in terms of the compromise. Payments were duly made under the decree from 1866 till 1912 when a default was committed and the widow applied in execution for the enforcement of the clause which provided for possession. The Court of first instance decreed the suit holding that the forfeiture clause could not be relieved against, but on appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit holding that the default was not wilful and could be relieved against. The widow then appealed to the High Court.

Mr. P. Somasundaran, for the Appellant:—The decree being by consent, the Court had no power to interfere with it except by consent. The forfeiture clause could not, therefore, be relieved against.

ABDUL BAHMAN KHAN v. AMIR ALI KHAN.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondent:—The Courts have ample power to relieve against penal clauses in compromise decrees. See Bheema Venkataramana v. Bommini Gurappa (1) and Ana Sheikh Mohidin v. Vadivala-gianombia Pillai (2).

JUDGMENT.

The appellant contends that the doctrine of relief against the enforcement of a penal clause is inapplicable in the case of contracts other than those between landlord and tenant. This is negatived by the authority of Bheema Venkataramana v. Bommini Gurappa (1) and Ana Sheikh Mohidin v. Vadivala-gianombia Pillai (2).

Next it is urged that the District Judge's use of his discretion to grant relief was unjustifiable. We do not agree. Time was not, in our opinion, of the essence of the contract; and the person substantially in fault was in fact the appellant.

The appeal against appellate order fails and is dismissed with costs.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shahid Husain, for the Appellant.

Syed Zahur Ahmad, holding brief of Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-respondents sued in this case to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of a one-third share of certain villages sold by Ali Raza Khan in favour of the defendant-appellant on the 2nd May 1912. The villages in question formed part of Taluqa Gangaon, of which the defendant-appellant is the present taluqdar. The allegation of the plaintiffs-respondents was that the vendor had a superior proprietary right in the said villages to the extent of a one-third share under a decree of the Financial Commissioner dated the 12th July 1869; that even if he was not a superior proprietor he had at all events an under-proprietary right, and that the plaintiffs as kinsmen and co-sharers of the vendor were entitled to pre-emption as against the defendant-appellant who was a stranger. The defence was that neither the plaintiffs nor the vendor had any superior proprietary or under-proprietary right in the villages in question, that they merely held certain shares in the villages in lieu of maintenance and that no suit for pre-emption was maintainable. It was conceded during the hearing of the suit that neither the plaintiffs nor the vendor had any superior proprietary right in the said villages.

The Court of first instance found that the plaintiffs were merely guzaradars or holders of the land in lieu of maintenance and that they had no right to sue for pre-emption. The lower Appellate Court, however, found that the plaintiffs as well as the vendor were under-proprietors and that the suit for pre-emption was maintainable.

It appears that Sher Ali Khan, father of plaintiff No. 1 and Babar Ali Khan,

ABDUL RAHMAN KHAN v. AMIR ALI KHAN.

father of plaintiff No. 2, and Husain Ali Khan, father of the vendor, were paternal cousins of Jahangir Bakhsh Khan, grandfather of the defendant-appellant. They were descended from a common ancestor named Wazir Khan, and the villages in question were originally their joint property. After the annexation of Oudh, Jahangir Bakhsh Khan managed to get the Summary Settlement made with him of the entire property. He subsequently agreed to divide the property with Sher Ali Khan, who probably represented himself and his brothers, Babar Ali Khan and Husain Ali Khan, on the 19th September 1859, allowing Sher Ali Khan to have $1\frac{1}{2}$ pattis forming the villages in question, with the sir appertaining thereto, and retaining the remainder himself. The subsequent grant of a sanad to Jahangir Bakhsh Khan appears, however, to have created a disturbance in the rights of the parties. Sher Ali Khan thereupon moved the British Indian Association to settle his claim. On the 4th July 1869 the Association made an award, granting Sher Ali Khan a decree for $1\frac{1}{2}$ pattis in Taluqa Gangaon, along with certain other property in accordance with the previous agreement dated the 19th September 1859, subject to the payment by him as "haq taluqdari" of ten per cent. of the revenue assessed on the said villages to the taluqdar. The award was approved by the Financial Commissioner on the 12th July 1869. The reference in the award to the previous possession of the plaintiffs and the history of the property, including the agreement of the 19th September 1859, preclude the idea that the grant was made solely in lieu of maintenance, though the effect of the grant of a sanad to Jahangir Bakhsh Khan was to make the latter an absolute proprietor of the taluqa and to give to the junior members of the family a right to maintenance. The award treated the property as the joint property of the family of Wazir Khan. Wazir Khan left three sons, Sarishta Khan, Alam Khan and Khairyat Khan. Sarishta Khan was succeeded by his three sons, Sher Ali Khan, father of plaintiff No. 1, Husain Ali Khan, father of the defendant-vendor, and Babar Ali Khan, father of plaintiff No. 2. Alam Khan left a son, Jahangir Bakhsh Khan, grandfather of the defendant-vendee. Khairyat Khan left certain descendants with whom we are not concerned. After reciting that a custom of jethansi existed under which an elder brother got one-half more than the younger brother, the award stated that the taluqa was known as comprising $3\frac{1}{2}$ pattis because Sarishta Khan, the ancestor of the plaintiff, obtained possession of one patti and a half, while his younger brothers Alam Khan and Khairyat Khan, got one patti each, that there was a custom of division in the family, and that by an award of arbitration, dated the 24th April 1857, and an agreement of partition, dated the 19th September 1859, the plaintiff, who was a descendant of Sarishta Khan, was the owner of one and a half pattis and had been in possession of the same within limitation. It went on to say that qubuliyats in respect of the taluqa were executed from time to time by whichever party happened to be in power, that from 1248 to 1263 Fasli, the plaintiff was also in possession of the taluqa and was recorded as a taluqdar, and that by reason of the previous award and agreement of [partition] the plaintiff could not get a guzara under the rules, but was entitled to the possession of one and a half pattis allotted to his share previous to the sanad. The conclusion at which the British Indian Association arrived was expressed in the following words:—

The plaintiff can get no guzara now. Under the award given by the arbitrators and under the deed, dated 19th September 1859, he is entitled to get possession of one and a half pattis, Taluqa Gangaon, excluding the sir of the pattidari muafti and the old sir land situate in Taluqa Harchandpore, and to rendition of accounts in respect of one and a half pattis, Taluqa Hamirpur, under the conditions of the said deed. But in accordance with the provisions of Act XXVI of 1866, the defendant is entitled to malikana dues in respect of $1\frac{1}{2}$ pattis, Gangaon, and to rendition of accounts in respect of Hamirpur. The plaintiff's claim for a share in Taluqa Badshahpur is improper under the terms of this deed. For the above reasons it is ordered that a decree be passed for $1\frac{1}{2}$ pattis in Taluqa Gangaon and for rendition of accounts in respect of $1\frac{1}{2}$ pattis in Taluqa Hamirpur and the old sir lands situated in Paharapore in conformity with the provisions of the deed in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant, that talugdari dues at 10 per cent. on accounts of revenue of the Taluqa Gangaon and on the rendition of accounts in respect of Hamirpur be regularly paid to the defendant and that the claim for share in Taluqa Badshahpur be dismissed.

The dispute in the present case relates to a share, forming part of $1\frac{1}{2}$ pattis, Taluqa Gangaon. It is obvious from the award, read as a whole, that what was granted was an under-proprietary right in $1\frac{1}{2}$ pattis in recognition of the then plaintiff's previous title and possession, and the reference to the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act and malikana dues shows that the analogy of section 7 of that Act was adopted to fix the amount payable to the superior proprietor. The award was not made under the rules formed by the British Indian Association, which provided a uniform method of settling disputes relating to claims to maintenance, for it expressly states that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim guzara under the rules owing to the previous mutual settlement, and section 33 of Act I of 1869 has also no application because the award was made before that Act came into force. The rules of the British Indian Association, obscure as they were in some respects [Nawab Ali Khan v. Wahid Ali (1)], did not exhaust the powers of the British Indian Association and the Financial Commissioner as private arbitrators to settle disputes about property between the members of a family. They did not purport to deal with cases in which an estate was subject to division and had already been divided, for in regard to persons who were before annexation in possession of definite provision in land as maintenance, they declared that those whose land was excluded from the taluka when the maintenance was given and who got separate qubuliyats in their own names, would fall within the category of under-proprietors under the rules of Sub-Settlement Act and their claims would be adjudicated by the Courts. Awards made by the British Indian Association and by the Financial Commissioner irrespective of those rules were, therefore, as pointed out in Ganga Bakhsh v. Dalip Singh (2) and Bhaiya Ardawan Singh v. Uday Pratab Singh (3), obligatory upon the parties to the submissions and upon those whose interests they represented, to the same extent as those made under the rules, or filed and enforced in the manner provided by section 33 of Act I of 1869.

The subsequent litigation which ensued between the predecessors-in-interest of the parties is not of much value, because in the claim for partition filed by Sher Ali Khan in 1884 and in the mutation proceedings instituted by him in 1885 and 1891 he was claiming a superior proprietary right or the rights of a co-sharer in the village which he did not possess. In the suits for profits brought by him in 1893 and 1900 his right to a share therein subject to a deduction of a certain percentage by way of "haq talugdari" due to the superior proprietor was recognized by the Court.

The learned Counsel for defendant-appellant conceded in the course of his argument that the rights of Sher Ali Khan and his heirs were heritable and transferable in favour of the superior proprietor; but no distinction in principle can be drawn between a sale in favour of the superior proprietor or a sale in favour of a third person, because the consent of the superior proprietor cannot make it valid, if it was otherwise without any right.

I find, therefore, the rights of the vendor in the village in question and those of the plaintiffs and their predecessors-in-interest were those of under-proprietors under the award and the Court below was justified in granting a decree for pre-emption. The other findings arrived at by the Court below are not disputed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 86 (6)—Surrender—Encumbrance—Landlord, liability of—Encumbrancer, consent of—Encumbrance, validity of, limited to tenant and encumbrancer—Landlord, right of, to enter.

The validity of the encumbrance must be limited to the position of the transferor and the transferee i. e., the tenant and the encumbrancer. [p. 253, col. 1.]

A transfer of a portion of non-transferable holding of an occupancy raiyyat is so far valid against the landlord as not to entitle him to enter upon the portion transferred. [p. 253, col. 1.]

Therefore, a surrender made by a transferor without the consent of his transferee is not valid and has not the effect of entitling the landlord to khas possession in disregard of his rights. [p. 253, col. 1.]

Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury, 27 Ind. Cas. 61; 20 C. L. J. 52; 18 C. W. N. 971 (F. B.); 42 C. 172, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, third Court, Mymensingh, dated the 30th June 1911, affirming that of the Munsif, first Court, at that place, dated the 23rd of January 1911.

Babu Satis Chandra Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Defendant No. 4 was a raiyyat with a non-transferable right of occupancy. In 1902 he executed a kat kabala in respect of a part of his holding in favour of defendant No. 1. The term of this kat kabala expired in 1905 and a fresh kat kabala by a registered deed was given for a term of three years up to Agra 1315.

The landlord detained a decree for arrears of rent against defendant No. 4 in 1908 and on the 5th of April 1908 defendant No. 4 gave an istafa of his holding to the landlord by a registered deed stating that he would not be liable for the arrears due. The landlord settled the land with the plaintiff on the 16th April 1898 for five years. The landlord, however, executed his rent-decree and defendant No. 1 paid up the amount in order to save the holding from sale. The plaintiff then entered into possession, but was evicted in execution of decree under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The plaintiff now brings this suit for recovery of possession and the Courts below have given him a decree holding that although the plaintiff may have induced defendant No. 4 to make the surrender, the landlord was no party to any fraud and the plaintiff obtained a valid title by his settlement. It is contended in second appeal before us that the lower Courts are wrong and that in any case no decree for recovery of possession could be passed without charging the property with the just dues of defendant No. 1, who died pending suit and is now represented by his heirs.

Reliance is placed in support of this contention on the provisions of section 86 (6). It is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the encumbrance spoken of in sub-section (6) must be an encumbrance which is binding on the landlord, and this is the view taken by the Court below. The learned Vakil for the appellant on the other hand contends, that the section makes no such restriction and it is quite sufficient if there is an encumbrance which is binding as between the tenant and the encumbrancer. In the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (1) there is a dictum of the learned Judges which favours this latter contention. The question was whether the purchasers of a portion of a non-transferable jote were entitled to claim the protection of section 86 (6). The learned Judges said: "To enable defendants Nos. 1 to 4 to follow sub-section (6) it must be shown that the sale to them was a valid sale; and further the discussion as to the validity of that sale and the resultant interest arising therefrom must be limited to the position of the transferor and the transferees and not to the position of the superior landlord". In the result the learned Judges held that the transfer being a sale was an extinction and not a limitation of the interest of the transferor and was, therefore, not an encumbrance. The correctness of this decision on the latter point has been doubted in the case of Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan Roy (2), but so far as the point in issue is concerned the learned Judges do not seem to have thought that the encumbrance under section 86 (6) must be one that the landlord was bound to accept. Apart from authority if we read the word encumbrance in sub-section 6 as "encumbrance which is binding upon the landlord," here is no necessity for insisting on the consent of the encumbrancer for the validity of the surrender, for he does not run any risk, his rights are ex hypothesi binding on the landlord.

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 116; 14 C. W. N. 229; 11 C. L. J. 16.

We, think, therefore, that the validity of the encumbrance "must be limited to the position of the transferor and the transferee" i. e., the tenant and the encumbrancer. It has been held by the Full Bench that a transfer of a portion of non-transferable holding of an occupancy raiyat is so far valid against the landlord as not to entitle him to enter upon the portion transferred. Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury (3).

We, therefore, think that the surrender in this case made without the consent of defendant No. 1 was not valid and had not the effect of entitling the landlord to khas possession in disregard of his rights.

Then again the landlord went on with the execution of her decree for arrears notwithstanding the surrender and defendant No. 1, who had according to the above view of his rights a subsisting encumbrance on the holding, deposited the decretal amount to prevent the sale and thereby acquired a statutory charge under section 171, Bengal Tenancy Act.

We may further observe that in any view of the case defendant No. 4 owed a duty to defendant No. 1 and upon the findings the plaintiff maliciously induced defendant No. 4 to make the surrender. He was, therefore, an abettor of the fraud of defendant No. 4. All persons concerned in the commission of a fraud are to be treated as principals and it would have been the height of injustice to allow him to reap the fruits of his fraud to the detriment of an innocent party.

(3) 27 Ind Cas, 61; 18 C. W. N. 971; 20 C. L. J. 52;
42 C. 172.

We have no hesitation, therefore, in setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and we do set it aside and dismiss the suit of the plaintiff with costs in all Courts.

Decree set aside.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage which was executed on the 13th of June 1882 in favour of Babu Tulshi Ram by two mortgagors, Hindu Singh and Durjan Singh. The property covered by the mortgage is a 2-annas 7-3/5 pies share of a village called Baswain. One of the mortgagors, Hindu Singh, has died. He was succeeded by his brother, Makrand Singh, and it appears that Makrand Singh gifted his interest in the mortgaged property to the plaintiff in this suit, namely, Madho Singh. The first three defendants in the suit represented the mortgagee, Babu Tulshi Ram. The fourth defendant was Durjan Singh, the other mortgagor, while the fifth defendant apparently is the donee of Durjan Singh's interest in the equity of redemption. The principal defence with which we are concerned here was to the effect that the mortgage in suit was an entirely fictitious transaction. From the written statement it would appear that in the year 1881 Babu Tulshi Ram, who was a Pleader practising in the Sitapur District, bought several zemidari shares belonging to villages in that district. It appears that after these purchases had been made, Babu Tulshi Ram was threatened with a pre-emption suit by one Ujagar Singh and in fact it is admitted that this man Ujagar Singh did ultimately bring a suit for pre-emption. It is said, therefore, that Babu Tulshi Ram, in order to defeat the claim for pre-emption put forward by Ujagar Singh, executed two fictitious sale-deeds in favour of Durjan Singh and Hindu Singh on the 30th October 1881. Having made this farzi transfer Babu Tulshi Ram in order to secure himself, it is said, got a fictitious mortgage-deed executed by Hindu Singh and Durjan Singh in favour of one Babu Salik Ram who was related to him (Tulshi Ram). In short the story for the defence was that Durjan Singh and Hindu Singh had never really any interest in this property, that there was in fact no mortgage and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no case upon which he could ask for a decree for redemption. Both the Courts below have decreed the claim. They have both held that it was not open to the contesting defendants to raise the plea of fraud set out in the written statement of defence. Both the Courts have held that the mortgage-deed in suit must be taken to be a genuine deed and they decreed redemption accordingly. The only ground which is argued here in appeal is that the Courts below were wrong in holding that the defendants were, in the circumstances disclosed, estopped from giving evidence to show the true state of affairs. This contention, I think, can be disposed of in a few words. The law which governs cases of this kind in which parties to fraudulent transactions desire to escape from the consequences of their own acts has been laid down in a variety of cases. Of these, I think it sufficient to refer to one only, namely, the case reported as Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (1). In that case one Hirasa, in order to defeat the claims of certain creditors of his, executed a benami sale-deed of his property in favour of one Hanwantsa. Hanwantsa afterwards conveyed the same property to the plaintiff's deceased father. After this latter transfer the property was attached in execution of a decree by one of the creditors of the original owner, Hirasa. An objection was made to the attachment by the plaintiff's father and the result was that the attachment was raised. The plaintiff's father died. The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of the property and the second defendant impleaded in the case was the original owner, Hirasa. Hirasa put up the defence that he was the real owner of the property and he pleaded that the sale-deed which he had executed in favour of Hanwantsa was benami and was of no effect in law. The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court were of opinion that it was not competent to the second defendant, Hirasa, to maintain a defence of this kind. Various authorities are referred to in the judgment of their Lordships of the Bombay High Court and a reference is made to the well-settled principle that where fraud of this kind has been carried into effect, a party to it cannot, as a plaintiff, plead the fraud to vitiate the transaction. The question before the Bombay High Court, therefore, was whether this principle ought to be applied in cases where a defendant was pleading his own fraud so as to escape liability under the claim made by the plaintiff. Their Lordships were of opinion that the principle should be so applied. There can, I think, be no question as to the soundness of this decision and I think it was properly relied upon by the lower Courts in support of their decisions. It is perfectly clear from the facts admitted by the defendants themselves that in this instance Babu Tulshi Ram successfully perpetrated a fraud by making this bogus transfer of the property. He defeated a rightful claim to pre-emption. It is not possible, therefore, for these defendants now to be heard to say that they are entitled to escape from the consequences of this fraud so as to avoid this claim for redemption. We have before us a deed of mortgage according to which the plaintiff has a right to redeem and the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, who represent Babu Tulshi Ram, are liable to be redeemed, and I agree with both the Courts that these defendants cannot be permitted to say that this deed can now be avoided on the ground that it was executed for the purpose of committing a fraud. My finding, therefore, is that the view of the law taken by the Courts below was correct and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

SARUP NARAIN v. MADHO SINGH.

KUMEDA PROSONNO BHUIYA v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of the first Court at Midnapur dismissing his suit. The plaintiff brought his suit for a declaration that he was an occupancy ryot of certain land mentioned in the plaint. The land in question is situate within the limits of a Government khass mahal. At the trial the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had served notice on the defendant No. 1 pursuant to the terms of section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The other issues the learned Judge decided in favour of the plaintiff. On this appeal coming on for hearing in the first instance, a remand was directed to the lower Court to try the issue as to whether or not notice under section 80 had been served on the defendant No. 1. The learned Subordinate Judge has not certified to this Court that notice under section 80 was in fact served. This finding has not been challenged, nor could it be, by the learned Senior Government Pleader. The defendant No. 1 is, therefore, in the position of an appellant in this appeal.

GADE LAKSHME NARASIMHAM v. PILLALAMARRI JAGANADHA ROW.

Two questions only have been presented to us for our decision, namely, (a) what is the status of the plaintiff and (b) is the present suit barred by limitation? The holding in question is of an extent of 203 bighas odd and, therefore, prima facie the plaintiff is a tenureholder, not a ryot. No document is in existence evidencing the terms on which the plaintiff holds. But the plaintiff called evidence, which the learned Judge accepted, to prove that the tenancy in its inception was granted to the predecessor of the plaintiff for cultivating purposes. In particular the learned Judge relied on the evidence of the plaintiff's witness No. 6, who is stated to be about 87 years of age. The learned Judge remarks that this witness gave his evidence "in so straightforward a manner that even if he had been the only witness on the point still I could never have brought myself to disbelieve him." The evidence for the defendants seems to show that "all the tenants on the land are bhagchasis under the plaintiff." But bhagchasis are not necessarily tenants of the plaintiff [Kade Mandal v. Ahadali Mollah (1)]; it also appears that the plaintiff and his predecessors in former Settlements were described as having the interest of ryots. The plaintiff has also granted rent receipts describing the tenants under him as being under-ryots.

I agree, therefore, with the learned Judge that the presumption created by section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act is rebutted.

The plaintiff and his predecessors having held the land for far more than 12 years have a right of occupancy in the land.

The other question for our determination is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The Record of Rights was finally published on the 14th of September 1908. The plaintiff appears to have preferred an appeal to the Revenue Authorities against the entry on the Record of Rights affecting his status. This appeal was rejected by the Revenue Authorities as being incompetent. The present suit was filed on the 29th of June 1909.

It has been argued by the learned Senior Government Pleader that the present suit is a suit brought in respect of the settlement of any rent or omission to settle any rent under sections 104A to 104F of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The suit, therefore, not having been instituted within the time limited by section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the same is barred.

On the other hand, it is said that the present suit falls within the proviso to section 111A of the Act, which provides that any person who is dissatisfied with an entry in, or omission from, a Record of Rights which concerns a right of which he is in possession, may institute a suit for declaration of his right under Chapter VI of the Specific Relief Act, 1877.

In my opinion the present suit comes under the proviso to section 111A and not under section 104H. A similar view was expressed in a case reported as Promoda Nath Roy v. Asir-ud-din (2). The present appeal must, therefore, be allowed and in lieu of the order for dismissal made by the learned Judge in the Court below the Court should declare that the plaintiff has the status of a ryot with a right of occupancy in the land.

The respondent to the present appeal must pay to the appellant his costs of this appeal and in the Court below. The cross-objection filed by the respondent will be dismissed. We make no order as to the costs thereof.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents, holders of a decree for realization of Rs. 17,094-10-1 from the estate of the late Balarama Doss in the hands of 1st and 7th defendants and other persons not before this Court, claimed an order for attachment and sale. The lower Court's order under appeal granted execution. It is contended that it did so wrongly against the 1st and 7th defendants' share of the estate, because subsequently to the decree they became insolvents, and their share with their other properties vested in the Official Receiver. 1st and 7th defendants held as heirs of Balaram Doss, and that fact cannot be altered by the embodiment of the rights of the latter's creditors in a decree. "The property of a deceased Hindu is not so hypothecated for his debt as to prevent his heir disposing of it or to allow a creditor to follow it in the hands of a third party." Veerasokka Raju v. Papiiah (1). There is, therefore, no question of respondent's right to a lien or charge on Balaram Doss' property in 1st and 7th defendants' hands or in those of the Official Receiver who derived it from them. Section 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been relied on by respondents. But it merely states the extent to which and manner in which debts, such as respondents', can be recovered and in no way provides for the reservation of property to satisfy them. Balaram Doss' estates must accordingly be treated as having vested in the Official Receiver like 1st and 7th defendants' other assets and as being immune from execution proceedings under section 16 (2) of the Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 27th September 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Hardoi, dated the 20th March 1913.

FACTS.—The defendants, landlords, issued a notice of ejectment against the plaintiffs who were recorded in the patwari's papers as ordinary tenants holding without any rent having ever been fixed on the land under their cultivation (arazi ba lagan bila tasfiya). The plaintiffs contested the notice chiefly on the ground that the landlords' remedy against them was to sue them under the Resumption Chapter of the Oudh Rent Act inasmuch as they had never paid any rent, and not to have them ejected by means of a notice issued under section 55 of the Act, inasmuch as the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties because there had been no contract of tenancy between them.

produced the usufructuary mortgage, Exhibit I. There was no endorsement of discharge on it. The Courts below give weight to this piece of evidence, but point out that having regard to the fact that the person through whom the money was said to have been paid was not examined, this evidence is not enough to discharge the burden which lay on the defendants. Mr. Visvanadha Aiyar argues that the burden is on the plaintiff, having regard to illustration (i) of section 114 of the Evidence Act. That section refers to presumptions that may be raised. It does not follow that such presumptions would shift the onus of proof. The presumption is a piece of evidence in favour of the party. I do not think that the decision of Mohammad Mehdi Hasan Khan v. Mandir Das (1) supports the learned Vakil. In that case, the bond contained an endorsement of discharge. The production of the document coupled with the endorsement was regarded as shifting the burden. The present case is, therefore, distinguishable from that decision.

I see no reason to differ from the conclusions of the Courts below.

Babu Hari Kishen Dhaon, holding brief of Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Syed Ali Muhammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant sued in this case for possession of 5 bighas 2 biswas 11 biswansis of land in village Sheogarh and for mesne profits for the three years preceding the suit and for damages on account of certain trees alleged to have been wrongfully cut by the defendants. The defendants pleaded that they were in possession of the disputed land under a lease in perpetuity granted by the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff and that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court. They denied having cut any trees with the exception of a dried mango tree in grove No. 135 khassra. The Courts below found that the defendants were in adverse possession of the land in dispute under assertion of a right to hold the same in perpetuity as lessees and dismissed the claim. In appeal it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the defendants were estopped from asserting a right inconsistent with the lease under which they got possession and that the said lease was ineffectual as against the rights acquired by the plaintiff.

It appears that Gokuldas, the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff, owned a 2-annas 8-pies share in this village and mortgaged the same in favour of Sheo Narain on the 3rd November 1896. Gokuldas subsequently executed a lease in perpetuity in favour of his wife, Musammam Rupan, and his daughter-in-law, Musammam Naurangi, on the 30th May 1899 and gave them possession. On the 22nd October 1911 Sheo Narain obtained a decree on his mortgage against Gokuldas but omitted to implead the said lessees. In execution of that decree the 2-annas 8-pies share belonging to Gokuldas was sold by auction on the 20th April 1904 and purchased by the plaintiff. On the 25th September 1904 the plaintiff took possession of the property purchased. Musammam Rupan and Musammam Naurangi thereupon filed a suit against the plaintiff in the Revenue Court for possession of the land leased to them by Gokuldas, alleging that they had a right to hold the same as permanent lessees and that the plaintiff had unlawfully ejected them. This suit was decreed by the Revenue Court on the 22nd December 1905. In the present suit the plaintiff seeks to treat the defendants as trespassers, alleging that the permanent lease granted by Gokuldas was invalid for want of registration and was not binding on his interest.

It is a well-settled rule of law that a mortgagor cannot execute a lease of the mortgaged property in so far as it may impair the security of the mortgagee or affect prejudicially his rights under the mortgage. A mortgagor in possession may make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management, but cannot, as observed in Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishori Kumari (1), grant a lease on unusual terms or alter the character of the land or authorize its use in a manner prejudicial to the right of the mortgagee. In other words, a mortgagor cannot, by any dealings with the mortgaged property subsequent to the date of the mortgage, injuriously affect the rights of the mortgagee under the prior contract [Qurban Ali v. Raghubar Dayal (2)]. A lease in perpetuity granted by him after the mortgage cannot, therefore, bind the prior mortgagee so far as it may be prejudicial to his rights [Wazir Ali v. Moti Chand (3) and Musammam Ghure v. Musammam Sital Kuar (4)].

The lease in the present suit was not registered and could not affect the property leased. But it can be admitted in evidence to explain the circumstances under which the defendants got into possession. The defendants got into possession of the land leased by the license or permission of Gokuldas, and it is not open to them to deny the title of the person who gave them possession or of the person to whom that title was passed. The learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents contends that though the defendants cannot dispute the proprietary title of the plaintiff, they can set up a right by adverse possession to a limited interest as perpetual lessees. But the alleged adverse possession of the limited interest did not begin till 1905, when defendant No. 3 and the predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 succeeded in obtaining a decree from the Revenue Court. The possession held by them prior to the auction-sale as lessees of Gokuldas terminated after their ejectment in 1904 or 1905, and their alleged adverse possession as permanent lessees did not begin as against the plaintiff till possession was awarded to them by the Revenue Court. The suit has been filed within twelve years from that date, and it is also within twelve years from the date of the auction-sale at which the plaintiff purchased. The defendants' title as permanent lessees has not been yet, therefore, perfected.

It is not, however, open to the plaintiff to treat the defendants as trespassers, for Gokuldas had a right to create a tenancy-at-will. He cannot consequently sue the defendants for possession and damages in the Civil Court, except in regard to the trees alleged to have been cut by the defendants. The plaintiff has given no evidence about the number and value of trees cut. The defendants admit that they cut one dried mango tree from the lease-hold property about a year prior to the suit. That tree was hardly worth more than Rs. 10.

The claim for possession and mesne profits, therefore, fails and is dismissed with the costs relating thereto here and below. In regard to the claim for damages, the plaintiff is allowed Rs. 10, with proportionate costs here and below against the defendants, who will set their costs in proportion from the plaintiff throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Procedure—Disposal of suit in manner not warranted by law—Consent of parties, effect of.

No agreement between the parties to a cause would enable a Court to dispose of a case in a manner not recognised by law or by authority. [p. 261, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Guntur, dated the 25th September 1913, in Appeal Suit No. 22 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Narasarowpet, in Original Suit No. 407 of 1912.

FACTS.—In Original Suit No. 290 of 1910 on the file of District Munsif of Narasarowpet, the defendant obtained a decree against the present plaintiff in respect of a sum of money and this sum was subsequently paid to the defendant by the plaintiff. In the judgment in a connected case, however, the plaintiff's right to sue to recover back the amount so decreed was stated as reserved. The plaintiff, basing his suit upon the said reservation, sued to recover back the amount so paid. The defence was res judicata. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, but the District Judge on appeal reversed the decree and remanded the suit for disposal according to law. The defendant appealed.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Appellant:—The matter is clearly res judicata. The statement in the judgment in the connected case cannot override the provisions of law as to res judicata; consent of parties cannot enable the Court to dispose of the case in a manner not recognised by law.

Mr. P. Chenchiah, for Mr. T. Prakasam for the Respondents:—The rights of parties are governed by the decree in the connected suit and the Judge having expressly reserved this right of the plaintiff to recover by suit the amount so decreed, this suit is maintainable and the order of the lower Appellate Court ought to be upheld.

JUDGMENT.—We regret that we cannot accept the learned District Judge's decision. The decree of the District Munsif in Original Suit No. 290 of 1910, which is pleaded as res judicata, is not, in our opinion, deprived of that character, because (with or without the parties' consent) the present plaintiff's right to sue again to recover back the amount then decreed and paid was referred to in the connected judgment as reserved. The fact, if it be one, that the present defendant agreed to that reservation could not be material. For no agreement between the parties could have enabled the Court to dispose of the case in a manner not recognized by the Civil Procedure Code or by authority.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, the lower Appellate Court's order of remand being set aside and the District Munsif's decision dismissing the suit with costs being restored.

There will be no order as to costs here and in the District Court.

Section 47 of the Oudh Rent Act is intended to protect an unprivileged tenant and not the landlord. [p. 262, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 27th February 1914, modifying that of the Assistant Commissioner, Gonda, dated the 18th December 1913.

Babu Basdeo Lal, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Nath Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals have been referred for the decision of a Bench by an order of the Judicial Commissioner dated 20th November 1914. The plaintiffs-appellants are the lessees of Nandnagar, a village in Gonda belonging to the Balrampur Estate. The respondent in Appeal No. 79 is Jagannath and the respondent in Appeal No. 80 is Lalta. A holding of 41 plots in Nandnagar of an area of 52 bighas 2 biswas was formerly held by Mahabir Barhai, unprivileged tenant, on a cash rent of Rs. 66-8-3. Mahabir was ejected from this holding, and the holding was given to Jagannath on a grain rent under a counterpart, by the terms of which he was to deliver 5/12ths of the produce as rent. A holding of 56 plots in Nandnagar of an area of 62 bighas 3 biswas was formerly held by Bhagat, unprivileged tenant, on a cash rent of Rs. 88-9-3. Bhagat was ejected from the holding and the holding was given to Lalta under a counterpart by the terms of which he was to deliver 5/12ths of the produce as rent. There has been a failure to deliver the share of the produce of the plots in question for a certain period on the part of Jagannath and Lalta. They were sued by the plaintiffs-appellants for arrears of rent in the Court of the Assistant Collector having jurisdiction, and decrees were passed against them on the basis of the estimated value in cash of the share of the produce which they had to deliver. They appealed to the District Judge, who decided that they could not be made liable to pay rent at a rate higher than that paid by their predecessors plus an enhancement of one anna in the rupee, and the amounts awarded in the Court of first instance were reduced accordingly.

The thekadars have come to this Court in second appeal against the decision of the learned District Judge. Under the provisions of section 47 of Act XXII of 1886 the rent of a tenant admitted to the occupation of any land, the tenancy of which has determined according to the provisions of that Act, shall not exceed by more than one anna in the rupee the rent payable by the tenant immediately preceding him, except in the cases mentioned in sections 49 and 50. The provisions of sections 49 and 50 have no application to the facts in these appeals. "Rent" is defined in section 3 (5) of the same Act as "the money or the value of the produce of land, payable on account of the use or occupation of land, or on account of any right in land, or on account of the use of water for irrigation." It thus appears that the rent, i.e., the value of the portion of the produce of land payable on account of the use or occupation of land of a tenant admitted to the occupation of any land, the tenancy of which has determined according to the provisions of Act XXII of 1886, shall not exceed by more than one anna in the rupee or $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. the rent, i.e., the money payable on account of use or occupation of land payable by the tenant immediately preceding him, after consideration is taken of the facts that the rent is now a grain rent and was formerly a cash rent. The tenancy in the case of both plots has been determined according to the provisions of the Act. The word "tenant" in this section means an unprivileged tenant. See Rama Nand v. Nadir Ali Khan (1). The section provides that in no circumstances can an unprivileged tenant succeeding another unprivileged tenant be compelled to pay a rent which amounts on a cash valuation to more than $17/16$ ths of the rent paid by his predecessor. It is argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants that, if this view be accepted, a land-holder would be liable to lose rather than gain by converting a cash rent paid by a previous tenant into a grain rent payable by his successor, inasmuch as while the land-holder cannot demand more than $17/16$ ths of the previous rent at the most, his demand may be reduced to very much less than the previous rent, if his share of produce falls owing to natural causes. It is clearly the case that a land-holder may stand to lose by such conversion. But the fact that he stands to lose cannot affect the determination of the question. The point has to be decided upon the words of the section and not upon a consideration whether it is good policy for a land-holder to convert a cash rent payable by a previous tenant into a grain rent payable by his successor. It has further been pointed out that, while the latter part of section 47 provides for the converse case, where a grain rent payable by a previous tenant is converted into a cash rent payable by his successor, the section is silent with regard to the case disclosed by the particular facts now before us. The principle laid down in the second portion of the section is the principle which, we decide, should be applied. In the second portion of the section it is provided that, when a grain rent has been payable by a preceding tenant, the cash rent payable by his successor shall not exceed the value of the produce previously payable or $1/16$ th. of the average value of the produce annually paid as rent in the preceding three years, and the reason, why an explicit rule is laid down in the case in which a grain rent was payable by the predecessor and a cash rent is payable by the successor and no explicit rule is laid down in the case of a cash rent payable by the predecessor and a grain rent payable by the successor, appears to be because in the former case an explicit rule is necessary, as no cash standard exists, and in the latter case no explicit rule is necessary, as a cash standard exists. The meaning of the section appears to us clear. It is intended to protect an unprivileged tenant succeeding another unprivileged tenant by laying down a maximum rent and directing that, whatever may be the private arrangements made between the land-holder and the tenant, the tenant shall not be liable to more than that maximum. The land-holder is not protected by the provision of a minimum. He was presumably considered capable of protecting himself.

We, therefore, reject these appeals and uphold the decision of the learned District Judge. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondent in both the cases.

Appeals dismissed.

Held, that the terms so omitted to be adopted are not executable with the decree.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 216 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Periyakulam, in Execution Petition Revision No. 600 of 1912 in Original Suit No. 79 of 1911.

FACTS.—The parties to a suit entered into a compromise some of the terms of which were beyond the scope of the suit. The compromise petition containing all the terms of the compromise was filed in Court. The decree that was passed by the Court, while incorporating all the terms of the razinamah, adopted and made executable only such of the terms of the compromise as related to the suit. An application to execute such of the terms as were not made executable by the decree was dismissed by both the lower Courts. The plaintiff then appealed.

Mr. K. S. Ganapathi Iyer, for the Appellant, contended that all the terms of the compromise having been incorporated in the decree, they were executable in their entirety.

Mr. K. N. Aiyar, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—It is argued that the provisions in the compromise petition were made part of the decree and are, therefore, executable with it. But the decree, though it re-produces the razinamah in extenso adopts and makes executable its terms only so far as they relate to the suit against defendants. And we cannot find that the terms 7 and 8 relate to it either directly or, as the District Munsif held, indirectly as indicating a quid pro quo, on which the settlement of the plaint claim was based. Mr. St. G. Jackson, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application presented by Mr. F. Burton, the Manager of the Delhi and London Bank, Limited, Lucknow, for the purpose of obtaining Probate in respect of a document* said to be a Will

*The document referred to was as follows:—

The last Will and testament of Allen Robert Jacobson, at present Deputy Traffic Superintendent, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, Lucknow.

1. I hereby appoint the Manager or the acting Manager (in other words, the Head) of the Delhi and London Bank, Limited, Lucknow, as my sole executor.

2. Having assigned to him the entire sum now and hereafter at my credit in the Provident Fund Institution of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, I request that he will out of the said sum pay,—

Firstly, any sum that may at my death be due to Babu Durga Pershad, now of Husainganj, Lucknow, on account of a joint promissory note for Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand rupees) only executed on the 8th May, 1912 by Rai Jai Narain Bahadur, District Traffic executed by Mr. Allen Robert Jacobson who died at Lucknow on the 21st November last. The usual citations have issued and no one has appeared to contest the application. Various allegations are made in the petition, one of which contained in paragraph 3 points out that there was no attestation clause to the document which purports to be the Will of which Probate is sought. We have examined this document and on a careful consideration of all the materials before us we are of opinion that we are unable to hold that it is a valid Will which has been duly executed in accordance with the provisions of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865). We have taken the evidence of Mr. Burton and also of Mrs. Jacobson, the widow of the deceased, who have deposed that so far as they are aware there is no other document in existence which could be treated as a Will of the deceased. On our finding, therefore, that the Will has not been duly executed in accordance with the provisions of the section above-named we must find that the deceased Mr. Allen Robert Jacobson died intestate. In paragraph 9 of the petition it was represented that if for any reasons the Court considered it proper to grant Letters of Administration instead of Probate, such Letters might be granted to one or other of various members of the family of the deceased. One of these is Mrs. Alice Mary Jacobson, the widow of the deceased. According to the provisions of section 201 of the Indian Succession Act the widow is entitled to have administration, unless the Court sees cause to exclude her either on the ground of personal disqualification or because she has no interest in the estate of the deceased. We have no reason to suppose that Mrs. Jacobson is disqualified in any way, or that she has no interest in the estate of her deceased husband, and we are, therefore, of opinion that she is entitled to have Letters of Administration granted to the estate of her deceased husband. We, therefore, order that Letters of Administration do issue accordingly. As regards security we direct that under section 256 of the Indian Succession Act Mrs. Jacobson do furnish a bond with two sureties to enure for the benefit of the Judges of this Court. The amount of the security required will be the value of the entire estate.

of the properties having been resisted by the present petitioners, M applied for the removal of the obstruction and for the delivery of the property free from the same. This petition was dismissed on 26th November 1902. He then filed a suit for a declaration that the property was liable to be delivered to him free from the resistance or obstruction of the obstructors and was successful not only in the Court of first instance, but also in appeal and in second appeal, the last being disposed of on 26th October 1909. On 23rd August 1912 he again applied for delivery of possession. The obstructors pleaded that the application was barred by limitation. Both the lower Courts held, following Suppa Reddiar v. Avudai Ammal (1), that the present application was only to revive the application originally filed by him for delivery of the properties and so was not barred by limitation. The obstructors then preferred this civil revision petition to the High Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Respondent, raised a preliminary objection that the revision was incompetent because (1) there was no question of jurisdiction involved and (2) the decree being a small cause decree no appeal lay to the District Judge against the decision of the District Munsif and he having erroneously entertained the appeal, a second appeal lay to the High Court and not a revision petition and (3) an erroneous decision on a question of law is not revisable. The following decisions were relied on Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (2); Karmam Sama Row alias Venkata Naranappa v. Roddam Vencoba Row (3) and Kajira Beeviammal v. Fathma Biviammal (4).

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastriar, for the Petitioner:—Though, in its inception, the decree was a small cause decree, by its being transferred to the original side for execution, any decision therein became appealable. The whole procedure followed in the suit is irregular. A suit for a mere declaration that the properties are liable to be delivered ought not to have been entertained. That suit should have contained a prayer for possession and execution should have been taken under that decree. Further the application is barred by limitation.

JUDGMENT.—The point of limitation is one of great difficulty arising out of construction of section 15 of the new Limitation Act. I cannot treat it as a question of jurisdiction. The other point that the whole procedure in the suit for a declaration has been wrong from beginning to end and that the proper suit was one for possession and that execution should have been sought in such a suit was not taken before the lower Courts and I cannot go into it here.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase. [p. 267, col. 2.]

Bodh Singh Doodhoooria v. Gunesh Chunder Sen, 12 B. L. R. 317; 19 W. R. 356; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 253, referred to.

Under the Law of Mitakshara the preference of the whole blood to the half blood is confined to members of the same class, that is to say, to sapindas of the same degree of descent from the common ancestor, and does not extend to persons of different degrees. Therefore a paternal uncle of the half blood excludes from inheritance the cousins although they are the sons of an uncle of the whole blood. [p. 268, col. 2.]

Consolidated appeals from the judgments and decrees of the Allahabad High Court, dated April 9th, 1910 (reported in 6 Ind. Cas. 364) and April 13th, 1911, respectively, reversing the judgments and decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad, dated December 10th, 1906.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. G. E. A. Ross, K. C. and Kemworthy Brown, for Munshi Lall and others, contended that the judgment of the High Court was based on the view expressed in Madan Parijata, which was wrongly regarded as an authority on Mitakshara. In Stoke's Hindu Law Books (Introduction, page 7) Madan Parijata was described as being no authority on Mitakshara. In Morley's Digest (Introduction) it was stated as not an authority on the Benares School at all.

[MR. AMEER ALI: You want to exclude Madan Parijata as an authority and then to establish your proposition.]

The basis of inheritance according to the Mitakshara was propinquity. There was no proper propinquity in the present case as half bloods were not so near as full bloods. In the case of brothers and their sons it was clearly laid down by the Mitakshara that a half brother was to succeed in preference to a nephew of full blood. This could not apply to uncles and their sons as it was expressly left undefined by the Mitakshara.

[LORD SHAW: Your argument is that all these apply to brothers.]

Those of half blood were remote both in point of propinquity and worship. The Mayukha had expressly stated the preference of consins of full blood over half uncles. All authors had drawn upon Manu and the root principle of the Hindu Law was to prefer full blood. At the very most the view of the Mitak- shara regarding brothers was an exception and contrary to the general scheme.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: The Mitakshara modifies it according to custom.]

[LORD SHAW: "In the order of their respective fathers" is vital.]

Reference was made to Mitakshara, Chapter II, sections 3, 4 and 5 verse 4; Stoke's Hindu Law Books: Saravadhikari's Hindu Law of Inheritance; Morley's Digest, Introduction; Manu, Chapter 9, verses 21 and 217; Sacred Books of the East, Volume II, Part 2; Suba Singh v. Sarfaraz Kunwar (1); Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangasami Gounden (2); Sham Singh v. Kishun Sahai (3); Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (4); Vithalrao v. Ramrao (5).

Mr. Lowndes, on behalf of Ganga Sahai, contended that the purchase made by Ganga Sahai was for his sole benefit and not for or on behalf of the heirs of the said Bahadur Singh and referred to Kalka Prasad v. Basant Ram (6).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Dube, for Kesri and others, respondents, contended that the whole principle of succession was laid down by Mitakshara. If it was governed by the consideration of sapindaship, it must apply to brothers.

[MR. AMEER ALI: Is not whole blood more nearly related?]

Once persons of the same class were taken full blood came first. The nearest sapinda, full brother succeeded first; no nephew could succeed in preference to brothers. Heirs were to succeed "successively." It was wholly unnecessary for the Mitakshara to have mentioned that the same principle governed the succession among "uncles and their sons" as applied to brothers and their sons. Madan Parijata was a commentary on Hindu Law. The rule was that the nearest sapinda succeeded.

[LORD SHAW: Uncle should come first.]

GANGA SAHAI v. KESRI.

Mr. Ross, K. C., in reply.

JUDGMENT.

MR. ANEER ALI.—These several consolidated appeals from certain decrees and judgments of the High Court of Allahabad arise out of three suits brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad. The plaintiffs in two of these suits, claiming adversely to each other to be the heirs of one Bahadur Singh, deceased, sought to recover from the appellant, Ganga Sahai, a one-third share of the properties specified in their respective plaints, which he had purchased at a sale held in execution of a decree upon a mortgage to which reference will be made presently. The third suit was brought by Kalka Pershad, one of the plaintiffs in the above suits, to recover from the respondent, Chunni Lal, certain shares in Mouzah Malkapur belonging to the estate of Bahadur Singh which had been conveyed to him by one Gulab Koer, Bahadur's step-mother.

Their Lordships propose to deal first with the two suits in which Ganga Sahai was the defendant.

The mortgage-bond referred to above was executed so long ago as the year 1869 by one Jai Chand Chowdhry, in favour of Bahadur Singh and Debi Din, the ancestor of Ganga Sahai, hypothecating two villages named respectively Tahsipur and Bilaspur. One-third of the amount advanced on this transaction admittedly belonged to Bahadur Singh, and the other two-thirds to Debi Din. On default of payment by Jai Chand, a suit was brought in 1891 by Bahadur Singh in conjunction with Bhima Singh and Ganga Sahai, the heirs and representatives of Debi Din (who had died in the meantime). Bahadur Singh died during the pendency of the suit, and his widow, Lachman Koer, was brought on the record in his place. On the 21st November 1891, the usual mortgage-decree under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) was made by the Court. This was followed on the 27th of April 1893 by the final decree under section 89 of the Act.

It appears from the record that Lachman Koer died somewhere in 1894. On the 20th December 1897, Ganga Sahai applied for execution of the mortgage-decree against the heir and representative of the mortgagor. In his application he expressly reserves the rights of Lachman Koer's heirs. The passage in question is important in view of the contention now raised by him. He states:—

"Bhaman Singh, another decree-holder, has died a natural death. His sons, Mauji Ram and Raj Kunwar, are his heirs; but they do not join in the application hence, under (section) 231 of the Code of Civil Procedure, this decree-holder alone makes this application, and prays that the decree may be executed subject to the rights of the heirs of Musammât Lachman Kunwar and Bhaman Singh."

Bhaman Singh is evidently the same person as Bhima Singh.

The mortgaged properties were accordingly put up to sale on the 20th of February 1899, and purchased by Ganga Sahai. The sale appears to have been duly confirmed and two sale certificates were issued to him in respect of Tahsipur and Bilaspur respectively, and he is admittedly now in possession of the properties.

The two sets of plaintiffs, as already stated, claim to be the heirs of Bahadur Singh adversely to each other; but as against the appellant, Ganga Sahai, they seek identical relief. They say that the purchase by Ganga Sahai of the properties in question was not exclusively for himself, but for the benefit of the heirs and representatives of both mortgagees. The Courts in India have upheld their contention. Ganga Sahai has appealed to this Board and takes his stand on the first clause of section 317 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, which was in force when the sale took place. That clause provides as follows:—

"No suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person, or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims."

In their Lordships' opinion the provisions of that section have no application to the present case. They were designed to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment-debtors, and in no way affect the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase. An example of this will be found in the case of Bodh Singh Doodhooia v. Ganes Chunder Sen (7) decided by this Board in 1873.

The Courts in India were perfectly right in refusing to allow Ganga Sahai to perpetrate a fraud against his co-decree-holders under cover of this section. His application for execution was under section 231 of the Code, and it was made subject to their rights. Had he not even embodied this reservation in his petition, the Court executing the decree would have of its own motion protected the interests of the other decree-holders. Their Lordships agree with the Courts in India that the heirs and representatives of Bahadur Singh are entitled to recover from Ganga Sahai a one-third of the properties purchased by him in execution of the joint mortgage-decree.

The question then arises, who among the two sets of plaintiffs are entitled to the inheritance of Bahadur Singh. At the time of his widow's death in 1894, when the succession passed to the collaterals, Rajaram, his uncle by the half blood, was alive; and he claimed the properties in preference to Kalka Pershad and Jian Lall, the sons of a full paternal uncle named Ganga Pershad. Rajaram has since died and is now represented by his sons and grandsons who are plaintiffs in one of the suits and respondents before this Board. Jian Lall has also died, and his son, Munshi Lall, now stands in his place. Kalka Pershad and Munshi Lall were the plaintiffs in the second suit, and they claimed in opposition to Rajaram to be the heirs of Bahadur Singh by virtue of their relationship to him being of the whole blood.

As the question of heirship was involved in all the three suits they appear to have been tried together; and the Court of first instance held in favour of Jian Lall and Kalka Pershad mainly on the authority of a decision of the Allahabad High Court, which it considered had settled the rule of succession in favour of the heirs related by the whole blood. The District Judge affirmed this decree. On appeal, however, to the High Court, the learned Judges explained that in their judgment in Suba Singh v. Sarfaraz Kunwar (1), on which the (7) 12 B. L. R. 317; 19 W. R. 356; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 253.

lower Courts had relied, they had laid down no such principle as had been inferred; what they meant to decide was simply this, that under the Mitakshara the distinction of whole blood was not confined to the brother and his sons but extends further. And on an examination of the doctrines of the Mitakshara, they held in effect that this preference of the whole blood to the half blood applied to sapindas of the same degree of descent from the common ancestor, and did not apply to persons of different degrees. They were accordingly of opinion that Rajaram being paternal uncle of the half blood was entitled preferentially to the inheritance of Bahadur Singh to the exclusion of his cousins, although they were the sons of an uncle of the whole blood. They accordingly dismissed the claim of Munshi Lall and Kalka Pershad in their suit against Ganga Sahai and others, as also the claim of Kalka Pershad in his suit against Chuni Lall. They at the same time decreed the claim of Rajaram's representatives against Ganga Sahai. Munshi Lall and the representatives of Kalka Pershad, who died during the pendency of the suit, have appealed to His Majesty in Council from these decrees of the High Court dismissing their claim; and the main contention advanced on their behalf is that, although the Mitakshara expressly provides for the succession of the half brother in preference to nephews of the whole blood, there is no such provision in respect of uncles; and further that as it provides for the succession of the grandmother on failure of the father and his descendants it must follow that by the words "the uncles and their sons" Vijnaneswara meant that uncles of the whole blood and their sons should succeed in preference to the issue of another wife of the paternal grandfather. This argument, in their Lordships' opinion, would apply with equal force to the case of half brothers and the sons of brothers of the whole blood. But it is conceded that the author of the Mitakshara has expressly declared that brothers of the half blood come before nephews of the whole blood, and in principle they see no reason to differentiate between the brothers of the propositus and the brothers of his father. Having regard to the general scheme of the Mitakshara, their Lordships think that the preference of the whole blood to the half blood is confined to members of the same class or, to use the language of the Judges of the High Court in Suba Singh v. Sarfaraz Kunwar (1), to "sapindās of the same degrees of descent from the common ancestor," and that, therefore, on the death of Lachman Koer, Rajaram as uncle of the half blood became entitled to the inheritance of Bahadur Singh to the exclusion of his cousins.

In the result all the appeals will be dismissed. Kesri and the other respondents in Appeal No. 83 of 1912 will have all their costs from the appellant, Ganga Sahai. There will be no order as to costs with regard to the other parties.

And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

In a suit brought upon a deed executed by a pardanashin lady the burden of proof rests not with her as attacking, but with the plaintiff as relying upon the deed and he must prove affirmatively and conclusively that it was not only executed by, but was explained to, and really understood by, her acting in the free and independent exercise of her will. It is not necessary, however, to prove affirmatively that she had independent advice at the time of the execution. [p. 271, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—Musammāt Sughra Bibi executed, on 13th February 1905, a mortgage-deed in favour of Babu Kamlapat Ram. This deed was registered on the same date at the executant's residence at Tanda, Fyzabad District, by Hamid Ahmad, Sub-Registrar of Tanda. The deed was for a total consideration of Rs. 1,164-8-6 made up of the following items. It was stated that the executant has executed a deed dated 3rd July 1903, a deed dated 4th November 1903, a pro-note dated 20th April 1904, a pro-note dated 25th November 1904, a pro-note dated 29th November 1904, and a pro-note dated 10th July 1905, in favour of Babu Balak Ram, father of Babu Kamlapat Ram. The amount due on these two deeds and these four pro-notes is stated to have been Rs. 764-8-6 on the 13th February 1905. By the execution of the deed the amount due on the two previous deeds and the four pro-notes was declared to be satisfied. In addition Rs. 400 were paid in cash to the executant. By the deed in suit a share of 6½ annas in the village of Shadipur was hypothecated. The share had been previously hypothecated in favour of Babu Chandi Prasad and Suraj Bhan by a deed dated 20th March 1900. The existence of this deed of the 20th March 1900 was not disclosed by the executant. Under the terms of the deed in suit, in default of payment of interest, it was open to Babu Kamlapat Ram to obtain possession by foreclosure over the mortgaged share. On the 19th November 1908 Babu Trilok Nath, successor of Babu Chandi Prasad and Suraj Bhan, instituted a suit on the foot of the mortgage of 20th March 1900. Babu Kamlapat Ram was joined as a party to that suit in his capacity as puisne mortgagee. On the 19th November 1908 Babu Trilok Nath obtained a decree for Rs. 8,951-4-1 with future interest on the foot of the mortgage of 20th March 1900. On 2nd September 1910 Babu Kamlapat Ram as puisne mortgagee paid into Court Rs. 10,040 in full satisfaction of the decree on the foot of the mortgage of 20th March 1900. He sued subsequently on the 10th September 1910 for possession of the $6\frac{1}{2}$ annas share in default of payment of Rs. 10,040 which he had paid in satisfaction of the decree of 19th November 1908, Rs. 26-12-3 interest on Rs. 10,040, Rs. 2,241-13-6 the amount due on the deed in suit, the total amount being Rs. 12,308-9-9.

Musammât Sughra Bibi in her written statement admitted the execution of the deed of 13th February 1905, but stated that she executed the deed in ignorance of its conditions, that she had received Rs. 400 only, and that she had not been under the impression that she was executing a deed of mortgage, but had believed that she was executing a simple money bond. She pleaded that in the circumstances Babu Kamlapat Ram had obtained no right as a puisne mortgagee, that he had no right to redeem the prior mortgage and that even if it were decided that she had executed the deed of the 13th February 1905 with full knowledge of the contents and had received the consideration detailed in the body of the deed, the conditions of it with regard to the obtaining of possession could not be enforced against her as they were hard and unconscionable.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that Musammât Sughra Bibi had executed the deed of 13th February 1905 with full knowledge of its contents, that at the time that she executed the deed she was capable of conducting her own affairs and of entering into a valid contract, that she did enter into a valid contract, and that she was bound by the terms of the deed. He further held that the conditions were not hard or unconscionable, that they were legally enforceable against the property, that Babu Kamlapat Ram had paid off Rs. 10,040 to satisfy the decree of 19th

November 1908 as puisne mortgagee, and that he was entitled to possession of the $6\frac{1}{2}$ annas share in default of payment of Rs. 12,308-9-9 and Rs. 637-10-0 costs.

Against this decree Musammât Sughra Bibi filed this appeal. The first ground is to the effect that she was incapable of understanding the nature of the deed at the time of executing owing to her physical and mental incapacity. The second ground is that she believed that she was executing a simple bond for Rs. 400 and not a deed of mortgage. The third ground is that she received Rs. 400 as consideration of the deed. The fourth ground is that Babu Kamlapat Ram was not entitled to pay off the decree of 19th November 1908, and the fifth that the Court should, in event of the other points being decided against her, bring the mortgaged property to sale instead of permitting possession to be given to the plaintiff-respondent. It is to be noted that in these grounds of appeal no plea is taken to the effect that the terms of the deed are hard or unconscionable.

Since this appeal was filed Musammât Sughra Bibi has died and has been succeeded by Nihal-ud-din and Musammât Zainab Bibi. Nihal-ud-din is represented by Mr. Ali Muhammad who has argued the appeal on his behalf. Zainab Bibi is represented by Halim-ud-din Ashraf, general agent, who stated on 12th April 1915 at the time of the hearing of the appeal that Zainab Bibi did not wish to prosecute the appeal and withdrew from it. He prayed that in the circumstances Zainab Bibi might be exempted from payment of the costs of this appeal. Mr. Wazir Hasan on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent agreed to the exemption of Zainab Bibi from liability for the costs of the appeal on the understanding that Nihal-ud-din should be considered as the sole appellant in event of failure.

The main argument directed to us by Mr. Ali Muhammad was to the effect that Musammât Sughra Bibi at the time that she executed the deed of 13th February 1905 was a very old and infirm woman who had lost her hearing and had largely lost her sight, that she was a purdanashin lady who did not understand business matters, and that the evidence, properly weighed, showed that she had signed the deed without comprehension of its contents, and in absolute ignorance of what she was committing herself to by acceptance of its conditions. As this deed was executed by a pardanashin lady, the executant is entitled to the protection of the law to the extent that the burden of proof rests not with her as attacking, but with the plaintiff as relying upon the deed, and it is necessary to prove affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was not only executed by, but was explained to, and really understood by, the executant acting in the free and independent exercise of her will. This proposition has been laid down in many cases and has been finally affirmed in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (1). There is, however, no necessity, as is stated in that decision, to prove affirmatively that such a pardanashin lady had independent advice at the time that she executed the deed, and upon a review of all the facts, including the nature of the thing done and the training and the habit of the mind of the executant as well as the proximate circumstances affecting the execution, the conclusion is reached that the obtaining of independent advice would not have made any difference in the result. The Court must decide that the deed should stand. Musammam Sughra Bibi gave evidence upon commission in this case. We have gone through the whole of the evidence which she has given. She was examined on behalf of the plaintiff and was subjected to a long examination-in-chief much of which might have been usefully omitted. We are of opinion after examining the evidence and having heard the arguments of the learned Counsel for the appellant upon it, that at the period when the lady made her statement on commission, that is to say, more than seven years after the deed was executed she was, although hard of hearing and of advanced age, perfectly intelligent and capable of understanding business matters. She showed occasional temper owing to the length of examination-in-chief to which she was subjected, and the nature of some of the questions which were put to her, and made sharp replies on occasions, when she objected to questions. She showed considerable capacity to fence with questions and in addition supplied in the course of her deposition many other reasons for the finding at which the learned Subordinate Judge arrived to the effect that she was still a woman of business habits whose intellect had remained unimpaired in spite of advancing years. At the time that she made her deposition, her sight was irretrievably injured by cataract, but there is nothing to show that at the time that she executed the deed she had difficulty in using her eyes, and the circumstance that she was able to sign the deed in her own hand clearly and plainly would rather show that in 1905 her eye-sight had not been seriously affected. Thus we find that even in 1912 she was a woman of business habits who thoroughly understood what she was doing, and that her capacity to transact her own affairs could not have been less at the time that the deed was executed.

The evidence of the scribe Bindaraban (P. W. No. 4) is to the effect that he had drafted many deeds previously on behalf of the lady. She does not seem to have been capable of reading the deeds herself though she could sign her name in Hindi. His usual practice was to read the deeds after they had been drafted to her. On the occasion of the execution of the deed in question the draft was given to him and he faired it out. He read over the deed to her, a parda dividing them. She made no comment with regard to its contents. After the deed had been executed she admittedly signed it.

The above evidence is reliable in our opinion. It proves clearly and satisfactorily that she understood the conditions and the effect of the deed and that it was not signed under duress but by the free and independent exercise of her will. It has been proved that she had executed the two previous deeds and the four pro-notes to which reference is made in the body of the deed and which were declared satisfied by its execution, that the documents and pro-notes were returned to her, and that she received in addition Rs. 400 in cash at the time of execution. The transaction was a reasonable transaction for any person to enter into. The training and habit of mind of Sughra Bibi were sufficient to enable her to enter into such a transaction without independent advice from any one, and if independent advice had been given to her, there is no reason why she should not have been advised by a competent and unbiased person to execute the deed in suit. The terms were not hard or unconscionable. The rate of interest was not high, and as she was a woman of property, it was well within her power, had she so desired, to pay off the deed and to avoid the consequence of foreclosure. It has been argued that, inasmuch as the attesting witnesses did not actually see the lady sign the deed owing to the fact that a parda intervened between them and her, their attestation is bad in law. It was laid down by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Sarurjigar Begam v. Baroda Kant Mitter (2) that where according to the custom of India, pardanashin ladies are unable to appear before male witnesses, a document which, by independent testimony, is conclusively proved to have been executed by a pardanashin lady, may reasonably be deemed to have been attested by witnesses who were present outside the parda, and who before attestation satisfied themselves that there was no fraud, and that the document had been actually executed by the lady screened off from their gaze. Here the deed is proved to have been executed by Musammat Sughra Bibi. There was no fraud, and the witnesses were in a position to know that the document had been executed by her. Thus the circumstance that a parda intervened between the attesting witnesses and Sughra Bibi affords no reason for invalidating the deed in question. We, therefore, find that Musammat Sughra Bibi had full physical and mental capacity at the time when she executed the deed in suit, that she understood its contents, that she did not believe that she was executing a simple bond for Rs. 400, but that she knew that the consideration stated in the deed was good and good to her knowledge and that, therefore, the deed was effective against her property hypothecated thereby. Kamlapat Ram was palpably entitled as paisne mortgagee to satisfy the decree of 19th November 1908 and to add the amount which he paid for the satisfaction of that decree to the amount due to him under the suit. We find that he did satisfy the decree for the amount stated in his plaint and that the amount due in the decree under appeal has been correctly calculated. We, therefore, find that under the terms of the deed Kamlapat Ram is entitled to possession of the property mortgaged. There is no reason why we should alter the decree into a decree for sale.

The appeal, therefore, fails on every point and we dismiss it accordingly. Nihal-ud-din will pay his own costs of his appeal and those of Babu Kamlapat Ram. Zainab Bibi is exempted from liability to payment of costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. T. Ethiraja Mudaliar, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit filed by the minor plaintiffs through their next friend for an account of the joint family properties belonging to themselves and their father, the defendant, for a partition of the properties and for delivery to them of their share of the properties.

The plaint sets out that the plaintiffs (who are the sons of the defendant) and the defendant are members of an undivided Hindu family possessed of the joint family properties mentioned in the plaint and that they are each entitled to 3rd share therein. The plaintiffs pray for a partition on the ground that the defendant is leading a reckless and immoral life, that he is living in the house of some prostitute or other after having driven his wife out of the house, that he is addicted to drink and that he has not been attending to his business. It is also alleged that he has been threatening to alienate the properties to prejudice the plaintiffs and is denying their rights to the properties, alleging that they are his own absolute properties—bequeathed under the Will of his father.

The defendant filed a written statement denying the allegation in the plaint as to his conduct and character and pleading that of the properties mentioned in the plaint the business of Duff & Co. was bequeathed to him absolutely under the Will of his father, that house No. 1/17 and 2/17 mentioned in the plaint was bequeathed to his mother for life and to him absolutely after her death, that the village mentioned in the plaint was purchased by him after the death of his father for Rs. 8,000, that he paid Rs. 4,000 on account of principal and Rs. 1,000 on account of interest to the vendor, that he improved the property purchased by building a house in the village at a cost of Rs. 1,000. He denies that he has driven his wife out of the house and states that she was not behaving properly towards him and was leaving his house frequently without sufficient reason and that in January 1914, she left his house without his permission and has since then refused to come back to his house though asked to do so. As regards the allegation in the plaint as to his living in the house of some prostitute or other he states that owing to the conduct of his wife who was also a sickly woman, he has for sometime been keeping a woman who is living in No. 3/7, Venkatachela Achari Street, Komaleswarapurpet, Madras, which is connected with house No. 17, Chandrabhan Street, referred to in the plaint as its third compartment. He states that the woman is occupying the house free of rent and that he is paying her only Rs. 15 a month.

The following issues were settled:—

(1) Is it in the interest of the minors that a partition should be effected?

(2) Did the defendant get the business of Duff & Co. under the Will of his father and if so, is it not partible?

(3) What are the joint properties available for partition?

(4) To what relief are plaintiffs entitled?

While the plaintiffs state that the properties mentioned in the plaint are joint family properties, the defendant claims them as his self-acquisitions. There are three items of properties mentioned in the plaint, viz.:

(1) House and ground No. 1/17 and 2/17, Chandrabhan Street, Komaleswarapurpet,

(2) Stock-in-trade, outstandings, goodwill, etc., of the business of Duff & Co., and

(3) Village of Thirunermalai near Pallavaram.

So far as the first two items are concerned, it is admitted that the properties belonged to the grandfather of the plaintiffs. As regards item (3) it is admitted that the property was purchased after the death of the defendant's father by the defendant. It was conceded by the defendant's Vakil at the trial that if items Nos. 1 and 2 are found to be the joint family properties of the plaintiffs and defendant, item No. 3 which was acquired in part with the aid of income from No. 2 would also be joint family property. So far as items Nos. 1 and 2 are concerned it is alleged that the properties were bequeathed to the defendant under a Will which is marked as Exhibit I. This Will has been proved by P. W. No. 1, Perumal Naidu, who is a retired Sub-Assistant Surgeon and is one of the attesting witnesses to the Will. Probate has not been taken out for this Will and the question is whether the Will can be admitted in evidence on behalf of the defendant. On this question I am of opinion that the balance of authorities in Madras is in favour of the view that a Will, though not probated, may be used by a defendant in order to contest the plaintiff's suit. In Janaki v. Dhanu Lal (1) it was held that, although executors cannot establish any right without taking Probate, the existence of a Will cannot be ignored for all purposes whatsoever, and that it is open to the defendant to contest the plaintiff's right by setting up and proving a Will of which Probate was not taken. This case was followed in Carlapatti Chinna Cunniiah v. Cota Wammalivariah (2), where it was held that a defendant was not precluded by section 187 of the Succession Act from setting up an unprobated Will in answer to a plaintiff's claim and Janaki v. Dhanu Lal (1) was relied on. Reference has been made by the plaintiff's Vakil to Lakshamma v. Ratnamma (3), where it was held that section 187 of the Succession Act barred not only the executor or legatee from claiming under an unprobated Will, but also a stranger who seeks to use the Will as a jus tertii, for the purpose of his defence. Janaki v. Dhanu Lal (1) and Carlapatti Chinna Cunniiah v. Cota Wammalivariah (2) are not referred to in the course of the judgment and their Lordships disposed of the question by stating that no authorities have been cited or reasons suggested for the distinction drawn between a plaintiff seeking to prove his unprobated Will and the defendant using the Will as a defence to plaintiff's section. Reference has also been made by the plaintiffs' Vakil to the cases reported as Basanta Kumar Chuckerbutty v. Gopal Chunder Das (4) and Achyytananda Das v. Jagannath Das (5). In the former case it was observed that a Will uncovered by Probate or Letters of Administration cannot be used to prove that anybody named therein has any title to the testator's estate but that there was no absolute prohibition to use it for any other purpose. In the latter case Justice Mookerjee observes as follows:—"That section (section 187 of the Succession Act) merely provides that no right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction shall have granted a Probate of the Will under which the right is claimed or shall have granted Letters of Administration.....; this does not debar the use of the Will in evidence for a purpose other than the establishment of a right as executor or legatee." These cases do not support the extreme view taken in the case of Lakshamma v. Ratnamma (3). I am of opinion that I am bound by the reported decisions as Janaki v. Dhanu Lal (1) and Carlapatti Chinna Cunniiah v. Cota Wammalivariah (2), which have not been referred to or overruled in Lakshamma v. Ratnamma (3). The Will, therefore, is admissible in evidence although it is not probated.

SHADAGOPA NAIDU v. THIRUMALASWAMI NAIDU.

As it is contended by the plaintiffs that the Will even though admissible does not confer any absolute property on the defendant but vests the property in him as joint family property, it is necessary to consider the terms of the Will. Reading the Will as a whole, it seems to me that the scheme of the Will is in favour of the view that the testator intended his sons to take property as joint family property. In paragraph 2 of the Will he sets out the properties he possessed of. In paragraph 3 he gives certain immoveable properties to his daughters. Paragraph 4 which deals with the business of Duff & Co. is as follows:—

my life-time be taken by my eldest son Chi. P. S. Tirumalai Naidu for his share with absolute rights and with powers of gift and sale, conducted carefully and enjoyed." The use of the words 'his share' suggests clearly to my mind that it was taken by his sons as his share of the property of his father. Paragraph 6 gives his sons certain immoveable properties including house No. 1/27 and 2/27, Chandrabhan street, mentioned in the plaint subject to the life-interest of his wife. The most important paragraph is No. 7 which runs as follows:—"If any of my sons die issueless leaving only a widow, the properties comprised in his or their share shall immediately be taken by surviving sons or their male heirs in equal shares and enjoyed and suitable maintenance provided to their widow or widows." It is clear from the above paragraph that the testator intended his sons to take the property as members of a joint and undivided Hindu family with the rights of survivorship inter se. In coming to a conclusion as to whether the properties are taken absolutely or with the incidents of ancestral property, the terms of the Will have to be ascertained as indicating the intention of the testator, and if there are no words indicating a contrary intention, the natural inference is that the father intended his sons to take the property as ancestral property. The principles which are to govern a case like the present have been clearly set out in Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6) where their Lordships observe as follows:—"As the father is at liberty to make any disposition he pleases or to leave his self-acquired property to descend as ancestral property, so when making any disposition in favour of his son he is at liberty to preserve for the property the quality of ancestral property. Whether in any given case the property was intended to pass to the son as ancestral property or as self-acquired property must be a question of intention turning on the construction of the instrument of gift. Following the principles laid down in Mohamed Shumsool Hoodu v. Shewukram (7), I think that if there are no words indicating the contrary intention, the natural inference should be that the father intended his sons to take his property as their ancestral estate." I am of opinion that the defendant under the terms of his father's Will took the properties as joint family properties and that the plaintiffs have an interest therein.

I shall now deal with the issues seriatim:—

First Issue:— It is now settled law that a minor plaintiff can file a suit for partition if there are circumstances which show that it would be for his interest to separate his share and that it is not necessary to prove malversation on the part of the adult members. In Mahadev Balvant v. Lakshman Balvant (8), Mr. Ranade observes as follows:

"It is true some of the earlier decisions required proof of malversation or mismanagement, but the later decisions have laid down both a positive and a negative test, namely, that no suit by a minor co-parcener..... should be allowed, unless his interests are... likely (1) to be advanced thereby, or (2) protected from danger."

The question is whether in the present case it is in the interests of the minors to effect a partition, and I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that it is. The defendant has set up a hostile title and has denied the rights of the minor plaintiffs to any share of the properties and while this is found against it is the duty of the Court to safeguard the interests of the minors by declaring their rights and giving effect to such a declaration. In Kamakshi Ammal v. Chidambara Reddi (9), it was held that a minor plaintiff is entitled without proof or anything more to have a decree for partition as against an adult co-parcener who denies the minor's rights to the properties and sets up an independent and hostile claim. A similar view was taken in Thangam Pillai v. Suppa Pillai (10). In addition to these there is the admitted fact that the defendant is keeping a concubine who is living in a part of the house although it bears a different number. It is unnecessary in this suit to consider whether he has driven out his wife or whether she left him voluntarily as she is not a party to the suit; but the fact remains that the defendant (father of the plaintiffs) has denied the title of his sons and he is now living apart from his wife with a concubine. I think these circumstances are quite sufficient to show that the interests of the plaintiffs would be jeopardized if their rights are not declared and the 1st defendant prevented from dealing with their rights. I find the 1st issue in plaintiffs' favour.

Second Issue:—I have already given my reasons for holding that the business of Duff & Co. is not the absolute property of the defendant but is partible.

Third Issue:—It is not shown that there are any properties available for partition other than those mentioned in the plaint.

Fourth Issue:—There will be a decree declaring that the plaintiffs are each entitled to $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in the properties mentioned in the plaint. As regards item No. 1 their rights to partition can only arise after the death of their grandmother and so at present there would only be a declaration made. As regards items Nos. 2 and 3 the plaintiffs will be entitled to $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share each subject to their liability to pay the debt due to K. Rangiah which was incurred on account of the purchase of item No. 2.

Then the next question is whether I ought in this suit to declare a partition by metes and bounds so far as the village is concerned and to wind up the business of Duff & Co., and give the plaintiffs $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share each in these properties. The plaintiffs have not adduced any evidence of malversation and the plaintiffs' Vakil states that there is no objection to the plaintiffs' rights being declared and their status divided and the defendant appointed as guardian of their person and property. I think this course would, while protecting the plaintiffs adequately, prevent any unnecessary disturbance or disruption in the family. I, therefore, appoint the defendant to be the guardian of the person and properties of the minor plaintiffs and declare that they are members of a divided family from the date of this decree. The defendant will file in Court a balance-sheet every year showing the profits and losses of the business of Duff & Co. As regards the income of properties, I do not think it necessary for the present to make any special order as the plaintiffs are under the protection of the defendant and he will be meeting all their expenses.

A decree will be drawn up in the following terms:—

(1) declaring that the plaintiffs and defendant are members of a divided family from the date of the decree, plaintiffs being entitled to $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share each in the properties mentioned in the plaint;

(2) appointing the defendant as guardian of their person and property without any power of alienation of the immoveable properties without the consent of the Court; and

(3) requiring the defendant to file in Court a balance-sheet every year of the business of Duff & Co., and giving him liberty to appropriate the income of the properties towards the maintenance of himself and the other members of the family until further orders of the Court without any necessity to file any accounts of such expenditure.

As regards the costs of the suit, I am of opinion that the defendant should pay the costs of the plaintiffs as he has substantially failed on all the points set up by him.

Order accordingly.

The appellant's Pleader has cited three rulings before me, all of which come from other Provinces and in all of which a proprietary or under-proprietary title was in issue. It appears that appellant was tenant of some of the plots in suit from before the time of the lease, and there is nothing to show that he had ever set up any definite title to hold in permanency under the lease. The mere fact that the landholder allowed him to remain on, paying the same rent as entered in the lease, is not sufficient to give the tenant a right to hold on in permanency under this lease. Appellant can cite no ruling of this Province in favour of his contention so far as a tenant is concerned.

An appeal under section 102 of Act VIII of 1869 (B. C.) lies only in cases in which a question of right to enhance or vary the rent of a raiyat or tenant or any question relating to a title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto has been determined by the judgment.

Section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides for an appeal in cases where there is a decision on a question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant. These words do not occur in section 102 of Act VIII of 1869; and therefore no second appeal lies in the case governed by section 102.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent valued at less than Rs. 100. A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that no second appeal lies in this case, the only question being as to the amount of rent payable. The case comes from Sylhet and is consequently governed by Act VIII of 1869 (B. C.). An appeal under section 102 of that Act lies only in cases in which a question of right to enhance or vary the rent of a raiyat or tenant or any question relating to a title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto has been determined by the judgment. In several cases it has been held that no appeal lies under that section in cases in which merely a question as to the amount of rent payable is involved. See the cases of Huro Pershad Chuckerbutty v. Sreedam Chunder Chowdhry (1), Hurish Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Sreemutty Huree Bewah (2), Nurubdessur Pershad Roy v. Sheikh Jungola (3). See also the case of Satghuri v. Majidan (4). Section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) provides for an appeal in cases where there is a decision on a question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant. These words do not occur in section 100 of Act VIII of 1869. We are accordingly of opinion that no second appeal lies in this case. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

This judgment will govern the other appeal (Second Appeal No. 2704 of 1911) which is also dismissed with costs.

Mr. Dantra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ormiston, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Connell, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant in the case was a contractor who did some work for the 2nd defendant, the Burma Railways Coy. Ltd., on the Henzada Kyaingin Railway under the superintendence of the 3rd defendant, G. Roberts, who was the Company's District Engineer. Moneys became due to Chanda Singh by the Company in respect of such work. By a document dated the 7th July 1910, Chanda Singh assigned to the plaintiff all moneys which were and would become due to him by the Company in connection with the contracts. On the 1st of December 1910, the plaintiff sent the document to the 3rd defendant as District Engineer with a letter asking him to pay all moneys due to the first defendant to him (the plaintiff).

The 3rd defendant, Roberts, endorsed on this letter "the deed cannot be recognized in accordance with the rules on the subject". Roberts said that he verbally told the plaintiff to take the deed to the Company's auditor who is the officer who disburses moneys. The plaintiff did not do this. He says that he was told that the bills for work done by Chanda Singh would be made out in his name, and he left the document with Roberts. Subsequently he heard that the money due had been paid to Chanda Singh, so he went again to Roberts and was told that the money due had been paid to Chanda Singh. The money had in fact been paid partly to Chanda Singh and partly into the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, under attachments from it. The plaintiff received the document back from the District Engineer on the 14th January 1911, as shown by the receipt produced from the Engineer's office. The plaintiff sues the Company and Roberts for the moneys which he claims should have been paid to him.

The questions in the case are whether the notice given to the District Engineer was a sufficient notice, and whether the Company became liable to pay the plaintiff in consequence of it. There is no case against the 3rd defendant. The debt due to Chanda Singh was an actionable claim as defined in the Transfer of Property Act. Chapter VIII of the Act states the law as regards transfer of such claims. The document effected a valid transfer of the debt as between Chanda Singh and the plaintiff, but the Company were not bound by it unless it received express notice of it in writing conforming to the provisions of section 131 of the Act. The notice required by that section is a notice in writing signed by the transferor—in this case Chanda Singh—or his agent duly authorized in that behalf, or, in case the transferor refuses to sign, by the transferee or by his agent, and the notice must state the name and address of the transferee. The notice given was not a notice by the transferor, and nothing was put before the Company or one of its duly authorized agents to show that the transferor had refused to sign a notice, consequently under the proviso to sub-section (1) of section 130 the Company was not debarred from treating the money as still payable to Chanda Singh.

Further, a notice to the District Engineer was not a sufficient notice to the Company, in the absence of any evidence to show that a District Engineer is an agent of the Company authorized to receive notices of transfers of debts by those to whom it owes money. The public may not be bound by the Company's office or other rules as to whom notices should be given, but when the validity of a notice can be secured by addressing it to the Company itself at its head office in Burma, parties have only themselves to blame if they adopt any other course and then find that the officer to whom they address notices is not an officer authorized by the Company to deal with such matters.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Wasim, holding brief of Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has sprung out of a suit for partition to which the appellant, Mankaran Singh, was a party.

The only matter in dispute here is whether one of the items of property partitioned of which was sought, is joint family property, or property which had been acquired by the appellant's father, Ram Bharose, on his own account. The Courts below have found that this property, an area known as Patti Ram Das, is properly belonging to the joint family.

The finding is one of fact and is binding upon this Court in second appeal unless it can be shown that in coming to it the lower Appellate Court has been guilty of an error of law.

Mr. Sen who supported the appeal argued that the finding was bad in law, inasmuch as it ignores the principle laid down in section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure (cf. section 317 of the old Code) according to which no suit can be maintained against the certified auction-purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made benami. It was contended that because Ram Bharose acquired this patti by purchase at a public auction in 1877 and received a certificate from the Court declaring his title, it was not open to the plaintiff in this partition suit to raise a case that the purchase was on behalf of the family.

The appellant's learned Counsel admitted that the ruling reported as Hari Singh v. Sher Singh (1) was against his contention, but was inclined to contest the correctness of the ruling under the impression that there was no other authority for the view of the Allahabad Court.

It appears, however, that the matter has been settled long ago by the Privy Council in Bodh Singh Doodhooia v. Gunesb Chunder Sen (2), in which, speaking of the provisions of the cognate section of the then Code of Civil Procedure, their Lordships observed that they applied to ordinary benami purchases at execution sales but did not affect purchases of property by one member of a joint Hindu family in his own name but with joint funds.

It is clear, therefore, that section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure was no obstacle in the way of the plaintiff's claim to have this item of property treated as joint family property.

The only other argument advanced was to the effect that if in the circumstances the burden of proving that the property had been acquired by Ram Bharose with funds belonging to himself lay upon the appellant, it had been duly discharged. This, however, is not a contention which can be raised in second appeal for the weight or value of evidence is not a subject for discussion in such cases. There is evidence upon which the lower Court could find that this item of property was joint property.

Mortgage-decree—Attachment of mortgaged properties, whether affects character of decree—Admission.

A decree which is in substance a mortgage-decree for sale, though somewhat inartistically drawn up, does not lose its character as such merely because the mortgaged properties were attached before their sale in execution, nor does the attachment amount to an admission that the decree is not a mortgage-decree for sale but only a money-decree. JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—I have felt some hesitation in adopting the liberal construction of the decree before us for which the respondent contends, because he has already on one occasion executed it by attachment inconsistently with its alleged mortgage character and is now after great delay contending for that character in order to evade the bar of limitation, to which, considered as an ordinary money-decree, it would be subject.

In the cases cited for the respondent, Anna Pillai v. Thangathammal (1) and Lal Behary Singh v. Habibur Rahman (2), the mortgage character of decrees which were not in formal conformity with the requirements of the Transfer of Property Act, was relied on by judgment-debtors and the former was statedly decided with reference to the novelty of the provisions in the Transfer of Property Act as to the form of decrees. But in Fazil Howladar v. Krishna Bundhoo Roy (3) the mortgage character of the decree was relied on by the decree-holder and effect was given to it; and Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi (4), in which the nature of the decree was considered incidentally, contains nothing adverse to the right of the decree-holder as such to take advantage of its mortgage character although he had, as he has done in the case before us, already proceeded by attachment. As regards respondent's attachment it was in fact of the properties, on which the decree-debt was secured and ended in their sale without objection from the appellants; and it has not been shown that any plea of estoppel or res judicata as to the nature of the decree can be founded on it. Though the present application is made under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure, almost eight years after the decree was passed, it is within three years of the sale of the secured property in 1912. In these circumstances I feel justified in following the authorities cited and in dismissing the appeal against appellate order with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The questions arising for decision in this appeal are as follows:—

(1) Was the decree of the 23rd June 1896 in favour of the respondent a mortgage-decree for sale of the properties of the 2nd defendant which properties the plaintiffs prayed in their plaint should be sold for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 500 interest and costs claimed in the plaint in the suit?

(2) If the above first question is answered in the affirmative did the decree-holders lose their legal right to obtain a supplemental personal decree for the balance against the 2nd defendant, (the balance due under the decree after crediting the sums realized by the sale of the mortgaged properties) by reason of the decree-holders having had the mortgaged properties attached before bringing them to sale in execution?

As regards the first question, the decree of 1896 has, no doubt, been drawn up very irregularly. Having regard, however, to the remedy claimed in the plaint in the suit (of 894) and having regard to the judgment in that suit of 1834 which I have perused, I have no reasonable doubt that the 2nd defendant's properties which were offered as security by the said defendant to the plaintiff and which were detailed in the schedule attached to the plaint of 1894, were intended by the decree in the suit to be sold in execution of that decree and that the decree should be construed as a decree for such sale. [See Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetti (5) and Magniram v. Mehdi Hoosein Khan (6) as to the construction of decrees.] In the case of Anna Pillai v. Thangathammal (1) a decree, very similar in terms, was construed as a mortgage-decree for sale. No doubt, that decree was passed in November 1882 soon after the Transfer of Property Act came into force. But a similar decree passed in 1896 (the year of the decree under construction in this case) was again construed by the Calcutta High Court in Lal Behary Singh v. Habibur Rahman (2) as a decree for sale. I would, therefore, agree with the lower Courts as regards the construction of the decree in question.

Coming to the second point, the decree-holders were, no doubt, entitled to bring the mortgaged properties to sale in execution of the decree without an attachment. The decree-holders, however, had the properties attached through Court in execution before they brought them to sale. Having regard to the erroneous practice which went on in many of the mofussil Courts for several years after the Transfer of Property Act came into force, of having even mortgaged properties attached in execution of a decree for sale, I do not think that the decree-holders' conduct should be construed as an admission on their part that the decree was not a mortgage-decree for sale but only a money-decree. The terms of the execution petition which prayed for the attachment are not before us. Even taking their above conduct as an admission of the decree-holders, the said admission is not conclusive against them as an estoppel, it not being alleged or shown that the 2nd defendant and his legal representatives were misled or injured in any way by the said unnecessary proceedings of the decree-holders.

In the result, I would also dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for consideration in this second appeal is whether or not the mortgage-deed in suit was registered in accordance with law. The suit was one for sale of the mortgaged property and one of the pleas raised by way of defence was that the mortgage could not be enforced, inasmuch as the deed had not been validly registered. This contention found favour with the Court of first instance, which dismissed the suit. In appeal the Additional Judge of Lucknow held that there had been good registration of the document and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to succeed. The document in dispute was executed on the 10th of December 1897 to secure a loan of Rs. 1,000 and the property which was hypothecated consisted of an 8-anna share in a village called Bhulia which is situated in the District of Sitapur and of a nim tree situated in Mohall-i Mansurnagar in the city of Lucknow. The deed was registered at Lucknow.

There was some dispute with regard to the second item of the mortgaged property just mentioned. The plaintiffs contended that the plot of land on which this nim tree stood was also hypothecated under the mortgage. The Court below seems to have been of a different opinion and after a careful examination of the mortgage-deed I am satisfied that no land attached to this particular nim tree was intended to be mortgaged. On the language of the deed I am satisfied that the intention was only to mortgage the nim tree. Under section 28 of the Registration Act every document mentioned in section 17, sub-section 1, clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d), and section 18, clauses (a), (b) and (c), must be presented for registration in the office of a Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district the whole or some portion of the property to which such document relates is situated. All documents which fall under the above description must be documents relating to immoveable property. The argument which is put forward here was that, as the nim tree situated in Lucknow was not immoveable but moveable property, and, as admittedly the 8-anna share which was hypothecated was situated in the District of Sitapur, the Sub-Registrar of Lucknow had no jurisdiction to register the deed. In support of this contention reliance is placed upon the definition of the expression "moveable property" contained in section 2, clause (9), of the Registration Act. It is said that a nim tree by itself is moveable property within the meaning of this definition, and the ground on which this interpretation is put forward is that a nim tree must be taken to be standing timber. I have had occasion in a case recently decided to discuss the interpretation of this definition of the expression "moveable property" as used in the Registration Act. See my judgment in Second Civil Appeal No. 421 of 1912 [Ali Bakhsh v. Ghurai (1)]. That was a case relating to a deed of gift which purported to pass the property in certain trees. The deed was not registered and the question for decision was whether the deed being unregistered could operate to transfer any title to the other party. In dealing with that case both the Courts below had treated the trees referred to in the document as moveable property within the meaning of section 2, clause (9), of the Registration Act, and for that purpose they had relied upon a ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported as Mangal Sen v. Musammam Naoli (2). It had been held there that trees were for the purposes of the Registration Act moveable property. I expressed the opinion to which I still adhere that standing trees and standing timber are not convertible terms and I referred to a judgment of the Madras High Court reported as Sukry Kurdeppa v. Goondakull Nagireddi (3). According to that judgment where there is a transaction regarding trees in connection with which an instrument of transfer has been executed, the character of the transaction has to be looked at in order to determine whether or not the trees referred to are standing timber and, therefore, moveable property, or, whether they are to be deemed to be immoveable property. If for example there is no intention that the trees should be severed and used as timber, the transaction would be treated as one relating to immoveable property. Applying this principle to the present case, it seems to me quite clear that it was not the intention of the parties to this mortgage-deed to treat the nim tree situated in Lucknow as moveable property. It was never contemplated that as a result of the mortgage transaction the tree should be severed from the land and used as timber. I have no doubt, therefore, the proper view is that for the purposes of this transaction the tree in question was immoveable property and not moveable property within the meaning of the definition of those terms contained in the Registration Act. This view being accepted, the whole discussion as to the validity of the registration of the document in this case comes to an end. If the tree was, as I hold it to be, immoveable property, then there can be no doubt that under section 28 of the Registration Act the Sub-Registrar of Lucknow had jurisdiction to register it. This, I may observe, was not the ground upon which the lower Appellate Court supported the registration of the deed in question. It is not necessary for me, however, to enter into a discussion of the reasons given by the Judge of the Court below in support of his opinion. For the reasons I have already stated I hold it to be clearly established that the deed was registered in accordance with law.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where rent is assessed for excess land in possession of a tenant as also for new lands taken by him, and one consolidated rent is assessed for all the lands in his possession, there is in essence a new holding created and no question arises as to the enhancement of rent payable by the tenant and section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to such a case. [p. 284, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, five bighas of new lands were added to the original seven bighas and, a consolidated rent was settled by a contract, a new holding was created by the contract and the new rental was not an enhancement of the original rental. [p. 285, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—These appeals are directed against two appellate decrees of the Subordinate Judge made in a suit for arrears of rent. The plaintiff seeks to recover rent from the tenant defendants at the rate of Rs. 38 a year on the strength of a kabulyat executed on the 27th March 1898. The defendants contend that the kabulyat was obtained under circumstances which make it inoperative, and, that at any rate, it is void because it enhances the rent contrary to the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Courts below have overruled the objection that the kabulyat was executed by the tenant defendants under coercion. The Courts have also concurrently held that the kabulyat was in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but they have taken divergent views upon the question of the extent of the relief to which the plaintiff is entitled. The primary Court gave the plaintiff a decree on the footing that the defendants were liable to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 29. Against this decree, both the plaintiff and the defendants appealed. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the appeal of the plaintiff and allowed the appeal of the defendants, with the result that he has held that the defendants are liable to pay rent only at the rate of Rs. 20 a year. The question in controversy consequently is, whether the kabulyat, which is the foundation of the suit, is binding upon the defendants.

It appears that the predecessor of the defendants executed a kabulyat in favour of the plaintiff on the 13th May 1885 in respect of 7 bighas of land. The total rent was fixed at Rs. 15; but the different kinds of lands were assessed at different rates namely, 4 bighas at Rs. 3 per bigha and 3 bighas at Re. 1 per bigha. The kabulyat further recited that 4 bighas out of the 7 bighas were included within the khamar lands of the landlord's and would be surrendered whenever required by the landlord. In 1898, the landlord took steps for resumption of these 4 bighas. It was found at the same time that the tenants were in occupation of one bigha of land in excess of what was comprised in the kabulyat. The tenants also expressly desired to take settlement of an additional 4 bighas of land not included in the original kabulyat. Under these circumstances, the kabulyat of the 27th March 1898 was executed. The aggregate rent was fixed at Rs. 38 for 12 bighas; but the parties agreed that the whole of this sum was not to be payable at once; the rent was, consequently, made progressive, beginning with Rs. 22 a year in 1304 and reaching the maximum of Rs. 38 a year in 1309. The details of the calculation by which the rent was assessed were also set out in the kabulyat, and the rates for the land originally comprised in the holding, for the excess land and for the new land taken by the tenants were specified. It so happens that the figure mentioned for the original 7 bighas, exceeds by more than two annas in the rupee the sum previously payable as rent. Under these circumstances it is argued that the kabulyat was in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention.

Section 29 provides that the money-rent of an occupancy raiyyat may be enhanced by contract, subject to the condition that the rent must not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee the rent previously payable by the raiyyat. This clearly implies that the land held by the occupancy raiyyat remains unchanged; the only variation is in the amount of money-rent paid by him in respect of the land comprised in his holding. Where, as here, the rent is assessed for excess land as also for new lands taken by the tenant, and one consolidated rent is assessed for all the lands, there is in essence a new holding created and no question arises as to the enhancement of rent payable by the tenant. It has been argued, however, on behalf of the respondents that this view is opposed to the decision of this Court in the cases of Kristodhone Ghose v. Brojo Gobindo Roy (1) and Mothura Mohun Lahiri v. Mati Sarkar (2). The first of these cases is of no assistance to the respondents. The only principle enunciated in that decision was, that where the rent of an occupancy raiyyat has been enhanced by more than two annas in the rupee, the entire contract is void and it is not open to the landlord to ask for a decree up to the extent of two annas in the rupee. There is, however, an observation in the case of Mothura Mohun Lahiri v. Mati Sarkar (2) which apparently favours the contention of the respondent. The question arose in that case, whether rent had been increased by reason of an increase in the area of the holding. This Court remanded the case for determination of this question of fact, and then went on to add that supposing it be found that the said rent was partly enhanced rent and partly increased rent, the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover the increased rent, for the contract as evidence by the kabulyat could not be divided into parts, one part referable to a valid transaction and the other part to an invalid transaction. In support of this view reference was made to the case of Kristodhone Ghose v. Brojo Gobindo Roy (1). But the decision last mentioned has no bearing upon the question raised. It may be pointed out that if one consolidated rent has been fixed for the new holding, no question arises as to the division of the contract into two parts, one referable to a valid transaction and the other to an invalid transaction. It has been urged, however, that the view we take may render possible an evasion of the provisions of section 29 by the addition of a nominal quantity of land to the original holding. There is no ground for this apprehension. Whether there has been, in substance, a new holding created, in supersession of the original holding, is a question which must be answered with reference to the circumstances of the individual case; the matter is one of substance, not of form; the Court must determine whether a new holding has been created though it may include the land of the original holding, or whether the parties had recourse to a colourable device to evade the provisions of section 29. If the Court comes to the conclusion, that a new holding has been constituted by the substantial addition of new lands to those of the original holding, section 29 has no application to the new consolidated rental. In the case before us, five bighas of new lands were added to the original seven bighas, and a consolidated rent was settled by the contract of the 27th March 1898. A new holding was clearly created by that instrument and the new rental is plainly not an enhancement of the original rental: Satish Chundra Giri v. Kabiruddin Mallick (3). We are not prepared to accept the view of the Subordinate Judge that the new rental was vitiated by section 29, and that the tenants were liable to pay only at the original rate; nor can we adopt the course taken by the Court of first instance, namely, assess the rent at the original rate in respect of the original lands and at the rate settled by the parties in respect of the excess and of the new lands taken by the tenants; to do so would be clearly to make a new contract for the parties.

The result is that these appeals are allowed; the decrees of the Subordinate Judge set aside and decrees made in favour of the plaintiff for his share of the rent on the footing that rent is payable at the contract rate of Rs. 38 a year. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs in all the Courts in both the appeals. The hearing fee in this Court will be allowed only in one of the appeals.

Appeals allowed.

JUDGMENT.—I cannot interpret the clause upon which the appellant relies as having the effect of conferring a right other than that of pre-emption. It is true that the clause purports to prohibit a transfer to any person other than the vendee under the deed and does not in express terms confer a right of pre-emption. But in effect a right of pre-emption is given, for, if the land in question were offered to the vendee at a fair market-rate and the vendee refused to accept it, it would not be possible for the vendee, after such refusal, to restrain the vendor from transferring the land to another person. A similar view was taken by Strachey, C. J., and Banerji, J., in Bimal Jati v. Biranja Kuar (1). There they construed a clause which prohibited transfer to any person except one, as a clause conferring a right of pre-emption upon that person. It has been argued that a right of pre-emption cannot be created by a contract in Oudh in view of the provisions of the Statute Law. There is nothing in the Statute Law which prohibits the creation of a right of pre-emption in Oudh by a contract. Thus the appellant's remedy was to enforce an alleged right of pre-emption. She had no other remedy. Whether a right of pre-emption remained with her as a successor of the original vendee is a question into which I need not go for the purpose of the decision of this appeal, as it is very clear that any right to which she may have had title to enforce a right of pre-emption was barred under the provisions of the law of limitation at the time when the suit was brought. Her suit must fail, as at the time when she brought it the only relief to which she could be possibly entitled was time-barred.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal. The appellant will pay her own costs and those of the contesting respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—These are appeals from an order of the District Judge of Tinnevely in Original Suit No. 307 of 1911, in the matter of the winding-up of the Swadeshi Steam Navigation Company, Limited. By an order of the 27th April 1912 made in the winding-up the District Judge had held that the charges created by a resolution of the Directors in favour of claimants 23 and 16, the Secretary and Manager of the office of the Company, were not rendered invalid by the provisions of the explanation to section 68 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, and that they did not amount to a fraudulent preference. The claimants then put in the petitions now under appeal for payment out of the assets of the amounts of their charges when the debenture-holders of the Company, whose rights as secured creditors had not been considered in the previous application, appeared and opposed the applications on the ground that their floating security had become fixed or crystallised and had attached on the assets of the Company before the creation of these charges. The District Judge having overruled the objections the debenture-holders have appealed and have raised three contentions in support of their case.

NALLAPERUMAL PILLAI v. KRISHNA AIYANGAR.

In the first place, they rely on the express provision of the debenture-deed, which, after charging all the assets of the Company by way of floating charge and providing that notwithstanding such charge the Company should have power to carry on business and deal with the assets of the Company until default should have been made for six calendar months in the payment of the principal amount which, admittedly happened, provided that from and after the happening of such default the liberty and authority hereinbefore given (to carry on business) shall forthwith cease and determine and the charge created by this debenture shall and may be immediately enforceable.

In this connection, it must be borne in mind that the right of the Company to create a charge of this kind is incident to its right to carry on business, and it is quite clear that no such charge can be created after the Company had actually stopped business or after the debenture-holder had intervened under the powers reserved to him to stop the business by obtaining the appointment of a Receiver or petitioning for the winding-up of the Company. The difficulty arises when, as in the present case, the Company has been allowed to go on carrying on business and creating charges, after the happening of any of the events which determined its right to carry on business. In cases of this kind the Courts have been disposed to hold, at any rate when the language of the deed admits of it, that the right to carry on business is not determined automatically by the happening of one of the events indicated, but continues until the debenture-holder intervenes to show his desire that it should cease, as by applying for a Receiver. In Government Stock Investment and other Securities Company v. Manila Railway Co., Ltd. (1) Lindley, L. J., pointed out the hardship and injustice that must arise to third parties by the debenture-holders allowing the business to go on after the happening of the specified event and then turning round and treating all the transactions as void under the debenture deed, and held that such a result was so unreasonable and undesirable that in the absence of an express provision to that effect it ought not to be held to have been in contemplation of the parties. On appeal the House of Lords in Government Stock and other Securities Investment Company v. Manila Railway Co., Ltd. (2) took the same view and Lord Macnaughten laid down generally that it was the essence of a floating security that it should remain dormant until the undertaking charged ceases to be a going concern or until the person in whose favour the charge is created intervenes.

There was no difficulty in applying that doctrine to the facts of that case, but there is more difficulty when, as in the debenture in Edward Nelson and Company Ltd. v. Faber & Co. (3), which is in terms identical with the debenture here except in a particular which does not seem very material, it is expressly provided that on the happening of a specified event the liberty and authority of the Company to carry on business shall forthwith cease and the charge created by the debenture shall and may be immediately enforceable. In this case, it would almost seem as if these words had been expressly inserted to take the case out of the decision in Government Stock and other Securities Investment Company v. Manila Railway Co., Ltd. (2) and to determine the Company's authority to carry on business automatically without any intervention of the debenture-holders. The Courts, however, lean strongly against such a contention, and Joyce, J., has rejected it in Edward Nelson & Co. v. Faber & Co. (3), a decision which is not appealed against, has been since cited without comment in some cases and in most text-books, though it is omitted from the last edition of Buckley on Companies. In a still later case, Evans v. Rival Granite Quarries Co., Ltd. (4), Fletcher

Moulton, L. J., after referring to the leading cases as to the incidents of a floating security of this kind, observed that in all of the cases the Courts realized that it was impossible to come to any other conclusion than that it was intended to leave the Company free to carry on its business until the time arrived when debenture-holders enforced their security upon the Company's assets and undertaking. And the learned Lord Justice went on to say, not without reference, I cannot help thinking to Edward Nelson's case (3) which had been cited in the argument that, though in the earlier cases the actual words of a particular document may have influenced the Courts, it early became clear to the Judges that this did not depend on the special language used but upon the essence and nature of a security of this kind. On the other hand, Lord Justice Buckley in the same case, seems still to have relied on the language of the document and speaking of the various ways in which crystallization may happen and the security become fixed, he said: "A Receiver may be appointed, or the Company may go into liquidation and the Liquidator be appointed, or any event may happen which is defined as bringing to an end the license to the Company to carry on business."

In this state of the authorities I hesitate to differ from the decision of Joyce, J., reinforced as it is by the observations of Fletcher Moulton, L. J., although it is not strictly binding on me.

As regards the second point, the appellants do not seem to have relied in the lower Court on the fact that the Company had stopped business before the granting of the charges and the evidence taken by the District Judge in the earlier case sufficiently shows that it had not.

The third point is that the charges having been created in favour of officers of the Company—one of them is Secretary and the other had been appointed by resolution Manager of the Company's office—and not having been registered as required by section 68 of the Indian Companies Act of 1882, were not available to the claimants within the meaning of the explanation of that section. This objection was taken by the Liquidator in the earlier case and was overruled by the District Judge, now Mr. Justice Oldfield.

It was again expressly taken in the lower Court in this case but was apparently not argued in view of Mr. Oldfield's decision at an earlier stage. It is not expressly mentioned in the grounds of appeal to us, but as the facts are such as to bring the case prima facie within the terms of the statutory provision, we think that we ought to enforce the provisions of the section if they are applicable. The Companies Act of 1862 whilst providing penalties for failure to register mortgages and charges did not provide that unregistered mortgages and charges should be void, but then there were decisions that it would be inequitable to allow officers of the Company to enforce such charges when created in favour of themselves. The late Sir George Jessel criticised these decisions in several cases, pointing out that they imposed an additional penalty not warranted by the Statute and his view was finally upheld in 1887 by the House of Lords in Wright v. Horton (5). At the time when the Indian Companies Act of 1882 was being drafted and passed into law, the other view still prevailed and the Legislature endeavoured to give effect to it as nearly as possible in the words used in the decided cases. In Patent Bread Machinery Company, In re Valpy and Chaplin, Ex parte (6), Lord Justice James, after observing that the mortgage was not void for want of registration went on:—"But as it is the duty of the officers of the Company to see that every charge specifically affecting property of the Company is registered, I am of opinion that no Director, Manager, or other officer of the Company, can avail himself of a charge which is not registered," and he applied the doctrine to a person who had acted as Solicitor of the Company. The same language was used by the Court of Appeal in South Durham Iron Company, In re, Smith's case (7), where Sir George Jessel interpreted the decisions as meaning that a Director, Manager or officer cannot avail himself of the security. These are all cases in which the officer had taken a charge in respect of advance made by him to the Company and not for arrears of salary due to him.

SYED HUSAIN V. BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LTD.

The explanation to section 68, which appears to be intended to reproduce the ruling of Lord Justice James, in Patent Bread Machinery Co., In re, Talpy & Chaplin, Ex parte (6), as far as possible in his own language, is as follows:—"Omission to register under this section a mortgage or charge does not render it invalid, but the officers of the Company cannot avail themselves as such of a mortgage or charge specifically affecting the property of the Company and not so registered." The words "as such" present some difficulty if they mean as "officers of the Company." It is difficult to see what is meant by the officers of the Company availing themselves of a mortgage or charge, unless it be that they cannot take such mortgages or charges when they are officers of the Company, which is what was laid down in the cases referred to. It is I think, clear, that the Legislature was anxious to reproduce not only the substance but as far as possible the very language of the decisions and that this must be accepted as the meaning of the explanation.

The only other point is whether both the claimants were officers of the Company. The Secretary admitted he was; the other claimant denies that he was an officer of the Company within the meaning of the section and although he would prima facie appear to be such yet, as he appears to rely on special facts which he has not had an opportunity of proving, we have decided to call for a finding as to whether he was an officer of the Company within the meaning of the section when he obtained the charges. Fresh evidence may be taken.

The finding should be submitted in one month after the re-opening of the lower Court after the midsummer vacation. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

The appeals against orders Nos. 24 and 29 to 31 of 1914 are allowed as against the 23rd claimant with costs.

A mortgagor cannot by any dealings with the mortgaged property subsequent to the date of the mortgage affect the rights of the mortgagee under the contract, subject to the condition that the mortgagor's power of alienation is not restricted. The assignee of the mortgaged property can, of course, take only subject to the incumbrance, and, if the property is sold or foreclosed by the mortgagee in proceedings properly taken for the purpose, the interest which the mortgagor may have created subsequent to the mortgage may be destroyed. [p. 291, col. 1.]

A lease granted by a mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage-deed, absolutely prohibiting alienation by him, cannot be declared to be void and inoperative as against the mortgagee, merely on the ground that it has been executed in contravention of the covenant against alienation, inasmuch as such covenants create only a personal liability between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. And the lessee acquires an interest in the equity of redemption and can claim to redeem upon that footing. [p. 290, col. 1; p. 291, col. 1.]

The grant of a long term lease, say for twenty years, by the mortgagor, subsequent to the mortgage, is a transaction prejudicial to the saleable value of the mortgage security and injurious to the interest of the mortgagee. However, the lease cannot on that account be declared to be totally void but holds good in every respect except as to the long period. [p. 292, col. 1.]

SYED HUSAIN V. BANK OF UPPER INDIA LTD.

Where the plaintiff sues for a declaration that a long term lease is void and inoperative as against him, the Court can grant a declaration in a modified form to the effect that the lease is not absolutely void and inoperative, but only in so far as the long term is concerned. [p. 292, col. 1.]

A Court can bind a transferee pendente lite by the result of the litigation, even though his name be not on the record, if the fact of the transfer is admitted before the Court during the progress of the litigation. [p. 292, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 11th December 1912.

Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Banerji and Babu Jiban Krishna Banerji, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case, so far as it is necessary to state them for the purpose of disposing of this appeal, are as follows:

One Saiyad Haider Medhi mortgaged 11 villages to the Bank of Upper India, Limited, by two mortgages dated respectively the 20th June and the 30th November 1903. The mortgages were simple and having been put in suit, decrees for sale were obtained upon them in the year 1910.

According to the plaint (paragraph 4), when the Bank in or about November 1911 began to proceed with execution of the decrees so obtained, it came to its notice that subsequent to the dates of the mortgages the mortgagor had executed various leases of items of the mortgaged property. The particular lease with which we are concerned here is one granted in August 1908 to the defendant-appellant, Mir Saiyad Husain. That was a lease of certain lands, called khalsa land, comprised in one of the mortgaged villages called Rudain, for a term of twenty years, the rent reserved being Rs. 3,166 per annum. The lease was in reality a thela or farm of the right to collect rents.

In both the mortgages executed in favour of the plaintiff Bank there were covenants by the mortgagor that he could not, during the period of the mortgage, alienate by sale, mortgage, gift, farm, lease, or otherwise, the mortgaged property or any portion of it, nor anticipate, nor alienate, the income thereof on any ground whatever.

The present suit was brought by the Bank to obtain a declaration that the lease in question is void and inoperative against the plaintiff's deeds of mortgage and decree for sale, that the village of Rudain is liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage-decrees free from any title or incumbrance created by the said lease and that the lease might be cancelled.

The grounds upon which these reliefs were sought were (1) that the transaction by way of lease was in violation of the covenant against alienation above referred to and (2) that the value of the mortgage security had been thereby impaired, inasmuch as intending purchasers would be discouraged from bidding at the sale on finding that a portion of the property was held on a long term lease at a favourable rent. Various defences were raised, but the only plea we need notice here is one to the effect that the plaintiff was not entitled to the declaration sought. The lower Court has decreed the claim and declared that the mortgaged property can be sold free from any interest created by the lease in question.

The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have been a little uncertain with regard to the validity of the covenant against alienation contained in the mortgage-deeds which he thought might be "open to question;" he was at the same time of opinion that they were executed for the benefit of the mortgagee to the extent of his interest and could, therefore, be enforced by the mortgagee not only against the mortgagor but against all persons claiming under him.

The law as to the operation of these covenants against alienation is well settled in India: the authorities show that such covenants create only a personal liability as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. In the case reported as Radha Pershad Misser v. Monohur Das (1), it was held that such a covenant did not invalidate a zar-i-peshgi lease subsequently granted. Again in Trimbak Jivaji Deshamukha v. Sakharum Gopal (2), it was held that a proviso in a deed of mortgage absolutely prohibiting alienation by the mortgagor could not be given effect to, inasmuch as it deprived the mortgagor of a right which is an essential incident of the estate which he has in the land by virtue of his equity of redemption. It is clear, therefore, that in the present suit the plaintiff Bank was not entitled to claim that the lease in dispute was invalid merely upon the ground that it had been executed in contravention of a covenant against alienation entered into by the mortgagor.

The principle is that the mortgagor cannot by any dealings with the mortgaged property subsequent to the date of the mortgage affect the rights of the mortgagee under the contract, subject to the condition that the mortgagor's power of alienation is not restricted. The assignee of mortgaged property can, of course, take only subject to the incumbrance and if the property is sold or foreclosed by the mortgagee in proceedings properly taken for the purpose, the interest which the mortgagor may have created subsequent to the mortgage may be destroyed.

In the present case if we hold, as we must, that the lease is not invalid because of the contract against alienation, it follows that the lessee, the appellant here, has acquired an interest in the equity of redemption and can claim to redeem upon that footing. And it further follows that if the decree of the Court below is allowed to stand the appellant will necessarily be deprived of his right to redeem. This aspect of the case has not been fully considered by the learned Subordinate Judge. At one portion of his judgment after referring to the ruling in Radha Pershad Misser v. Monohur Das (1), mentioned above, he says that if the defendant-appellant here considered that his position was analogous to that of the holder of the zar-i-peshgi lessee in the Calcutta case, he should have offered to redeem the plaintiff's mortgages as the plaintiff by his present suit had given him an opportunity to redeem. This latter remark can hardly be justified in view of the position taken up by the plaintiff Bank; for the case for the plaintiff is that the lease is void and that the lessee has acquired no interest whatever in the mortgaged property. It is difficult to see how in these circumstances it can be said that the plaintiff has given the defendant an opportunity to redeem in this suit.

The fact is that the suits brought by the Bank were defective inasmuch as the ownership of the equity of redemption was not fully represented in them by having the lessees impleaded as defendants. It is said that the Bank had no knowledge of these leases. That may be, but the fact remains that the lessee here not having been a party to either of the suits is not bound by the decrees and his right of redemption can still be exercised either as against the mortgagee before sale or as against the auction-purchaser after the sale.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the declaration granted by the Court below is one to which the plaintiff was not entitled. The learned Counsel for the respondent has referred in argument to two cases, one of which is reported as Qurban Ali v. Raghubar Dayal (3) where the decision of the Bombay High Court in Macleod v. Kissan Vithal Singh (4) was cited with approval. That was a different case from the one we are now considering. There the contest was between a mortgagee who was suing for possession on the terms of his mortgage and certain lessees holding under leases executed by the mortgagor after the date of the mortgage. It was held, and rightly held, that the mortgagee's right to get possession could not be affected by the subsequent dealings of the mortgagor with the mortgaged property. The question of the right of the lessees to redeem did not arise, nor was the right affected by delivery of possession to the mortgagee.

The other case cited is the one reported as Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishori Kumari (5), in which following the law laid down in certain English cases it was held that a mortgagor in possession may make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management, that he might, for instance, create a tenancy from year to year in the case of agricultural lands or from month to month in the case of houses, but that he might not grant a lease on unusual terms or alter the character of the land or authorise its being used in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he granted the mortgage.

Acting upon this view the learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court held that the lessees in that case, who were relying upon leases granted by the mortgagor between the date of the mortgage and the date of the suit which was brought upon it, could only resist the claim of the plaintiff-auction-purchaser for possession by showing that the leases obtained by them were granted on the usual terms in the ordinary course of management. There again the order which was passed did not, in any way, affect the rights of the lessees to sue for redemption, and there was no such declaration as has been given here, namely, that the leases were altogether void and inoperative as against the mortgagee.

As the lessee in the present case was no party to the suit for sale, his right to redeem is unaffected and is not to be got rid of by a declaration such as the lower Court has given.

The most the mortgagee can claim is that his rights as such, whether under the mortgage or the decree obtained upon it, shall not be prejudiced by the subsequent action of the mortgagor. The right here is to bring the mortgaged property to sale in order to satisfy the mortgage-debt, and we think it must be allowed that the grant of a long term lease such as we find here must be deemed to be a transaction prejudicial to the saleable value of the mortgage security and injurious to the interest of the mortgagee.

We cannot yield to the argument that the suit was premature and that there was no cause of action for this suit for declaration.

We think the proper course is to substitute for the declaration granted by the lower Court a declaration to the effect that neither the mortgagee nor the auction-purchaser shall be bound by the period of the lease, i. e., 20 years, but that the lessee shall be deemed to be a tenant merely from year to year and liable to ejectment on that footing, subject always to his right to redeem if he chooses to exercise it before his tenancy is brought to an end.

With this modification in the decree of the Court below we dismiss the appeal, each party to pay his own costs in this Court.

We note here that the learned Counsel for the respondent Bank informed us during the course of the arguments that the Bank had disposed of its interest in the larger of the two decrees to one Lala Hari Kishan Das, who has not been made a party to the appeal. It is admitted that this transfer has been made pendente lite and as no application had been made by the transferee to be made a party, we did not consider it necessary to adjourn the hearing. The fact that this transfer had been made might well have been communicated to the Court at an earlier stage, but in view of the admission above-mentioned the transferee is bound by the result of these proceedings notwithstanding the fact that his name does not appear upon the record.

Appeal partly allowed.

It is the duty of an Appellate Court to refer to the evidence produced in a case and to adduce from it reasons in support of its conclusions as required by Order XLI, rule 31, Civil Procedure Code; all the more so, when it reverses a decision of a lower Court embodied in a somewhat lengthy judgment. [p. 293, col. 2.]

A lessor cannot justify a re-entry by force under cover of a clause in the lease reserving to him a right of re-entry with or without resort to the Courts in case of breach of all or any of the conditions mentioned in the lease, inasmuch as a condition justifying an entry by force is void as being against law or public policy. made to the Police soon after the occurrence is a relevant fact under section 11 of the Evidence Act and admissible in evidence. [p. 294, col. 2.]

The Judge of a Subordinate Court, however brilliant and well-trained a lawyer he may be, is not entitled to refuse to follow the decision of the High Court to which his Court is subordinate; still less is he entitled to sit in judgment upon the decision of such a High Court and declare it to be erroneous. Mr. John Jackson, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These twelve appeals have arisen out of twelve suits for arrears of rent brought against tenants of two villages, Sivapur and Pipriya, comprised in the taluqa of Mallanpur.

The suits were laid in the Court of an Assistant Collector in the Bahraich District and the plaintiff, who is the appellant here, was Habib Ullah Shah, a thekadar who held a lease of these villages from the taluqdar for a period of seven years, viz., 1313-1319 Fasli.

Some of the suits related to the year 1316 Fasli only, others to the years 1317 and 1318 Fasli, while five of them were for arrears alleged to be due for the years 1316 to 1318 Fasli.

As regards the years prior to 1318 Fasli the defence of the tenants appears to have been that the rents for those years had been paid.

With respect to the claims for the year 1318 Fasli, the plea taken was that the rents for that year had been paid to the taluqdar. It was stated that the right of the lessee to receive the rents had determined before the rabi crop of that year by reason of a breach on his part of a covenant contained in the lease. It was asserted that the lessor, availing himself of the provisions of the covenant, had ousted the lessee and resumed collecting possession.

The Assistant Collector found that there had been no breach of covenant entailing a forfeiture of the lease and that if there had been a re-entry by a taluqdar, it was unlawful and of no effect to extinguish the rights of the lessee. He decreed the claims in full. The tenants appealed to the District Judge. He differed in opinion from the Assistant Collector with regard to the matters just mentioned, allowed all the appeals and directed that all the suits should be dismissed. We are invited now in second appeal to reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court for various reasons set out in the memoranda of appeal. On the other hand the contention for the respondents is that on the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Judge the appeals must be dismissed.

Unfortunately while the Judge has put on record an expression of his opinion as to the several matters of fact which call for determination, he has failed to discuss the evidence on the record (of which there is abundance) and to adduce reasons for the opinions of fact which he has recorded. He has devoted a not inconsiderable portion of his judgment to a discussion of his own in previous cases of a cognate character between this same appellant, Habib Ullah Shah, and certain other tenants and has been concerned to make out that a judgment of this Court by which his decision was revised is erroneous.

Whether or not the evidence in those previous cases was the same as in the cases we are now considering, we do not know nor need we inquire, but at any rate it was the duty of the Judge to refer to the evidence in these present suits and to adduce from it reasons in support of his conclusions, all the more so as he was about to reverse the decision of the first Court embodied in a somewhat lengthy judgment.

The law which governs the principal matter in issue, namely, the right of the plaintiff to receive the rents for the year 1318 Fasli, is plain enough and indeed we have no reason to suppose that the learned Judge was under any misapprehension as to what the law is. There was a written contract of lease between the appellant and the taluqdar. There were various express conditions contained in the instrument with a clause, (Clause XI) providing for a forfeiture in case of breach of all or any of them. This clause purported to reserve to the lessor a right of re-entry with or without resort to the Courts. In other words, the lessor was to be the sole arbiter as to whether or not there was any breach of covenant and he reserved a right of re-entry as and when he chose.

Now it is quite clear both upon principle and authority that a lessor cannot justify a re-entry by force under cover of a clause of this kind. This was laid down in the decision reported as Habibullah Shah v. Surji (1), a decision which, in our opinion, contains a correct exposition of the law.

One of the leading cases in this matter is the case of Edwick v. Hawkes (2), in which it was held that any condition justifying a forcible re-entry by the lessor in the case of a breach of covenant was void as being in violation of the Statute (Act 5 Rich. 2, Stat. 1, c. 8) which in England forbids "an entry 'with a strong hand,' that is to say 'coming with a multitude of people or any excessive number of persons,' to quote the language of Fry, J. The entry according to the words of the Act must be 'in peaceable and easy manner.'"

The law is already the same in India (Cf., for example, the provisions of section 14b of the Code of Criminal Procedure) and a condition justifying an entry by force is void in this country, either on the ground that it is in breach of the Statute or on the ground that it is opposed to public policy as being calculated to lead to a breach of the public peace.

In the present case, therefore, it had to be determined whether or not the lessee's right to receive the rents had become extinguished by reason of a breach of covenant and a subsequent re-entry by the lessor in an easy and peaceable manner. So far as the question of breach of covenant is concerned, all we have in the judgment of the Court below is a statement to the effect that in the previous suits it had been held that the lessee had broken the covenant by getting into arrears with his rent. Nothing is said regarding the evidence on record relating to this particular fact.

Again with respect to the question of re-entry the Judge relies upon his decision in the earlier cases. He states that there was a re-entry and he adds that there is not an iota of evidence on record to show that force was used. He refers to a notice said to have been given on behalf of the lessor to the lessee intimating his intention to enforce the forfeiture, and says that the re-entry took place after the period of 10 days fixed by the notice had expired. There is no clear statement of the acts by which re-entry was effected. And as regards the question of peaceable or forcible re-entry all we have is that there is no evidence to show force was used. We may observe here that we cannot agree with the learned Judge when he says that the fact that a report was made to the Police on behalf of the lessee that the servants of the Mallanpur Estate had overawed his agent at the time of making appraisement, was inadmissible in evidence. If the case was that a forcible re-entry was made on behalf of the lessor upon this particular occasion, then the fact that the report complaining of the use of force or intimidation was made soon after the occurrence was a relevant fact under section 11 of the Evidence Act and admissible in evidence.

The Judge's conclusion as to what took place, namely, that the lessee and his men stood by afraid to resist by force the peaceable entry which was being made by the agents of the taluqdar may be correct, but he has not referred to any evidence supporting that conclusion.

We find ourselves unable, therefore, to dispose of these appeals upon the findings of fact as framed by the Court below and we must, therefore, remit the following issues for determination upon the evidence already upon record, reminding the learned Judge that with reference to the provisions of Order XLI, rule 31, of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is necessary for him to give reasons for his findings :—

1. Was the lessee, Habib Ullah Shah, guilty of breach of any of the covenants contained in his lease?

2. If so, did the breach committed confer upon the lessor a right of re-entry?

(1) 15 Ind. Cas. 857; 15 O. O. 295.

(2) 18 Ch. D. 199; 50 L. J. Ch. 577; 45 L. T. 168; 29 W. R. 914.

SHEODAT PRASAD v. SURAJ BALI.

3. If so, did the lessor in fact re-enter and when?

4. Was the re-entry made peaceably or by force?

5. If the re-entry was effected peaceably did the defendant's tenants, therefore, pay their rents in good faith to the lessor (taluqdar)?

As regards what constitutes a forcible re-entry, we may refer here to a passage from Hawkin's Pleas of the Crown which is referred to with approval by Fry, J., in the case of Edwick v. Hawkes (2), above cited: "It is to be observed that whenever a man, either by his behaviour or speech, at the time of his entry gives those who are in possession of the tenements which he claims just cause to fear that he will do them some bodily hurt if they will not give way to him, his entry is esteemed forcible whether he cause such a terror by carrying with him such an unusual number of servants, or by arming himself in such a manner, as plainly intimates a design to back his pretensions by force, or by actually threatening to kill, maim or beat those who shall continue in possession, or by giving out such speeches as plainly imply a purpose of using force against those who shall make any resistance, as if one say that he will keep his possession in spite of all men."

The return of the findings will be made within six weeks from the receipt by the Judge of this order of remand and ten days, to count from the date of findings, will be allowed to the parties to file objections to them in Court.

In conclusion we feel it our duty to pass some observations on that portion of the lower Court's judgment in which a decision of a Judge of this Court has been characterized as "quite erroneous."

If, as was remarked by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Deni (3), the Judge of the Subordinate Court, however brilliant and well-trained a lawyer he may be, is not entitled to refuse to follow the decision of the High Court to which his Court is subordinate, still less is he entitled to sit in judgment upon the decision of such a High Court and declare it to be erroneous. We can only suppose that the learned Judge was betrayed into so expressing himself on the impulse of the moment and we feel sure that a re-perusal in calmer mood of what he had written would have persuaded him to consciousness of the fact that he was not being as mindful as he should be of the obligation of a Court of inferior jurisdiction to treat the decision of superior Court with proper deference.

We direct the passage in the judgment commencing with the words "with all due respect" and ending with the words "had made a forceable entry" be expunged from the record.

Issues remitted.

Under the ordinary law prevailing in Oudh, the sites in the inhabited area of a village are the property of the zemindar, and a tenant has no right in those sites in absence of evidence. [p. 297, col. 1.]

The waiver of all title to the sites of houses referred to in the Financial Commissioner's order contained in Letter No. 5107, dated 7th August 1868, was only with regard to the inhabited area within the mohallas of the Lucknow City and not with regard to the inhabited area of the villages situate within the Municipal limits of the city. [p. 297, col. 2.]

The mere fact that a land is within Municipal limits does not show that it must be treated as a portion of the city and the zemindar has no right in the sites of houses on that land. [p. 298, col. 2.]

SHEODAT PRASAD v. SURAJ BALI.

Secretary of State for India in Council v. Babu Tarini Prasanno Roy, 9 O. C. 249, referred to.

No inference can be drawn from the fact that the riaya made transfers of sites of houses, to the effect that they set up a title to proprietary possession, or that any cause of action arose owing to such transfers upon which the zemindar was bound to sue for setting aside of the transfers under the penalty of losing his proprietary title; and the fact that the transfers were made without objection by the zemindar, does not give the riaya any title to the sites. [p. 298, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where in a khassra abadi, containing no column in which the name of the proprietors should be entered, such name appears in the remarks column as against some plots, it cannot be concluded that those plots only belong to the proprietor and the remaining to the occupants as proprietors. Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 24th April 1913.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—In the case out of which the appeal arises, the Local Government has taken up for a public purpose certain land within the limits of the Lucknow Municipality. This land is covered with buildings. Compensation for the building materials has been awarded to certain persons and compensation for the sites has been awarded to the same persons. No objection has been taken as to the amount of compensation awarded, and no suggestion is made that the compensation on account of the materials of the houses has been awarded to persons other than the persons entitled to receive it. But the appellants raised before the District Judge the plea that they were the owners of the sites of the buildings, that the persons to whom the compensation for the sites was awarded were mere licensees and that the compensation for the sites should have been awarded to them as owners. The learned District Judge decided against this plea and the present appeal has been made against that portion of his decision.

The land in question is situated in a part of the Lucknow City which is known as Mouza Kundri. This area of Kundri is not a mohalla, although it is within Municipal limits, is densely covered with houses, and is indistinguishable on its general appearance from a portion of the city proper. But the papers were prepared for this area at the time of Settlement as though it were a village and not a portion of the city. I have before me a khassra abadi for a mohalla in the City of Lucknow and this khassra abadi contains particulars of a very detailed nature which are not entered in the khassra abadi of villages.

The khassra abadi of Kundri is the ordinary khassra abadi of a village. I find that in the Regular Settlement of Lucknow the final authority heard claims to proprietary title to the village of Kundri made by several persons. The history of the village given in the wajib-ul-arz which was prepared at the time is to the effect that the village had formerly belonged to zemindars but that the whole area known as Kundri had been confiscated by Saadat Ali Khan who was King of Oudh from 1798 to 1814. At the time of the annexation this village was the nazul property of the King and as such passed to the British Crown. Certain claims were advanced to its proprietary title, but these claims were rejected and the village as a whole was declared to be nazul property. The essential portion of the Settlement decree is: "It is clearly useless to go into this case. The alleged village is in the heart of the city and only 15 bighas are cultivated. It is very clear that since 1184 Fasli anyhow the village has been treated as State property, and neither Chubeela nor Ram Narain have had proprietary possession within limits. To apply Ruling No. 3 in favour of a man who has no claim to proprietary title, is in the opinion of this Court always wrong, and in this case would cause confusion with respect to Municipal claims. I, therefore, decree proprietary title in Kundri to Government and dismiss the only adverse claim advanced, that of Ram Narain Kaeth."

The decree is dated the 2nd of August 1864.

It is clear from it that as far back as 1864 Kundri was within Municipal limits, and was to all intents and purposes a portion of the city. Nevertheless the Settlement authorities treated it as a village. A wajib-ul-arz was prepared and in this wajib-ul-arz there is nothing said as to the rights of subordinate holders. Nothing is said as to the rights of riaya to own the sites of their houses. There is no clause prohibiting transfer of licensees' right by riaya.

SHEODAT PRASAD v. SURAJ BALI.

On the 16th June 1888 Sir Auckland Colvin, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces and Chief Commissioner of Oudh, made a grant of this village to Risaldar Major Isri Prasad, Sirdar Bahadur, C. I. E., and by this grant he conferred on him the full proprietary right, title and possession of the village of Kundri. The appellants are the descendants of Risaldar Major Isri Prasad. It is clear that by this grant the Crown transferred to the Risaldar Major all rights which it possessed itself in the village of Kundri. Under the ordinary law prevailing in Oudh, the sites in the inhabited area of a village are the property of the zemindar, and a tenant has no right in the site in an inhabited area in absence of evidence. It is possible for him to be decreed such a right if he is able to establish a case in support of it, but I am unable to find that any tenant has ever been decreed title to a site in the inhabited area of Kundri. The Settlement Record shows that certain groves have been decreed to third parties as their absolute property, but there is nothing to show that sites of houses were decreed to tenants. The claims of the persons who have received compensation in respect of these sites acquired, would have been best supported by proof that each one has obtained title individually to the site for which he has obtained compensation. No attempt has been made to prove such title.

The learned Counsel for the respondents suggests that in the year 1868 Government waived all title to the sites of houses within Lucknow Municipal limits, with the exception of certain sites which had already been claimed as nazul or which were at that time unoccupied by buildings, and that this general waiver of title covers the cases of his clients. This waiver is stated to have been contained in a certain order of the Financial Commissioner conveyed in a Letter No. 5107, dated the 7th August 1868. No attempt has been made in this case to prove the contents of the letter. But I have been referred to page 111, Appendix I, of the Lucknow Settlement Report of 1873, where in paragraph 8 reference is made to the letter. I do not find that there is anything in this paragraph to support the respondents' case. Appendix

I contains a short history of the survey of the Lucknow City. I find that a survey was made of that portion of the city consisting of mohallas. Records and maps were prepared in accordance with that survey, and the records were embodied in 162 volumes, each consisting of a khassra and a map of the mohalla or in certain cases of two mohallas which were numbered as one. But this survey, it is to be noted, was only a survey of such portions of Lucknow City as were known as mohallas. This is clear from paragraph 10. Outside the area of these mohallas, but within Municipal limits, there was a large number of villages. It is explained in paragraph 10 that no such survey was made of those villages, as it was considered that the advantages gained from such a survey would not justify the expenses that would have been entailed, and as those villages had been surveyed by the Settlement Department for fiscal purposes. The nature of the survey made of those villages was as follows:—

The cultivated and culturable lands were demarcated and plotted, but the inhabited area was only roughly plotted and no detailed survey was made with regard to the inhabited area. Paragraph 13 shows that Kundri was one of those villages. I have not, as I have stated, a copy of the Financial Commissioner's order of the 7th August 1868 before me. But as I read the Report, I find that the waiver of rights referred to in that letter was only with regard to the inhabited area within the mohallas and not with regard to the inhabited area within the villages. Thus no conclusion can be drawn in favour of the respondents' suggestion from the circumstance that such a waiver was made. It would appear that Government, while waiving its rights within the mohallas, did not annul the zemindar's rights within the villages, and in cases where Government itself was a zemindar in the villages, it did not waive its own rights as zemindar. The respondents are thus left to prove their title. The area of Kundri is, as I have found, a village and ordinarily the inhabited area would belong to the zemindar. The King of Oudh was formerly zemindar. He was succeeded by the British Government and the British Government was succeeded by the predecessor of the present appellants. The circumstance that the village is within the Municipal area, and that to the eye of an ordinary observer it would not differ from a mohalla, are immaterial. The learned District Judge considered that, as the land was within Municipal limits, it must be treated as a portion of the city, and that the zemindar would have no rights in the sites of houses. The attention of the learned District Judge was clearly not called to the decision of Mr. Chamier in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Babu Tarini Prasanno Roy (1), in which an exactly similar question was raised with regard to the ownership of a site within the Municipal limits of Lucknow City forming a portion of the village of Khalispur, a village which is mentioned in paragraph 13 of Appendix I of the Lucknow Settlement Report to which I have already referred. Both Kundri and Khalispur are mentioned in that paragraph. The effect of the order of the Financial Commissioner of 7th August 1868 is discussed in that judgment and it appears that the actual order was before the Court in that case. It was held in that case not only that the Financial Commissioner's docket of August the 7th, 1868, could not be treated as a renunciation of the rights of Government in the inhabited area of Khalispur, but that the occupant of a site in Lucknow City within the area of Khalispur had no claim to proprietary title in the site. It is further set up that a large number of transfers of houses and sites have taken place in Kundri. The circumstances in which these transfers were made have not been proved. The respondents satisfied themselves with putting in copies of deeds of transfers, a method of proof which cannot ordinarily shed much light upon the actual facts, as the contents of such deeds seldom disclose the actual history of the transfers. Accepting these documents at their highest value, they show nothing more than that Government in the first instance and the transferee in the second instance took no exception to licensees transferring their rights as licensees. No inference can be drawn from the fact that such transfers were made, to the effect either that riaya set up a title to proprietary possession, or that any cause of action arose owing to such transfers upon which it was incumbent on the zemindar to sue to have the transfers set aside under the penalty of losing his proprietary title. The fact that the licensees transferred without objection by the proprietor their title as licensees would give them no title to the sites and no claim to recover compensation from Government in the event of compulsory acquisition of the land for public purposes.

The last point that remains on which stress has been laid by the learned District Judge is with reference to the method in which the entries in the khasra abadi have been written. The khasra abadi contains no column in which the name of the proprietor of the plots should be entered, and the obvious reason for the omission of a column would appear to be that in an ordinary village, as the inhabited area belongs to the proprietor, it is not necessary to enter the fact that such is the case. In the remarks column, in which all Courts must have noticed that much extraneous and unnecessary matter is frequently entered by the subordinates who prepare such papers, I find a few plots entered as nazul property. In most cases where the plots are entered in the remarks column as nazul property, they are unoccupied by any tenant and the meaning of the entry would apparently be that the Crown is both the proprietor and the occupier of the plot. In certain cases, however, the name of some person is entered as occupier. In some of the latter cases the meaning would appear to be that the name so entered is the name of the former occupant, although the plot was unoccupied and the Crown was in constructive possession. In other cases it would appear that the plot had formerly been unoccupied and in the constructive possession of the Crown, but that it had been temporarily leased to a small shop-keeper. Ordinarily it would seem that old occupants of sites in the Kundri inhabited area whose occupation was of long standing paid no ground rent for the use and occupation of the land. But in cases in which there were no occupants, the Crown may have charged ground rent to persons occupying for a temporary period. It is not absolutely clear what these entries mean. But the conclusion drawn by the learned District Judge to the effect that, because certain plots are entered as nazul, it must be assumed that those plots only belong to the Crown as proprietor, and that the remaining plots belong to the occupiers as proprietors, is not a conclusion which I can accept.

Thus it is established that the appellants as zemindars of Kundri are entitled to proprietary rights in all sites in the inhabited area in absence of evidence that proprietary title in those sites has been acquired by other persons. In this case there is nothing to show that proprietary title with regard to the sites, the compensation for which is now in dispute, has been acquired by any other person.

The appeal, therefore, succeeds. I decree this appeal and direct that the compensation in question be awarded to the appellants. The respondents will pay their own costs and those of the appellants in all Courts.

Benami transactions—English Law, resemblance with—Relationship—Criterion—Practice—Document, effect of non-production of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 116—Estoppel between landlord and tenant.

A benami transaction is a dealing common to Hindus and Musalmans in India. It is quite unobjectionable and has a curious resemblance to the doctrine of English Law that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase-money, and this again follows the analogy of Common Law that where a feoffment is made without consideration the use results to the feoffee. The exception in English Law by way of advancement in favour of wife or child does not apply in India, but the relationship is a circumstance which is taken into consideration in India in determining whether the transaction is benami or not. The criterion in these cases in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid. [p. 302, cols. 1 & 2.]

Doe d Knight v. Smythe, (1815) 4 M. & S. 347; 105 E. R. 862; 16 R. R. 486 and Bayley v. Bradley, (1848) 5 C. B. 396 at p. 400; 16 L. J. O. P. 206; 135 E. R. 93? 75 R. R. 764, referred to.

A taluqdar, who had two Hindu wives and a Musalman mistress, purchased a bungalow, the sale-deed being made out and registered in the name of his mistress. The purchase-money he raised by a mortgage on his own property and he had the sole use and enjoyment of the bungalow for himself and his wives during his own life. The wives used it by his permission for a religious purpose for a month at a time, while the mistress was never in it during this period. In fact the bungalow was quite useless to her for any personal use, and it was wholly inappropriate as a provision for her. The sale-deed, however, was in her possession:

Held, that the purchase was a benami transaction and that the mistress had no title to the bungalow. [p. 302, col. 2.]

It is open to a litigant to refrain from producing any documents that he considers irrelevant; if the other litigant is dissatisfied it is for him to apply for an affidavit of documents, and he can obtain inspection and production of all that appears to him in such affidavit to be relevant and proper. If he fails to do so neither he nor the Court at his suggestion is entitled to draw any inference as to the contents of any such documents. [p. 303, col. 1.]

It is for the litigant who desires to rely on the contents of documents to put them in evidence in the usual and proper way; if he fails to do so no inference in his favour can be drawn as to the contents thereof. [p. 303, col. 1.]

A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be as long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. [p. 303, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Allahabad, High Court, dated the 10th May 1910, reversing those of the Small Cause Court Judge, exercising the powers of a Sub-Judge, Allahabad, dated the 26th August 1908.

FACTS.—One Rai Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was a taluqdar of Oudh with an annual income of Rs. 60,000. He had two Hindu wives, Balraj Koer and Bilas Koer, one of whom bore him a daughter only. By his Muhammadan mistress, Jagmar Bibi, he had two sons, Zahir-ul-Hasan and Zahur-ul-Hasan. In 1887 he bought a bungalow, 1 Stanley Road, Allahabad, in the name of Jagmar Bibi for Rs. 9,000, whose name was recorded as owner in the Municipal registers and who always paid the ground rent in respect thereof and received such profits as accrued. In 1888 he acquired for his sons possession of a village as mortgagees. He died in 1890. During his life-time his mukhtars and other servants looked after the bungalow and the same arrangement continued after his death. In 1900, Dr. Desraj Ranjit Singh went into occupation of the bungalow and in 1905 bought the same from Jagmar and her sons. The senior widow, Balraj Koer, instituted a suit for the recovery of the possession of the bungalow. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff, but on appeal the same was reversed. Mr. Roshan Lall, Barrister-at-law's statement that the taluqdar had stated to him that the bungalow was bought for Jagmar on whose behalf it was let into him, and the possession of the title-deeds by Jagmar, were relied upon to support her title. The appellant, whose name was substituted on the death of Balraj Koer, her co-widow, then obtained leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in due course.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. G. E. A. Ross, K. C., for the Appellant, contended that there were two questions involved in this appeal: (1) benami transaction and (2) estoppel. By section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act the respondents, who had obtained possession of the bungalow as tenants from the appellant and to whom they paid rent regularly, were estopped from denying the appellant's title unless and until they had given up the possession thereof and then re-took possession of the same. The transaction was really benami according to the habit of the people of India, who often buy properties in the name of others. The bungalow was bought for the use of the taluqdar and his Hindu wives to be used for kalapbas at Allahabad. It was of no use whatever to Jagmar who lived at a great distance from the place, nor was it any good from the point of view of income as it was very little indeed and sometimes none at all. In all purchases in a joint Hindu family the presumption was that they were acquired for the benefit of all, although they might have been bought in the name of one only. As to the non-production of the general account books, it was not the duty of the appellant to do so. She did not rely upon them at all. If the respondents wished them produced they ought to have given notice thereof, and if they were not produced, then evidence to prove the contents thereof might then have been given. There could be no presumption in favour of the respondents on this account.

Reference was made to Smith's Leading Cases, Volume II, page 831, 11th Edition; Doe d Knight v. Smythe (1); Bayley v. Broadley (2); Doe d Johnson v. Baytup (3); Transfer of Property Act, 1882, section 108 (8).

Messrs De Gruyther, K. C., and Bhagwan Din Dube, for the Respondents, contended that neither the Hindu nor the Muhammadan Law had any bearing on the question. The real transaction was that it was bought for Jagmar.

[LORD HALDANE: The whole question is whether it was benami. This depends on the habit of the country as to who would be entitled to the beneficial interest.]

There was no special law on this point in India.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: The whole question is whether he bought it for himself or for the woman.]

That was really the question.

[LORD HALDANE: If the property is bought with the money of some one, is not the burden of proving title by presumption of certain law thrown upon that one in whose name it was bought?]

There were two witnesses who stated that the bungalow was bought for the benefit of Jagmag. One of them was an old servant of some 43 years' standing. The income from the bungalow always went to Jagmag. As the taluqdar was in debt, he bought it in order to make further provision for his mistress who would not be entitled to anything after his death.

[LORD SHAW: It did not occur to them then. It appears that the lady's lawyers hit upon the idea of explaining the transaction by stating that he was in debt.]

Either it was benami or not.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: You have no evidence to support it.]

There was not the slightest proof that it was. There was no reason why it should not be regarded as a gift. As he had no children, except a daughter by Bilas, his wives and two boys by Jagmar, it was perfectly reasonable that he bought it for them. Jagmar executed in 1888 a power-of-attorney which was produced for inspection of the lower Court and it related to property in question.

[LORD SHAW: There is the deed in existence executed by her and shown in Court.]

He had ample time to change his mind if he wished to.

[LORD HALDANE: You say that the story that it never got into her possession is untrue.]

[LORD SHAW: On question of title it is relevant to show (1) delivery and (2) deed being kept in the catalogue of estate deeds.]

Debi said it was not in the catalogue. As Jagmag lived in Partabgarh and had only two servants to manage her only village since 1876, the house was looked after by the taluqdar's servants. The statement of Roshan Lall in support of Jagmar's claim was undisputed. Jagmar could not offer any objection to the use of the house by the taluqdar. She was invited to the shaving ceremony and the widows were on good terms with her. If the taluqdar did not change his mind the natural state of things would be that it was bought for her benefit. During the life-time of Balraj it was never treated as part of the estate.

[LORD HALDANE: I would like to see the account.]

There was no presumption at all.

[SIR GEORGE FARWELL: Where is the money from?]

There was no evidence that money was supplied by mistake and that this sum came from the estate. Every single case of benami transaction turned upon facts of its own and could not be applied to another. It was always in transactions of money-lending and it was always an inference of fact and not of law. There were presumptions, but only in cases of claims by sons in a Hindu family and then the source had to be looked at [Dhurm Das Pandey v. Musammāt Shama Soondari Dibiah (4)].

[LORD SHAW: Money came from the deceased and the benefit must go to him. Can not you overturn the presumption?]

See Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (5) by Lord Hobhouse, (Lord Haldane: page 135). Profits from the bungalow after the taluqdar's death were never put along with the estate income. The appellant had produced accounts of certain kinds only.

Mr. Dube, following, stated that Roshan Lall in asking for shukrana had only followed the custom in India where according to common practice Barristers get shukrana.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: You are giving no information which is relevant.]

Intention of the purchaser governs such transaction [Chundernath Roy v. Ramjoy Mozoomdar (6) and Thakro v. Ganga Prasad (7).]

[LORD HALDANE: We know that.]

[MR. AMEER ALI: What evidence is there that she was all along in possession?]

The case should be decided on broad principles. Rupees 9,000 was not too much for the mistress.

[LORD HALDANE: All circumstances are to be taken into account.]

Mr. De Guryther: She retained possession of the bungalow after the death; the taluqdar wanted to make a present of it to her.

Sir E. Richards in reply.

[LORD SHAW: There is no possible excuse for not proving the books and showing that Rs. 10,000 was borrowed for property in Allahabad.]

JUDGMENT.

SIR GEORGE FARWELL.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated 10th May 1910, of the High Court at Allahabad, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated 26th August 1908, of the Judge of the Small Causes Court of Allahabad exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge.

Rai Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh was a taluqdar of Oudh; he was a man of some wealth, a Rajput of good position; he had two Rajput wives but no son; he had, however, one daughter by one of the wives. He had also a Muhammadan mistress named Jagmar Bibi, by whom he had two sons, and for whom he had made provision on a fairly liberal scale, and had given full possession thereof in 1876 and in 1888. On 9th June 1887, the taluqdar purchased for Rs. 9,000 the bungalow in dispute in this action; he raised the purchase-money by a mortgage on his own property and paid for it, and had the sole use and enjoyment of it for himself and his wives during his own life, but the deed of sale was made out and registered in Jagmar's name. The taluqdar spent money on the house, built a well and walls and kept a gardener in occupation, he and his wives lived there, and the mother of one of his wives lived and died there. His wives used the bungalow by his permission for kalapbas—i.e., to live at the bank of the Ganges for religious purposes for a month at a time; the purchase seems to have been made for the purpose of the kalapbas. Jagmar Bibi was never in the bungalow during this period; she would, of course, as a Muhammadan mistress, have no part or lot in the Hindu religious observances of Rajput wives, and it is inconceivable that she could have associated in any way in the bungalow with them.

The bungalow was useless to her for any personal use, and it was wholly inappropriate as a provision for her, if the taluqdar ever had any intention or idea of making a further provision for her; the net income was very small—in some years the out-goings exceeded the income. There is no evidence of any intention to give the bungalow to Jagmar as a provision for her or otherwise beyond the bare fact of the registration in her name; it is not clear how or when she got possession of the title-deed; it may be that it was in the taluqdar's possession at his death, and at some subsequent period. As the deed was made out in her name there is no importance in this. Down to the taluqdar's death the natural inference is that the purchase was a benami transaction; a dealing common to Hindus and Muhammadans alike, and much in use in India; it is quite unobjectionable and has a curious resemblance to the doctrine of our English Law that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase-money, and this again follows the analogy of our Common Law that where a feoffment is made without consideration the use results to the feoffor. The exception in our law by way of advancement in favour of wife or child does not apply in India, [Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (9)], but the relationship is a circumstance which is taken into consideration in India in determining whether the transaction is benami or not. The general rule in India in the absence of all other relevant circumstances is thus stated by Lord Campbell in Dhurm Das Pandey v. Musammât Shama Soonadri Dibiah (4): "The criterion in these cases in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid."

On the 31st August 1890 the taluqdar died, and by an agreement of 21st March 1894 between his two widows the possession and management on behalf of both was given to one of them, viz., Thakurain Balraj Kunwar, and she has throughout managed the property in question. Whether any acts or omissions by any of the parties after the death of the taluqdar could affect the nature of the benami transaction as it stood at his death it is unnecessary to consider, for their Lordships are of opinion that nothing has been given in evidence which could have any effect at all on the transactions as benami. The evidence given by Jagmar is quite untrustworthy and she has not even called her sons whom she purports to vouch as actors on her behalf: the trial Judge does not place any confidence in Roshan Lall's evidence, and his conduct certainly is open to comment. On the facts as accepted by their Lordships as the result of the evidence, all rates, rents and taxes and repairs and the ground-rent of the bungalow have been paid by the Thakurain. She has had possession of the premises by her servant, Bhairon, and has let them to various tenants from 1891 down to the commencement of this action, the last tenant being Dr. Ranjit Singh, to whom the plaintiff let and gave possession in 1890 and to whom also she gave notice to quit on 13th October 1905.

On these facts their Lordships are of opinion that the transaction was and remains throughout benami. They are unable to agree with the opinion expressed by the High Court; they find no ground on which to treat a purchase by the taluqdar of such a property as this bungalow in the name of his Muhammadan mistress in a manner differing from that on which a similar purchase by a Hindu in the name of a complete stranger would be treated, nor is there any ground for asserting that the probabilities of the case are in favour of an intention by the taluqdar to benefit his mistress; for the reasons stated above the exact contrary appears to their Lordships to be the case. The High Court Judges "attach great significance" to the non-production of the books showing the accounts of the general estate, and appear to draw an inference therefrom adverse to the plaintiff's claim; any such inference is, in their Lordships' opinion, unwarranted. These books do not necessarily form any part of the plaintiff's case; it is, of course, possible that some entries might have appeared therein relating to the bungalow. But it is open to a litigant to refrain from producing any documents that he considers irrelevant; if the other litigant is dissatisfied it is for him to apply for an affidavit of documents, and he can obtain inspection and production of all that appears to him in such affidavit to be relevant and proper. If he fails so to do, neither he nor the Court at his suggestion is entitled to draw any inference as to the contents of any such documents. There is no ground for any inference, such as is made in the High Court that the books if produced would have shown rent credited to Jagmar or set off against some claim against her. They related to a different property, and the possibility of entries relating to the bungalow being therein is very remote, but even if it had been greater, the Court was not entitled to draw any such inferences. It is for the litigant who desires to rely on the contents of documents to put them in evidence in the usual and proper way, if he fails to do so no inference in his favour can be drawn as to the contents thereof.

The other point in the case is one of estoppel. The property was let by the plaintiff to the defendant Ranjit Singh: he was let into possession by the plaintiff's gardener Bhairon, on her behalf and by her direction, and he regularly paid rent to her and applied to her to do all the necessary repairs; he has never given up possession to her although he duly received notice to quit, and he has denied her title. Section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act is perfectly clear on the point, and rests on the principle well established by many English cases, that a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. The Subordinate Judge was clearly right on this point. The High Court appears to have been under some misapprehension, and Counsel for the respondents have not attempted to support their judgment on this point. Their Lordships are of opinion, and will humbly advise His Majesty, that the decree of the High Court should be reversed and that of the trial Judge should be restored, and that the respondents should pay all the costs here and below.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

June 3, 1915.

Present:—Lord Atkinson, Sir George Farwell, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—APPELLANT

versus

BAI RAJBAL—RESPONDENT.

"Kasbati," meaning of—Kasbatis of Ahmedabad status of—Cession of territory, effect of, on rights of kasbatis—Burden of proof—Act of State—Annexation of territory—Municipal Courts—Jurisdiction—Legal right—Act of grace—Landlord and tenant—Lease for a term—Renewal—Ahmedabad Taluqdars Act (VI of 1862), s. 6, whether applies to kasbatis—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 68, 73—Lessee—Term of lease.

The term "kasbatis" or "kasbatees" was used in the District of Ahmedabad, Gujarat, to designate dwellers in towns, whose lands were cultivated not directly by themselves but by ryots, to whom they let them, receiving therefor a rent in cash or in kind. They were, in addition, invested with certain powers of Government over their villages, including the management of village affairs. [p. 206, cols. 1 & 2.]

The relation in which the kasbatis of Ahmedabad District stood to their native sovereigns before the cession of their territory and the legal rights they enjoyed under them, are, save in one respect, entirely irrelevant in determining their rights and relation to the new sovereign after the cession, inasmuch as after the cession of territory to a new sovereign when it comes to be a question of legal rights the contract with the new sovereign is conclusive and the rights against the old sovereign avail nothing. They could not carry in under the new regime the legal rights, if any, which they might have enjoyed under the old. The only legal enforceable rights they could have as against their new sovereign, were those, and only those, which the new sovereign by agreement express or implied, or by legislation chose to confer upon them. This implied agreement might be proved by circumstantial evidence, such as the mode of dealing with them which the new sovereign adopted, his recognition of their old rights, and express or implied election to respect them and be bound by them. [p. 308, cols. 1 & 2.]

The annexation of territory is an act of State, and any obligation assumed under a treaty either to the ceding sovereign or to individuals is not one which Municipal Courts are authorised to enforce. [p. 309, col. 1.]

Secretary of State for India v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba, 7 M. I. A. 476; 13 Moo. P. C. 22; 4 W. R. (P. C.) 42; 7 W. R. P. C. (Eng.) 722; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 373; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 984; 19 B. R. 388; 15 E. R. 9; 132 R. R. 7; Cook v. Sprigg, (1899) A. C. 572; 68 L. J. P. C. 144; 81 L. T. 281; 15 T. L. R. 515, relied upon.

The kasbatis may have been absolute owners of their villages and yet the consideration of their ante-cession rights is beside the point, save so far as it can be shown that the Bombay Government consented to their continuing to enjoy those rights under its own regime. [p. 309, col. 1.]

The burden of proving that the Bombay Government did so consent to any, and if so, to what extent, rests upon the kasbatis. [p. 309, col. 1.]

The mere repetition by the Government of acts of grace cannot per se create legal rights to their continuance. [p. 309, col. 2.]

Prima facie a lease for a term does not import any right to a renewal of it, on the contrary, it prima facie implies that the lessee's right to the premises demised ends with the term. [p. 313, col. 1.]

Section 6 of the Ahmedabad Taluqdars Act (VI of 1862) does not apply to the kasbatis of that district inasmuch as they never were talugdars in the true sense, they did not lose their ancient rights of ownership of their land by taking leases, and therefore did not suffer the injustice which the statute was designed to remedy. [p. 315, col. 1.]

Sections 68 and 73 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (V of 1879) plainly mean that a lessee, whether a true "talugdar", or a "thakur" "mehvassie" "kasbati" or "naik" is bound by the terms of his lease, one of which is that he shall only occupy for the term of years for which a lease for years is granted, and prima facie no longer. [p. 315, col. 2.]

Status of the kasbatis of Ahmedabad District and the precise relation in which they stood to the Bombay Government at the cession of their territory considered. [pp. 306 to 309.]

Consolidated appeals from preliminary and final decrees of the Bombay High Court, dated respectively April 16th, 1909, and April 11th, 1911, modifying a decree passed by the District Judge of Ahmedabad, dated November 30th, 1907.

FACTS are fully stated in the High Court judgment, reported in 11 Ind. Cas. 948.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Lowndes, for the Secretary of State for India in Council, contended that the tenure of the village of Charodi by the plaintiffs and their predecessors-in-title since 1823 and their rights therein had been of a lease-hold nature only and the plaintiffs had no right of ownership in the said village. It was not open to the Courts to ascertain the intention of the parties to the various pattas by the wide range of investigation adopted by them. The predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs having accepted the pattas on certain terms and having continued in possession thereon, the plaintiffs were estopped from denying the title of the defendant. The Government should not be held as bound to recognise as holder of the village in question so entitled any person save (a) a male or female casabatec who should be a lineal descendant in the paternal side of the original grantee of the said village under the patta of 1823, or (b) the widow of a previous recognised holder. The patta of 1823 was not forthcoming, but it was for a term of seven years at a rental of Rs. 100. In 1833 a new patta was granted for a further period of seven years and so it was in 1837, but neither the copy nor the original thereof was forthcoming. In 1845 the Collector intended to raise the rent, but the casabatees protested, stating that the arrangement with Mr. Williamson was a permanent one. But their objection was overruled and the new patta was for seven years at a slightly increased rent. There was no patta between 1851 and 1860 and between 1866 and 1870. In 1874 on the failure of the issue of the casabatees of the villages of Lea and Keela, they were resumed by the Government. The predecessors-in-title of plaintiffs claimed them as the nearest collateral heirs, but the Government refused to listen to their prayer. They then instituted a suit in the District Court of Ahmedabad and produced a sanad of the Mogul Emperor dated 1693 as the root of the title of the ancestor whose property was claimed. The sanad was held to be a forgery and the claim dismissed. No appeal was preferred against it. In 1879 a lease was granted and signed by the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title but the defendant did not wish to rely upon it inasmuch as the signature was contended not to have been appended "out of their free will and pleasure." All these leases were for a fixed period and there was no mention of the fact that the Government was bound to renew the leases. The Government never recognised this contention. The Act VI of 1862 and Act VI of 1883 were meant to apply to talug- dars, and not to the casbatees who were not talugdars in the proper sense of the term. But the Crown Liabilities Act of 1888 did not permit an action to be brought against the sovereign in respect of obligations assumed under a treaty either to living a sovereign or to an individual and the Municipal Courts could not enforce the same. What was the nature of the tenure before the occupation by the British or the arrangement with the Gaekwar could not entitle the respondents to sue.

Reference was made to Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani (1); Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Masludin (2); Collector of Ahmedabad v. Samal Das Bechar Das (3); Cook v. Sprigg (4); Secretary of State for India v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba (5).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., with him Mr. Parikh, for the Respondents, contended that the history of the Settlement of 1823 led to no other conclusion than that the village left to plaintiffs' ancestors was intended to be kept by them permanently, thought it was open to the Government to raise the jama. The patta of 1823, so far as it contained any words capable of a different meaning, was a nullity. Mr. Cruikshank in 1825 and Mr. Rogers in 1851 classed the plaintiffs' ancestors as talugdars and so did numerous other officers. Even the President in Council in 1862 referred to them as talugdars. The incidents of the tenure were those of a talugdari one. The plaintiffs' ancestors' lands descended from father to son and the jama was a percentage of the assessment. Mr. Peile said that the casbatees were allowed 30 per cent. The owners also mortgaged their lands and decrees were obtained against them as if they were private property. The Government never registered the lands as khalsa. They were entered as casbatee to distinguish them from grassia, and not because they were not held on a talugdari tenure. The plaintiffs had been in possession since 1823 and the onus of showing that he could eject lay on the defendant, which he had not discharged. As these villages were talugdari, Bombay Act VI of 1862 was applicable to them and Bombay Act VI of 1888 was expressly so. The respondent was entitled to hold the land free from any conditions other than imposed by the said Statutes which rendered them useless. Elphinstone's Minutes clearly showed that the period of seven years was fixed in the interest of the casbatees to protect them from the hands of oppressing Collectors, and not to limit their tenure. It was only meant to give them time during which jama could not be raised. The casbatees held their land for military service and so like the grassias and the mehwassies held them permanently. The casbatees were not lease-holders as understood in the English Law, but had a right to hold it permanently at a rent liable to revision. The object of Act VI of 1862 was to recognise the talugdars as owners of their land. The casbatees were owners as they were talugdars.

Reference was made to Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Masludin (2); Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani (1); Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premal Mullick (6); Bengal Regulation XVII of 1827, section 7.

Sir E. Richards, in reply, referred to Act VI of 1808, section 33 (8); Act V of 1879, sections 73, 68 and 34, and Act VI of 1888, section 34.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—These are consolidated appeals from preliminary and final decrees of the High Court of Judicature of Bombay, dated respectively the 16th of April 1909, and 11th of April 1911, modifying a decree of the District Judge of Ahmedabad, dated the 30th of November 1907, in Suit No. 7 of 1898 in his Court.

The question in issue in the action for an injunction, out of which these appeals have arisen, is whether the plaintiff, like her male ancestors, is not entitled to the continued possession, management, and enjoyment of a certain village called Charodi, about 2,200 acres in extent, situated in the Pargana Viramgam, in the District of Ahmedabad in she Province of Gujarat. In her plaint she bases her right on her absolute ownership of this village. In argument before this Board and in the judgments of the Courts below her right has been also based apparently upon the following title, namely this, that though her ancestors took from time to time several leases of this village from the Bombay Government, each for a term of years, they were not, as the appellant contends, mere lessees bound to give up to their lessors at the end of each term the possession of the demised village; but were legally entitled, as each lease terminated, to have a new lease granted to the last lessee or his representative. Either title, if possessed by her, would enable her to succeed in this action. In order to arrive at a conclusion on the issue thus in dispute between the parties it is necessary to examine briefly the history of this District of Ahmedabad before its cession by the Gaekwar, with the concurrence of the Peishwa, to the British Government in the year 1817, and to examine more in detail the dealings of the Bombay Government after that date with a certain class of its inhabitants, Muhammadans in religion, said to have originally come from Delhi under the Great Mogul, and styled indifferently casbatees and kasbatis, and especially their dealings with the ancestors of the respondent, who belonged to that class, touching this village of Charodi.

The ancestor of the respondent in possession of this village at the time of this cession was one Jehangirbhai alias Bapuji. One Fatumyia, his grandson, died in the year 1891 childless, leaving him surviving his widow, Nandbai, one of the plaintiffs in the action, who has died during the course of the litigation. One Bapuji, the brother of Fatumyia, died some years ago, leaving his son, Bapabhai, his only issue him surviving, and Bapabhai himself died in the year 1893, leaving his daughter, Bai Rajbai, the other plaintiff, his only child him surviving. This lady, who subsequently married and was left a widow, has thus become the sole surviving descendant of the member of the kasbatis class who was in possession of this village of Charodi at the date of the aforesaid cession. The term kasbatis, it is not disputed, was used to designate dwellers in towns whose lands were cultivated not directly by themselves but by ryots, to whom they let them, receiving therefor a rent in cash or in kind. They were, in addition, apparently invested with certain powers of government over their villages, including the management of village affairs. At the time of the cession the kasbatis were possessed of 17 villages within the pargana, of which Charodi was one. The settlement of the territories ceded was, not practically undertaken till the year 1822-1823.

In the interval an accredited public official of the Company was put in charge, duly authorised to investigate the local conditions, and make suggestions and recommendations for the carrying through of this work. In the conduct of this business and in discharge of these duties, he made reports to his superiors in which he sketched the history of the kasbatis, the grassias, and other classes or families amongst the inhabitants, and purported to describe the rights they had theretofore respectively acquired as against the ceding sovereign, the Gaekwar, to the land of which they were in possession, and the villages over which they exercised some primitive powers of management and control. Some of these reports have been received in evidence apparently without objection. On two of them, sent by Mr. Williamson, described as the Assistant Collector in charge, the first bearing date the 3rd of August 1822, to the Secretary of the Government of Bombay, and the second bearing date the 28th of May 1823, referring to the first, to the Collector of Ahmedabad, much reliance has, naturally, been placed. In the first he reports, amongst other things, that there were 17 villages in the Viramgam Pargana, held for a considerable number of years by several families of casbatees or kasbatis under a peculiar kind of tenure; that their possession had been frequently interrupted, and had not, therefore, been sufficiently continuous to found prescriptive rights; that as soldiers of some property, family, and character, they had acquired a partial influence in the affairs of the pargana, and often had obtained from the local managers leases of villages on favourable terms, in the granting of which nothing further had been intended than that the villages should remain in their temporary charge; that after the grant of the farm of Ahmedabad by the Peishwa to the Gaekwar, the kasbatis had enjoyed the produce of some of these villages for 25 or 30 years on a revenue which was increased or lowered according to the pleasure of the local managers; that in 1804 they were dispossessed of these latter by one Babaji Appaji, a manager of the Peishwa, who demanded a higher jumma than the kasbatis would consent to pay, but were restored to possession ten years later. At thus by a train of circumstances of an undefined nature that it was difficult to describe them, the class had a sort of claim to the villages of which they were found in possession when the country was delivered to the Bombay Government; that since the authority of that Government had been established at Ahmedabad, Revenue Settlements had been made with them, except where they refused to pay an adequate jumma, "but being men of ignorance or bad circumstances and of very indolent habits," they were altogether incompetent to conduct village concerns; that their villages were of vast extent and capable of much improvement; that they were well aware of the precarious tenure by which they held their villages (as they were merely what might be called lease-holders), and that he had every reason to believe they would be well satisfied with an arrangement which would secure to them permanent possession of a portion of their villages.

Mr. Williamson then proposed for the consideration of the Government a plan to this effect: to give to each casbatee one, or according to the circumstances and claim of the particular person, two, of the smaller villages on a jumma less than that which they had hitherto paid, thereby keeping up their name and respectability as landowners, and enabling them to devote their whole attention to cultivating and improving their properties, while the small amount of revenue levied on the villages remaining in their hands would compensate them for the loss of those surrendered to the Government.

This plan was not approved of by the Government. On the contrary, the Government Secretary wrote to the assistant in charge of the Collectorate of Ahmedabad (presumably this same Mr. Williamson, as he so described himself) a letter bearing date the 22nd of November 1822, acknowledging the receipt of the latter's letter of the 3rd of August previous, and informing him that though the plan he suggested might be agreeable to the casbatees, the Governor in Council doubted whether it would afford any permanent relief; that it was considered that a more desirable arrangement would be to give to the casbatees pensions, to be fixed by the Government, for a life or a number of lives, but that if these latter should be unwilling to accept pensions Mr. Williamson's plan should be adopted. The casbatees refused to accept pensions, but Mr. Williamson's plan, though adopted in part, was not adopted in its entirety. One of its provisions of vital bearing on the present controversy was not adhered to. He had suggested that the kasbatis should be secured in permanent possession of such of their seventeen villages as should be left to them, whereas on the 28th of May 1823 he wrote to the Collector of Ahmedabad informing him that he (Williamson) "had concluded an arrangement with the casbatees of Viramgam by which they are to retain, during the pleasure of the Government, nine of the villages found under their management when the parganna fell into our possession." He proceeded to point out that by this arrangement the interference of the casbatees would be removed from eight of their villages, the produce of which was valued at Rs. 13,800, while that of those remaining with them was only valued at Rs. 5,300 but that the jumma in respect of these latter was so small, namely, Rs. 1,925, that there would remain for their maintenance Rs. 3,375, a sum differing but little from that of Rs. 3,820 which, according to his calculation, was all that would have been available for their maintenance had they continued in possession of their seventeen villages. Then follows this passage:—

"The lease being granted for seven years affords the casbatees an opportunity of availing themselves of these capabilities (i. e., the capabilities of their villages of improvement). The condition of the villages and the rules respecting leases laid down by Government guided me in fixing the term."

On the 23rd of June 1813 the Secretary of the Government of Bombay wrote to the Collector of Ahmedabad informing him that the Governor in Council approved of Mr. Williamson having made an "agreement with the kasbates by which they are to retain during the pleasure of Government nine of the villages found under their management when the pergunna fell into our possession."

The expression "at the pleasure of Government" is not very happily chosen. Since leases for terms of seven years were to be given to the kasbats, it obviously could not have meant that they were to hold these nine villages merely as tenants-at-will of the Government. What it must, in their Lordships' view, have meant in this connection was that they should receive at once leases for a term of seven years, and that after the termination of these leases the Government would be free to deal with them as it pleased, to renew their leases or to permit them to continue in possession without leases, or to dispossess them altogether, as the Government might in its discretion think fit. If that be so, then there could not have been on the part of the Government a more emphatic assertion of their resolve that the lessees should not have any legal right, as against it, to a renewal of their leases or the permanent possession of their villages.

Before dealing with the action which the Government of Bombay took in reference to this village of Charodi on receipt of these reports, it is essential to consider what was the precise relation in which the kasbats stood to the Bombay Government the moment the cession of their territory took effect, and what were the legal rights enforceable in the tribunals of their new sovereign of which they were thereafter possessed. The relation in which they stood to their native sovereigns before this cession, and the legal rights they enjoyed under them, are, save in one respect, entirely irrelevant matters. They could not carry in under the new regime the legal rights, if any, which they might have enjoyed under the old. The only legal enforceable rights they could have as against their new sovereign were those, and only those, which that new sovereign, by agreement expressed or implied, or by legislation, chose to confer upon them. Of course this implied agreement might be proved by circumstantial evidence, such as the mode of dealing with them which the new sovereign adopted, his recognition of their old rights, and express or implied election to respect them and be bound by them, and it is only for the purpose of determining whether and to what extent the new sovereign has recognised these ante-cession rights of the kasbats, and has elected or agreed to be bound by them, that the consideration of the existence, nature, or extent of these rights become relevant subjects for inquiry in this case. This principle is well established, though it scarcely seems to have been kept steadily in view in the lower Courts in the present case. It is only necessary to refer to two authorities on the point, namely, the case of Secretary of State for India v. Kama-chee Boye Sahaba (5) decided in the year 1859. and Cook v. Sprigg (4) decided in the year 1899.

In the first this Board had to deal with the action of the East India Company in seizing, in exercise of their sovereign power, in trust for the British Government, the Raj of Tanjore, and the whole property of the deceased Rajah, as an escheat on the ground that, by reason of the failure of the male heirs of the latter, the dignity of the Raj was extinct, and that the property of the Rajah had thereby lapsed to the British Government. Lord Kingsdown, delivering the judgment of the Board, is, at page 540, reported to have expressed himself thus:—

"The result, in their Lordships' opinion, is, that the property now claimed by the respondent has been seized by the British Government, acting as a sovereign power, through its delegate, the East India Company; and that the act so done, with its consequences, is an act of State over which the Supreme Court of Madras has no jurisdiction. Of the propriety or justice of that act, neither the Court below nor the Judicial Committee have the means of forming, or the right of expressing, if they had formed, any opinion. It may have been just or unjust, politic or impolitic, beneficial or injurious, taken as a whole, to those whose interests are affected. These are considerations into which their Lordships cannot enter. It is sufficient to say that, even if a wrong has been done, it is a wrong for which no Municipal Court of Justice can afford a remedy."

Now, in that case the act complained of was of a tortious character.

In the second case the Judicial Committee had to deal with a concession given by the ceding sovereign, the paramount Chief of Pongoland. The appellants sought to enforce in a Court of Law their rights under this concession against the English Government, to which the territory over which the concession had been given was ceded by this Chief. The decision in the first-mentioned case was followed, the above quoted passage from the judgment of Lord Kingsdown approved of, and it was held that the annexation of territory was an act of State, and that any obligation assumed under a treaty either to the ceding sovereign or to individuals is not one which Municipal Courts are authorised to enforce. As far, therefore, as the legal rights of the kasbatis, enforceable against the Indian Government in Indian Courts, are concerned, the above-mentioned cession of territory must be taken as a new point of departure. Mr. Williamson's conclusions as to the positions, rights, and interests of the kasbatis may have been quite erroneous. The kasbatis may have been absolute owners of their villages, as the respondent contends, and yet the consideration of their ante-cession rights is beside the point save so far as it can be shown that the Bombay Government consented to their continuing to enjoy those rights under its own regime.

In their Lordships' view, putting aside legislation for the moment, the burden of proving that the Bombay Government did so consent to any, and if so, to what extent, rests in this case, upon the respondent. The kasbatis were not in a position in 1822 to reject Williamson's proposal, however they might have disliked it, or to stand upon their ancient rights. Those rights had for all the purposes of litigation ceased to exist, and the only choice, in point of law, left to them was to accept his terms or be dispossessed. There is nothing, therefore, to support the contention that they never would have accepted Williamson's terms had the permanent possession of their villages not been promised to them. It may well be that the Bombay Government did not intend to disturb them, and even intended, if all things went well, to grant to them, as acts of grace, new leases as the old leases expired, and it may also well be that the kasbatis fully believed and trusted that this would be done, as indeed for many years it was done. From these facts, if they existed, moral obligations (with which this Board is not concerned) may arise, but the mere repetition of such acts of grace cannot per se create legal right to their continuance.

Though notice was served on the two plaintiffs to produce all documents in their possession touching the issues raised in the suit, no patta or kabulyat executed in 1823 was produced or given in evidence, but two Government records of that year were produced as secondary evidence of the contents of a patta then granted to the kasbatis then in possession of the nine villages retained by them, including this village of Charodi. According to these records a patta of the village was then given to Bapabhai, the father of Fatumyia, for a term of seven years, at a jamabandi of Rs. 100 with a covenant by the lessee that he should not sell or mortgage the village, or give, or allow any one to give, any land of the village in Pasayta, or keep any debt upon the village, but should make it prosperous, and should hand it over to the Government in the year 1831. If these be the true contents of the patta, they absolutely negative the existence of any legal right enforceable in an Indian tribunal, either to have the leases of the village from time to time renewed, or to continue in possession of it after the leases had expired.

As to this village of Charodi, one must start then on the inquiry as to what rights were granted by the Bombay Government to the respondent's ancestors, with this admitted fact, that in the sixty-eight years which have elapsed between the year 1822 and the institution of this present suit, not even in one of the several pattas granted to them is any provision to be found to the effect, that upon its expiration a new patta is to be granted to the lessees or their representatives or successors, while the very first of these pattas contained a clause expressly negating the existence of such a right. The reasonable and proper inference to be drawn from the silence of the pattas on this important point is, Sir Erle Richards, on behalf of the appellants, contends, that the legal right to obtain renewals of the pattas was never conferred upon the respondent's ancestors. And, no doubt, if the draftsmen of these instruments had even a rudimentary knowledge of their business, one would have expected that such an important matter as that would have been provided for, but, unfortunately for this contention, those experts have drawn these instruments in language so obscure that the instrument could scarcely have been more obscure had obscurity been aimed at, and have resolutely omitted from every patta but the first the ordinary provision to be found in every properly-drawn lease, that the lessee shall deliver up possession at the end of the term. Mr. DeGruyther, on behalf of the respondent, on his side not unnaturally contends that the inference to be drawn from the continued omission of such a provision is that the lessees had a legal right to continue in possession after the patta, or lease, had terminated. He puts forward, moreover, as their Lordships understood him, this additional contention, namely, that in 1822 a settlement was made with the ancestor of the respondent then in possession of this village of Charodi, in which the amount of the jumma was fixed, that the effect of such a settlement is that the person in possession by whom the jumma is to be paid, was fixed or settled permanently in the possession, at all events, of this village, with a right to manage it, that the pattas could not have been designed to take away the rights thus conferred, and that the only way of reconciling the grant of them with the relation created by the settlement is to hold that the patta only dealt with the jumma and the mode of management of the village, not with the tenure of it, if that term may be used. To determine which, if any, of these contentions is well-founded, it is necessary to examine in detail the provisions of those pattas the contents of which are satisfactorily proved.

First, then, as to the pattas granted on the 21st of August 1833. In the year 1827, during the currency of the first lease a report was made to the Talukdari Settlement Officer by Lieutenant Melville, of the 7th Regiment, in which he described the kasbatis of Viramgam as proprietors of certain villages. He apparently was not aware that they then actually held under pattas for terms of years granted to them by the Bombay Government. No importance can, therefore, be attached to his use of the word "proprietors." In July 1831 the question of the increase of the jumma fixed by the first batch of leases was under consideration. Several kasbatis presented a petition to the Government insinuating that the jumma fixed in 1822 was then fixed permanently, and should not be increased, also asserting that it was part of the arrangement made by Williamson that the eight villages taken from them in the first instance should, at the end of the seven years, be restored to them, and claiming that this arrangement should be carried into effect. The reply of the Government to this petition, dated 16th September 1831, was to the effect that the order made by the Government on the 16th of November 1822 could not be set aside. Sometime thereafter the above-mentioned lease was granted to Bapabhai, the father of Fatumyia, and his brother, Miabhai, as the lessees. It is endorsed as having been delivered to the latter. The jumma is increased to Rs. 142 payable in eight instalments, at different times, and in unequal amounts. The term is seven years, commencing in the year 1830-31 and terminating in the year 1836-37.

By the second clause of the lease it is provided that on failure to pay any instalment on the day named, the Government are to "take back" the patta and cause the revenue of the village to be collected by other hands, the lessees being responsible for any deficit in the year in which the patta is taken over, and that at the end of that particular year the Government "would if it so pleases give the village to some person other than the lessees," who, it was asserted, shall not get it, but should be held liable for any loss which might accrue to the Government during the remainder of the term.

The seventeenth clause provides that if the Government should find that the lessees were spoiling the village, or did not abide by the clauses of the lease, the Government would send arbitrators to inquire into the matter, and if they should find that the village would be spoiled if allowed to remain in the hands of the lessees the pattas would be taken back from them, and they would have to pay such a penalty as the Government might choose to impose.

The facts that the granting of a patta for seven years was part of the arrangement made with Mr. Williamson, and that the pattas then granted contained a clause that the village should be given up to the Government at the end of the term, coupled with the clauses of the lease of 1833, providing for the transfer of the village in certain events to persons other than the lessees, are quite destructive of the theory that these pattas merely regulated the amount of the jumma but not the tenure, and that independently of them altogether this family of kasbatis was fixed in permanent possession of this village of Chahodi. In the year 1838 a new patta was apparently granted for seven years, but neither the original nor any copy of it was forthcoming at the trial. On the expiration of this term in the year 1845, the Collector forwarded to the Revenue Commission of Ahmedabad a report, dated the 8th of September 1845, proposing, amongst other things, to increase the jumma of this village. In it he sets forth in paragraph 5 that the kasbatis being sent for in order to enter into a fresh settlement, declared that the settlement made by Mr. Williamson was permanent and that the jumma was not to be increased. They were unwilling to take leases, on any terms other than the original. The Collector thereupon refused to renew the leases and limited the privileges of the kasbatis to the receipt of Rs. 20 per cent. on the revenue pending the pleasure of Government. In the 10th paragraph of the report he proceeds to add: "This long enjoyment of the villages at the same rental has increased their (i. e., the kasbatis) real or feigned impression that the original settlement was permanent, which it certainly was not."

He then proposed that the rent of the villages should be slightly increased, and that if the kasbatis did not accept the leases offered, the villages should continue under the direct management of the Government and the kasbatis should be allowed Rs. 20 per cent. of the revenue.

It will be observed that both parties to this dispute took their stand respectively on Mr. Williamson's arrangement. They only differed as to its terms. The kasbatis insisted that according to it the eight villages taken from them were to be restored to them at the end of the term of the first lease, and that the rent should not be increased, while the Government insisted that the grant of any lease after the first was entirely a matter at their discretion.

The Government refused to yield. The position they took up clearly appears from a letter dated 24th February 1847, addressed by the direction of the Governor in Council to the Revenue Commissioner of this district, Mr. A. Blane, pointing out that the kasbatees did not appear from the former proceedings connected with the settlements previously made with them to have any valid title to "a permanent continuance of the terms upon which they have hitherto held their villages," and suggesting that the jumma should be increased by 5 per cent., that if they consented to this their term might be renewed for seven years, but that the Governor in Council desired that a distinct reservation should be inserted in the new lease endorsing the right of the Government to raise the rent if circumstances should show it to be expedient, and that if they refused to consent to this the villages should be retained under Government management, an allowance being made to the kasbatis during pleasure to an amount equal to the profit which Mr. Williamson settled would have been left them. There could scarcely be an assertion more absolute than this of the power of the Government to alter the terms of any leases they might make to the kasbatis as they themselves should deem fit, to give or withhold such leases at will, and to dispossess the kasbatis and take the management of these villages into Government hands.

The existence, however, in the Bombay Government of the power and right which they assert in this letter of the 24th of February 1847 belonged to them, is equally inconsistent with the existence in the respondent or her ancestors either of the absolute ownership of this village or of the right to have the leases of it perpetually renewed. The Government terms were ultimately accepted, and a new patta of the village, bearing date the 4th of September 1849, was granted to Fatumya and Bapuji, his brother (the respondent's grandfather), to hold for a term of seven years (from 1844-45 to 1850-51) at the increased yearly rent of Rs. 144-1-9, payable by five instalments on the days therein named. The lease is executed by the lessees. It will be found at page 68 of the Record. Had not the draftsman of this instrument been, like his predecessor, almost enamoured of obscurity, one would have expected that he would have laid at rest all matters of dispute on this point by simply inserting in this lease the proper and usual provision that at its termination the lessees would deliver up possession of the demised premises to the lessor. Through ignorance or carelessness he resolutely abstained from doing this. He did, however, insert some clauses which merit attention. It is provided, first, that if the instalments of the rent be not paid when due, attachment will be levied on the village by the Government, and "the management" will be carried on, presumably, by the Government. Secondly, that the lessees shall not alienate or pledge the village or the land composing it to anyone. Thirdly, that the lease was granted out of kind consideration for the lessees' maintenance, that they, the lessees, should, therefore, make good arrangements for the prevention of crime in the village, or otherwise the (tharav) settlement would be cancelled. Fourthly, that if an attachment for arrears of rent were levied by the Collector, or if a creditor by an application to the Courts caused an attachment to issue against the village, the management of the village would be taken out of the hands of the lessees and carried on by the Government, the (tharav) settlements would be cancelled, and the whole income of the village to be taken charge of by the Government.

Then follows a clause, No. 10, inconsistent to some extent with the succeeding clause, No. 11, but evidently introduced to put an end for the future to all controversy touching the increase of the jumma. It provides that the village is given to the lessees on patta according to the settlement or agreement therein before set out, that when the lease expired the lessees should hold charge of all income and produce of the village, and should agree to the payment of the amount of the revenue which the Government might fix, and that if they failed to pay this the income should be taken charge of by the Government. The eleventh clause provided that the village was given on patta to the lessees on the agreement thereinbefore set out, and that if they did not act accordingly to the agreement the patta should be void.

The existence of the statement that the patta was granted out of kind consideration for the maintenance of the lessees is due to this, that during the dispute about the increase of the rent, the two lessees and another person had presented a petition to the Revenue Commissioner stating that they were in very indigent circumstances, that attachments had gone out against their villages, and that they had not left in their houses corn for their sustenance or any wearing apparel.

If the evidence of the case stopped here it would, in face of this lease, in their Lordships' opinion, be quite impossible to contend that the patta merely fixed the amount of the rent, and that by the settlements the lessees or their ancestors had acquired as against the Bombay Government a right to the property in, or to the permanent possession of, this village of Charodi. The granting of a lease was part of the original settlement or agreement, and these leases are treated in several places as the instruments by which the estate or interest in the village is conveyed to the lessees.

This clause 10 is the only piece of written evidence produced, indicating even in the most remote way that the lessees were entitled at the end of each lease to have a renewal of it granted to them. Prima facie a lease for a term does not import any right to a renewal of it. On the contrary, it prima facie implies that the lessee's right to the premises demised ends with the term. In order that the respondent should succeed, therefore, on this point, she must find sufficient evidence, apart from legislation, of an agreement, express or implied, with the Bombay Government imposing on them a legal obligation to renew for all time, if required, these leases as they terminate, and conferring on each lessee the correlative legal right to demand that renewal. In their Lordships' view it would require something much more clear, plain, and explicit than this confused and almost unintelligible clause, to be treated as, in effect, a covenant by the lessor for a perpetual renewal of the lease of this village.

No new patta was granted in 1851. The lessees continued to hold possession and to pay that rent till 1860. Fresh pattas for one year each were given in the years 1860 and 1861, at an increased rent of Rs. 160 and again from 1862 to 1865; between 1860 and 1870 yearly renewals appear to have been granted, the rent being sometimes increased. In the year 1874 there was a failure of issue in the case of the holders of two of the nine villages retained by the kasbatis under Williamson's settlement, namely, the villages of Keela and Leah or Lea. The said Fatumyia claimed the former village as the nearest collateral heir of the last holder. The Revenue Commissioner reported upon this matter to the Government of Bombay, and the Governor in Council passed a resolution, dated the 27th November 1874, by which it was declared that the tenure of the kasbatis was merely lease-hold, and that their villages lapsed to the Government on failure of heirs. He accordingly directed that this village of Keela should be resumed by the Government.

This direction was on the 5th of July 1877 approved of by the Secretary of State. But Fatumyia and Bapuji, unwilling to submit to this decision, instituted in the year 1878 a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council claiming to be entitled to this village as heirs of the last holder, and they supported their claim by a document purporting to be a sanad granted by one of the Mogul Emperors some centuries earlier. The District Judge who heard the suit decided that this sanad was a forgery, and that the last holder, through whom the plaintiffs claimed, was a mere lease-holder, and dismissed the action with costs. The plaintiffs acquiesced in that decision. They never sought to question it in any Court of law. The question of the renewal of the leases of the kasbati tenants was brought before the Government of Bombay about this time by the Revenue Commissioner, and a formal resolution was on the 25th of July 1877 passed by that Government to the effect that it appeared all the leases had expired, that there was no necessity to make any change, it being quite clear that the villages were held on lease-hold tenure at the pleasure of the Government, that it was desirable to renew for periods of seven years the leases which had expired, a very slight nominal increase of rent being made in each case, to show that the Government maintained their rights and would continue so to do and directed that words should be inserted in the new leases making this perfectly clear. This resolution was carried out. A form of lease in the English language was drawn up, and on the 7th of October 1878 approved of by the Bombay Government. It contained, amongst others, clauses restraining alienation and at last providing that on the termination or sooner determination of the lease, the lessee should, without objection or obstruction, yield up the village demised unless the Secretary of State in Council should then be pleased to renew the lease, and also a condition of re-entry on the breach of any of the provisions of the lease.

A lease in this form on the 22nd of December 1879 was granted to Fatumyia and Bapuji, the respondent's father. The kabulyat was signed by them, but, as they subsequently asserted that they did not sign the document of their own free will and pleasure, the appellant does not, therefore, desire to treat them as bound by it. It can only be looked at as containing a renewed expression of the view consistently entertained by the Government in reference to the true position and rights of the kasbatis. No further leases were granted. The lessees and those who succeeded them continued to pay the rent reserved, notice was served in 1898 upon the two ladies, Bai Nandbai and Bai Rajbai, requiring them to quit and deliver up possession of the village of Charodi on the 31st of July following. It was not disputed that if these ladies had by the continued payment of their rent become tenants of this village from year to year, this notice was adequate and sufficient to determine that tenancy. Up to this the evidence touching the administrative dealings of the Bombay Government and its accredited officials with the kasbatis and their villages, including that of Charodi, has alone been dealt with.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the just and reasonable inferences to be drawn from it when properly considered are, that not only has the respondent failed to discharge the burden which, as already stated, rests upon her, but that the Bombay Government never departed from the position in which they were left by Mr. Williamson's arrangement; that they never by an agreement, express or implied, conferred upon the respondent or any of her ancestors the proprietary rights in, or ownership of, the village of Charodi claimed by her; that they never recognised or admitted the existence of such rights, or of any rights analogous to them, in them or her; that the only rights in this village which the Government conferred upon her ancestors were those conferred by the leases which the Government from time to time, at their own will and pleasure, chose to grant to them (save such rights as are conferred by the creation of a tenancy from year to year in manner already mentioned); that this Government never conferred upon any of the lessees of the said village a legal right to insist, at the termination of his lease, upon a new lease of the village being granted to him; in other words, that the Bombay Government never were under any legal obligation to grant any lease of this village; and that the granting or withholding of a lease of it rested from the first solely in their discretion.

It was contended, however, on behalf of the respondent that her case is much strengthened by a consideration of the Bombay Government's dealings with the grassias. They were ancient Rajpoot proprietors, and before the cession of the Ahmedabad Zilla, stood to their native sovereigns in that relation, their lands being cultivated by ryot tenants from year to year and at will. They and the mewassies were clearly distinguishable from the kasbatis. The last-named held their lands by contract, neither by sanad nor by defiance, and Colonel Walker, the first official appointed to deal with this district, was well aware that there was no analogy between the holdings of the grassias and those of the kasbatis. The word "taluk" was first applied to these Rajpoot proprietors by the British themselves. Notwithstanding the ancient proprietary rights of the grassias, they took leases of their lands from the Bombay Government, and thenceforward their legal rights were, in accordance with the principle laid down in the authorities already quoted, determined entirely by the contract which they had made with that Government, altogether irrespective of what their position and rights may have been before the cession of their territory.

All this is stated at length in the account by J. Peile, Tulukdari Settlement Officer of the Talukdari of Ahmedabad Zilla, and the measures adopted for their restoration under and in connection with the Act VI of 1862 of the Bombay Legislature published in 1867, pages 7, 9, 14, 42, 43, 47, 64 and 67. Indeed in the preamble of that Statute it is recited that these talukdari estates are only held on lease-hold tenure determinable at the pleasure of the Government. So that the case of the grassias makes against the case of the respondent instead of in her favour, inasmuch as it shows clearly that after the cession of territory to a new sovereign when it comes to be a question of legal right, the contract with the new sovereign is conclusive and the rights against the old sovereign avail nothing.

It only remains to consider the effect of any of the legislation of the Bombay Government on the question in issue on this appeal. Act VI of 1862, for the reasons given in the above-mentioned publication of Mr. Peile, does not apply to kasbati lessees at all. They never were talukdars of Ahmedabad in the true sense. They did not lose their ancient right of ownership of their land by taking leases, as did the grassias, and, therefore, did not suffer the injustice which the Statute was designed to remedy.

The Statute of 1888 is entitled an Act to provide for the revenue administration of estates held by superior landlords in the districts of Ahmedabad, etc. In the preamble it is recited that it is expedient to remove doubts as to the applicability of certain portions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code of 1879 to estates held by certain superior landlords in the above-mentioned districts, and to make special provision for the administration of the said estates and for the partition thereof. In the first section a taluqdar is defined to include "a thakur, mehwassi, kasbati and naik." Section 23 provides that nothing in the Act shall be deemed to affect the validity of any agreement entered into before the passing of the Act by or with a taluqdar and still in force as to the amount of his jumma, nor of any settlement of the amount of jumma made by or under the orders of Government for a term of years and still in force. Every such agreement and settlement is to have effect as if the Act had not passed. And section 33 enacts that certain sections of the Bombay Land Revenue Code of 1879 are not to apply to the estates to which this Act applies. By section 33 it is also provided that the word "taluqdar" shall be substituted for the word "occupant," the words "registered taluqdar" for the words "registered occupant," and the words "taluqdar's holding," or such words to that effect as may be required by the context, for the word "occupancy" when applying this Code of 1879 to the estates to which this Statute of 1888 applies. The seventy-third section of the Code provides that "the right of occupancy" shall, subject to the provisions contained in section 56, and to any conditions lawfully annexed to the occupancy, save as shall be otherwise prescribed, be deemed to be a hereditary and transferable property.

It is seriously contended, as their Lordships understood, that the effect of this substitution of the words "the right of occupancy" for the words "the right or interest of a taluqdar" in or to his holding, is that a kasbati's interest in a lease-hold held for a term of years is changed in its nature and becomes a hereditary and transferable property, notwithstanding that by the very conditions of the lease his interest is limited to a term, and he is restrained from alienation: and notwithstanding also that by section 68 of this Code it is enacted that an occupant is entitled to the use and occupation of his land for the period, if any, to which his occupancy is limited. These two sections, in their Lordships' view, plainly mean that a lessee, whether a true "taluqdar" or a "thakur," "mehwassi," "kasbati," or "naik," is bound by the terms of his lease, one term of which is that he shall only occupy for the term of years for which a lease for years is granted, and prima facie no longer. Section 73 was amended by the Act of 1901, but the amendment is immaterial on this point.

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that these Statutes do not bear in any way on the issue raised in this case. They think that the decree of the High Court cannot be sustained, and that the decision of the District Judge is equally erroneous. The fallacy underlying the former on the point as to the right of the respondent to occupy permanently is clearly revealed in the passage printed at page 496 of the Record in which the High Court deals with the lease of 1833:—

"There are no other provisions for forfeiture of the management. There is no provision for renewal of the patta, but it is to be inferred from the nature of the management and from the fact that the putta was for a term, that renewal was contemplated. This inference is supported by both previous and subsequent events; by previous events, because in 1823 permanent possession by the kasbatis was contemplated; by subsequent events, because the renewal did, in fact, take place."

Their Lordships, dealing with the legal rights of the parties alone, are clearly of opinion that the decrees of both Courts are erroneous and should be reversed, that the main appeal, that of the Secretary of State, should be allowed, and the cross-appeal dismissed, and that judgment should be enter-

Raja UDIT NARAIN SINGH—OBJECTOR

versus

RAM BALI AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY—

RESPONDENTS.

Partition—Mortgagee in possession—Party to partition between co-sharers—Objections to method of partition, when to be urged—Proprietor full, mortgagee subsequently becoming

A mortgagee in possession of a share is a party to a partition between the co-sharers. If he has any objections to make to the method of partition, he should urge them at the proper time when the partition proceedings are being drawn up and not after they are confirmed, although he has become a full proprietor after the proceedings have been drawn up.

Appeal against the order of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 5th October 1912, upholding that of the Deputy Commissioner, Bara Banki, dated the 6th September 1911, upholding the order of the Assistant Collector, Bara Banki, dated 18th April 1911.

FACTS.—This was a partition case and at the time the case commenced, the objector-appellant was the mortgagee of a share in the mahal that was to be partitioned. Subsequently, after the partition proceedings had been drawn up he acquired full proprietary rights in the share. The proceedings were confirmed and partition was made in accordance with those proceedings. The objector kept silent all this time. It was only when everything had come to a close that he objected to the method of partition. The Assistant Collector disallowed the objection and his order was confirmed in appeal by the Deputy Commissioner, on the ground that the partition had been made in accordance with the partition proceedings, to which no objection was taken. When the case came up in appeal before the Commissioner, he held that the partition having been effected according to the partition proceedings and the objection having been lodged at a very late stage, it was impossible to re-consider those proceedings, although the objector came into the mahal as auction-purchaser of the share mortgaged to him, after the case had begun and after the proceedings had been drawn up, to which he was no party, and although his predecessor-in-interest appeared to have had no interest in those proceedings.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant at the time of partition was recorded as the mortgagee in possession of a share belonging to a non-applicant. The proclamation under section 110 of the Land Revenue Act, which issued in April 1906, was signed by his mukhtar-i-am. On the 23rd of October 1908 appellant put in a petition stating that he had now acquired full proprietary rights and asking that a separate mahal should be formed of his two-anna share. This was properly rejected as being too late. The partition proceeding was confirmed on the 25th of May 1909, but up to the time of its confirmation the appellant raised no objection regarding the points he now brings forward. It was not till the 23rd of March 1911, or nearly two years later, that he brought them forward for the first time. The Deputy Commissioner has properly pointed out that the partition has been made in accordance with the partition proceeding to which no objection was made by the appellant. The Commissioner does not seem to have appreciated the fact that the appellant himself as mortgagee in possession was a party throughout the whole course of the partition. Had he any objections to urge as to the method of partition, they should have been urged at the time the partition proceeding was being drawn up.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

BALASUBRAMANIA AIYAR—

DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, O. XXXIV, rr. 1, 14—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 61, 85, 99—Same person holding several mortgages on the same property, whether entitled to sue on one mortgage reserving his rights under a prior mortgage—Mortgages, consolidation of—Several mortgages—Separate causes of action.

It is open to a mortgagee holding more than one mortgage on the same property to bring a suit for the recovery of his debt due only under one of the mortgages and to sell the property under the decree in that suit subject to his rights under a prior mortgage. [p. 319, col. 2.]

A mortgagee having several mortgages on the same property is entitled to treat them as separate causes of action and is not bound to bring one suit on all mortgages. [p. 319, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 584 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 60 of 1909.

The second appeal came on for hearing before Sankaran Nair and Tyabji, JJ., on the 11th and 16th April 1913 when the Court made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.,—The plaintiff brought this suit for the sale of the properties which were mortgaged to him under two instruments, dated the 9th December 1894 and the 6th December 1901, respectively. In his plaint after praying for certain reliefs the plaintiff added that he would file a separate suit later on for the recovery of the debt due to him on the hypothecation bond for Rs. 2,000, executed in his favour on some of the properties specified in the plaint schedule and certain other properties.

An objection was taken in the first Court by the defendants (mortgagors) that a claim like this was not maintainable, that the plaintiff was bound to sue to recover the amounts due under all the mortgages and that he could not get a decree for the sale of certain properties subject to his claim on a mortgage. The claim which was reserved was on a prior mortgage. The District Munsif overruled the objection and passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour, directing the properties to be sold for the debt which was found due on the two mortgages sued on, subject to the plaintiff's claim on the first mortgage.

On appeal the District Judge arrived at the conclusion that such a suit was not maintainable. He accordingly directed the plaintiff either to amend the plaint by also praying for the relief that he might be entitled to on the first mortgage or by abandoning his claim on that mortgage in respect of these items. The plaintiff abandoned his claim, but reserved his right to question the District Judge's order in appeal. The decree of the first Court was confirmed by him with certain modifications as to the debt due.

In second appeal, a preliminary objection is taken by the respondents' Pleader that no appeal lay against the decree of the District Judge, since there was nothing in the decree against which the plaintiff is entitled to take an objection; but the Judge holds in his judgment that the plaintiff is not entitled to reserve his claim and it is, therefore, impossible to say that the plaintiff has no right to appeal. Overruling this objection, the question that remains for consideration is whether such a suit is maintainable. It was held by this Court in Dorasami v. Venkateshaya (1) and Nattu Krishnama Chariar v. Annangara Chariar (2) that it was not open to a mortgagee to bring a suit to recover the debt due under only one of the mortgages and to sell the property under the decree subject to his claim under a prior mortgage. Those decisions were based upon two grounds, first, upon section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act which requires all persons interested in the mortgaged property to be made parties to the suit; and, secondly, upon the words of section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act and upon the form of decree for sale, No. 128 of Schedule IV of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). In a later case, Radhakrishna Iyer v. Muthuswamy Sholagan (3), it has, however, been held that there is nothing to prevent a decree being passed to enforce a mortgage subject to a prior mortgage. The prior decisions in Dorasami v. Venkateseshayyar (1) and Nattu Krishnama Chariar v. Annangara Chariar (2) were not referred to and the reasons given in those judgments have not been considered. In so far as those judgments were based upon section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, those judgments may now be disregarded, as that section has been repealed and Order XXXIV, rule 1, of Act V of 1908 now enacts that "a puisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit"; and the rule itself says that it is only those persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption that need be made parties to the suit. In so far as those judgments are based upon section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act and the form of decree for sale given in the Civil Procedure Code, the reasoning still holds good. The learned Judges in Dorasami Venkateseshayyar (1) say that according to that section a mortgagee cannot seek to obtain an order for sale on one of the mortgages only. Those provisions of law are practically reproduced now in the Civil Procedure Code, Order XXXIV, rules 2 and 4. There is no difference in this respect. We are unable to hold, therefore, that the decisions in Dorasami v. Venkateseshayyar (1) and Nattu Krishnama Chariar v. Annangara Chariar (2) have ceased to be in force on account of the repeal of the provisions of law then in force. These decisions, however, seem to be in direct conflict with the decision of Radhakrishna Iyer v. Muthuswamy Sholagan (1). The question is an important one which very frequently arises, and it is, therefore, desirable that it should be set at rest by an authoritative ruling. We would, therefore, refer to the Full Bench for decision the question, whether it is open to a mortgagee to bring a suit for the recovery of his debt by sale of the properties mortgaged to him subject to his interest in a prior mortgage.

TYABJI, J.—I agree. I only wish to add that the following points seem to me to be involved in the question which we refer to the Full Bench: first, whether the suit is defective by reason of a prior mortgage not being sued upon in the proceedings before the Court, in other words, whether the reservation purported to be made by the mortgagee of his right to sue upon the prior mortgage affects the maintainability of the suit on the later mortgage, and secondly, if a suit is so brought with such a reservation and a decree is purported to be passed with such reservation, whether the reservation can have any effect or whether a subsequent suit on the prior mortgage must be unaffected by the fact of any such reservation being made or omitted to be made. I do not wish to express any opinion on this point, but I should like it to be considered whether the decisions in Watson & Co. v. Collector of Rajshahye (4), Mohan Lal v. Ram Dial (5) and Sukh Lal v. Bhikhi (6) have any, and if so, what bearing on this point. These decisions were not cited to us and have not been considered by me with reference to this case. The second point will also involve the consideration of the question whether, if the prior mortgage comes to the cognisance of the Court, the mortgagee (even though he should purport to reserve his rights under the prior mortgage) must of necessity be put to the alternative either of amending the plaint by suing upon both mortgages or of abandoning his rights under the prior mortgage.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

WALLIS, C. J.—In support of the view taken in Dorasami v. Venkateseshayyar (1) reliance was placed on the provisions of sections 61, 85 and 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, as well as on the form of decree No. 123 of Schedule IV of the Code of Civil Procedure. The modifications introduced into sections 85 and 99, when re-enacted as Order XXXIV, rules 1 and 14 in the Code of 1908, affect all these grounds except the first. Under Order XXXIV, rule 1, which is in accordance with the decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Shankar Lal v. Ganesh Prasad (7), only parties interested in the mortgage security or the right of redemption need be joined in a suit relating to the mortgage, and the explanation makes it clear that a prior mortgagee is not to be regarded as interested in a suit brought by a puisne mortgagee for sale or foreclosure, or in a suit brought by the mortgagor to redeem a puisne mortgage. Consequently, he need not be made a party to such suits, and it follows that, if such a suit results in a decree for sale, the sale must be subject to his rights. It cannot, therefore, now be said that Order XXXIV, rule 1, requires a prior mortgagee to be joined and the property to be sold free of his mortgage whether or not the prior mortgagee be the same person as the puisne mortgagee. Secondly, the language of rule 1 shows that in the case of a puisne mortgage what is mortgaged and has to be redeemed, that is to say, the mortgaged property, consists only of the equity of redemption under the prior mortgage, and that, therefore, the form of decree in the Civil Procedure Code does not require that on redemption of the puisne mortgage, the land itself should be re-conveyed free of the prior mortgage as well. This ground then can no longer be relied on. The argument based on section 99 also goes, as the re-enacted Order XXXIV, rule 41, only debar the mortgagee from bringing the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by a suit in enforcement of the mortgage, when such sale is in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt itself, and not, as under section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, whatever the nature of the claim. This shows that the Legislature does not consider it desirable except in the case specified, to prevent the mortgagee from acquiring the equity of redemption otherwise than by suit upon the mortgage itself, and affords a strong argument against the imposition of such a restriction by the Court.

Coming now to section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act the provisions of that section, which is modelled on section 17 of the Conveyancing Act of 1881, are a restriction of the equitable rule regarding the consolidation of mortgages, viz., that a mortgagor seeking to redeem a particular mortgage should be required at the same time to redeem all the other mortgages created by him in favour of the same mortgagee. I am unable to say that the provisions of this section afford sufficient reason for refusing to allow a mortgagee suing on a puisne mortgage to sell subject to a prior mortgage in his favour. It is, no doubt, laid down in Vadju v. Vadju (8) citing Brown v. Cole (9) that, in the absence of any stipulation, express or implied, to the contrary, the right to redeem and the right to foreclose must be regarded as co-extensive; but those observations were made with reference to the time for bringing such suits and not to their other incidents. On the other hand it was laid down generally in Wickenden v. Fayson (10), that a sale cannot be directed against a mortgagee, that is to say, free of his mortgage, without his consent whether he be a party to the suit or not; see also section 96 of the Transfer of Property Act. Lastly, with reference to the query of their Lordships in Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (11), as to whether in view of the provisions of section 43, Civil Procedure Code, now Order II, rule 2, a mortgagee having several mortgages on the same property is entitled to treat them as separate causes of action or must bring one suit on all his mortgages, I think we are bound by the decisions of this Court to say that he is entitled to treat them as separate causes of action.

In the result, therefore, I would answer the question referred to us in the affirmative.

AYLING, J.—I agree.

SADASAYA AIYAR, J.—I entirely concur with the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice.

The question referred to the Full Bench is "whether it is open to a mortgagee to bring a suit for the recovery of his debt by sale of the properties mortgaged to him subject to his interest in a prior mortgage" I agree with the decisions in the two cases decided by

As regards the obiter dicta in Dorasami v. Venkateshachari (1) and *Balasubramania Nadar v. J. though I differ from the learned critic in respect of his remark (at page 170) that "it does not seem legitimate to infer" from section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act that a mortgagor cannot redeem one of two mortgages made of the same property to the same person. I also agree with the judgment of Beaman, J., in the case of Dhondo Ramachandra Kulkarni v. Bhikaji Gopal (14). I might be permitted to suggest to the Legislature that section 61 of Act IV of 1882 might be re-placed by a section enacting that all consolidation, even in the case where the mortgagee and mortgagor are the same persons and the property is the same, is abolished.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 29, applicability of—Tenancy split up—New rent fixed, if enhancement.

Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is applicable where the holding remains constant but where the original holding is split up into a number of new tenancies no question can arise as to the effect of the section.

Raj Kumar v. Faizuddin, 30 Ind. Cas. 283; 22 C. L. J. 81, referred to.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 17th September 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, dated the 21st of December 1912.

Babu Hit Lal Guha, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Chakravarti, and Babu Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for rent. In 1886, he held 11 puras of land under the plaintiff at an annual rent of Rs. 40. In 1891, by mutual consent of the parties, some lands were excluded from the holding and the remainder was divided into five parcels.

Five new and distinct tenancies were thereupon created, one to be held thenceforth by the defendant and the other four, by his four brothers respectively. The parties argued that the rent for each of the new holdings should be Rs. 8 a year. The plaintiff now seeks to recover rent on the basis of the contract of 1891. The defendant contends that the contract was in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This defence is clearly of no avail. Section 29 provides that the money rent of an occupancy raiyat may be enhanced by contract, subject to the condition that the amount must not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee the rent previously payable by the raiyat. This provision is plainly applicable only where the holding remains constant [Raj Kumar v. Faizuddin (1).] Here the original holding was split up into five new tenancies. Consequently no question can arise as to the effect of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the transaction.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal—Partition suit—Preliminary decree, nature of, appeal against, if competent, when—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 97, scope of.

Under section 97 of the Code of Civil Procedure not only has an appellant a right to appeal against a preliminary decree, but he is bound to appeal or else he is precluded from questioning it in a subsequent proceeding.

Where no appeal is preferred against the final decree, the appeal against the preliminary decree is not incompetent.

Nistarinee Dabee v. Rai Mohun Biswas, 20 Ind. Cas. 576; 18 C. L. J. 214 and Ugra Narain Singh v. Basan Narain Singh, 19 Ind. Cas. 630; 17 C. W. N. 868; 18 C. L. J. 209, followed.

The law gives a right to appeal against the preliminary decree and that right is not taken away because no appeal is preferred against the final decree, which is subject to the decision in the appeal in the preliminary decree. If that appeal succeeds the final decree ought to be amended in accordance with the result of the appeal.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Midnapur, dated the 29th November 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, Ghatal, dated the 9th of September 1910.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Appellant.

Babus Jyoti Prosad Sarbadhikari, Trailokhya Nath Ghose and Dharendra Kanta Roy (for Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Midnapore, dated the 29th of November, reversing the decision of the Munsif. The suit was a partition suit. Two points have been raised in this case, of which the first is whether the appeal was properly preferred to the lower Appellate Court. To decide this the following dates are necessary. The preliminary decree was made on the 9th September 1910. The present appeal was preferred before the lower Appellate Court on the 4th November 1910. The final decree was made in the partition suit on the 11th March 1911. Under section 97 of the Code of Civil Procedure not only has the appellant a right to appeal against the preliminary decree, but he is bound to appeal or else he is precluded from questioning it in a subsequent proceeding. The appellant contends that as no appeal was preferred against the final decree, the appeal against the preliminary decree is incompetent. We do not think that it is so. That is quite clear from the decision in the case of Nistarinee Dabee v. Rai Mohun Biswas (1). A similar view seems to have been taken in the case of Ugra Narain Singh v. Basan Narain Singh (2). There is another decision * * * * to the contrary, namely, the case of Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (3). It seems to us that we ought to follow the decisions in the first two cases cited. It is quite clear that the law gave a right to appeal against the preliminary decree and that right was not taken away because no appeal was preferred against the final decree, which was subject to the decision in the appeal in the preliminary decree. If that appeal succeeds the final decree ought to be amended in accordance with the result of the appeal. The case of Mackenzie v. Narsingh Sahai (4) has also been relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellant. That case, it is admitted, was under the old Code of Civil Procedure. There a party preferred an appeal against a preliminary decree without preferring an appeal against the final decree. Section 97 was expressly enacted to get over the practice which had grown up by virtue of a Full Bench decision of this Court. There is, therefore, nothing in the first contention.

The second question raised is whether there was a previous partition. It is purely a question of fact. The learned Judge has held that there was a previous partition and we cannot disturb his finding.

The present appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Court-fee, amount of, payable on appeal—Redemption of usufructuary mortgage—Appeal, subject-matter of dispute in.

Where in a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage the mortgagor seeks on appeal to establish that he is not liable to pay the money which has been adjudged by the Court below to be due to the mortgagee, he is liable to pay a Court-fee on that amount of the money which is the subject-matter in dispute in the appeal and not on the amount of the principal sum secured by the mortgage.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 31st May 1913.

Babus Har Dayal and Daya Kishen Seth, for the Appellants.

Babus Bisheshar Nath, Lachhman Prasad and Mahesh Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage and for the recovery of surplus profits said to have been realized by the defendants from the mortgaged property. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the mortgage-money was satisfied from the usufruct and that Rs. 22,877-6-8 were approximately due to them from the defendants. The Court below decreed the claim for redemption, subject to the payment of Rs. 19,541 by the plaintiffs to the mortgagees.

In this appeal the plaintiffs seek to establish that the entire mortgage-money was satisfied from the usufruct and that a sum of not less than Rs. 10,000 was due on account of surplus profits to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have valued the appeal at Rs. 29,541, but have paid Court-fee on the principal sum of Rs. 2,500 secured by the mortgage. The Court-fee payable in appeal is, however, determined, as laid down in Ram Adhin v. Hanuman (1), by the difference between the amount adjudged to be payable by the mortgagor and the amount, if any, which the mortgagor admits he is liable to pay. So far as the mortgagor seeks to recover the mortgaged property, he is liable to pay a Court-fee on the principal sum secured within the meaning of section 7, clause IX, of the Court Fees Act. But when he seeks on appeal establish, that he is not liable to pay the money which has been adjudged by the Court below to be due to the mortgagee, he is liable to pay a Court-fee on the amount of the subject-matter in dispute in the appeal. Order XXXIV, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that the Court should settle the accounts of the mortgage once for all and pass a decree, directing the defendant, if so required, to re-transfer the property and to pay to the plaintiff the amount which he may have realized in excess. If in the plaint the mortgagor requires the Court to direct the mortgagee to pay to him any money, which he may have realized in excess, he should pay the requisite Court-fee on that relief, treating that portion of the claim as one for accounts within the meaning of section 7, clause IX (f), read with section 11, of the Court Fees Act. The decision in Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (2) seems hardly to be consistent with the language of section 7, clause IX, of the Court Fees Act, which applies to suits to recover immoveable property mortgaged, and, as pointed out in Kodi Venkatappa Row v. Barnala Suryanarayana (3) no additional relief can be granted unless the requisite Court-fee is paid on the same. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants, however, states that he is willing to forego his claim for surplus profits as laid in the plaint and the memorandum of appeal. The plaintiffs-appellants are, therefore, liable to pay a Court-fee on the sum of Rs. 19,541, which is the subject-matter of this appeal, after deducting such fee as they may have already paid on the appeal. We direct the plaintiffs-appellants accordingly to pay the deficiency of Rs. 625 within a month from this date. The claim for surplus mesne profits as laid in the

Babu NARENDRA BAHADUR SINGH—

Mortgage—Commission agreed to be paid to mortgagee—Mortgagor's liability to pay commission—Circumstances attending agreement to be looked into—Penalty, definition of—Punishment, element of, essential—Default, agreement to pay interest at, when penalty—Interest, penal rate of—Stipulations by way of penalty—Court, duty of—Compensation, reasonable, assessment of—Conduct of parties subsequent to execution of deed to be considered—Mortgage-suit—Novation—Acceptance, qualified, effect of—Substitution of existing mortgage-deed by executing fresh deed, agreement as to, not fulfilled—Mortgagor, remedy and position of—Reduction in money in suit, claim as to—Estoppel, equitable—Construction of document—Mortgage-deed, interpretation of—Right to sue, accrual of—Amendment of plaint—Costs, when defendant not entitled to—Limitation—Penal clauses in mortgage-deed, amount awarded for breach of, if portion of mortgage-money—Charge on mortgaged property—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Discretion of Court—Post diem interest—Court, power of, to fix interest from date for payment till date of realisation—Circumstances of each case to be examined.

Where a mortgagor deliberately and voluntarily, without any deception, surprise, pressure, mistake of fact, or unfair dealing, agrees to pay a commission to the mortgagee, in short, where the parties are completely on equal terms when the agreement is arrived at, and pays it, the mortgagor cannot, in a suit subsequently brought by the mortgagee on the basis of the mortgage, avoid his liability for the commission paid. [p. 332, col. 1.]

"Penalty" may be defined as a liability agreed to by the parties to be imposed as a punishment, fair or unfair, on the party committing the breach of contract. [p. 335, col. 2.]

An agreement to pay at default simple interest, or even compound interest at the same rate as the simple interest, fixes the price for accommodation of money at an ordinary or at a progressive rate and does not contain the element of punishment or penalty; but an agreement to pay at default a higher rate of interest does contain that element. [p. 335, col. 1.]

Where a mortgage-deed contained inter alia (a) a primary obligation to re-pay the principal money in fifteen instalments with simple interest at 8 per cent. per annum payable six-monthly on balance due after payment of instalments due, (b) a secondary obligation to re-pay, in case of default of instalments, compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests on each instalment or part of an instalment not paid by due date, and (c) another secondary obligation to re-pay, in case of default of interest due, compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests on the balance of interest not paid by due date:

Held, that the stipulations (b) and (c) were stipulations by way of penalty within the meaning of section 74 of the Contract Act. [p. 336, col. 1.]

Where a stipulation in a deed is found to be in the nature of a penalty, the Court in assessing the amount of reasonable compensation must examine the evidence relating to the conduct of the parties subsequent to the execution of the deed. [p. 336, col. 1.]

No legal novation or modification of an existing contract is created in a case where one party proposes the novation but the other party accepts the proposal in a qualified manner. [p. 346, col. 2.]

Where a mortgagee agrees to have the existing mortgage-deed substituted by another on more favourable terms to the mortgagor, but never fulfills that agreement the mortgagor cannot subsequently claim the benefit of the terms of the deed that was to be substituted, if he had failed to sue the mortgagee for specific performance of the agreement within the limitation prescribed therefor by law. [p. 346, col. 2; p. 347, col. 1.]

A debtor cannot, by invoking in his aid the doctrine of equitable estoppel against the creditor, say that the creditor is bound, not by the terms of the contract entered into between them, but by those of another contract subsequently arrived at between the debtor and a third person for the purpose of paying off the existing debt, and afterwards broken off, unless the debtor can show that he was induced by the creditor to break his contract with the third person. [p. 347, col. 2.]

Where a clause in a mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee could not sue unless (1) the entire demand for two instalments for two consecutive years and interest for the principal on two consecutive years remained unpaid and (2) nothing was paid for two consecutive years on account of principal or interest:

Held, that the two sub-clauses were quite independent of each other, and that the right to sue did not arise unless nothing had been paid on account of principal or interest for two years. [p. 348, col. 1.]

Where an amendment of plaint is allowed, which is purely of a formal nature and does not in any way prejudice the defendant or increase his costs, he is entitled to no costs. [p. 348, col. 1.]

The amount awarded as reasonable compensation for breach of penal clauses in a mortgage-deed must be considered for the purposes of limitation as a portion of the mortgage-money, and can be charged against the mortgaged property. [p. 342, col. 1.]

A penal clause is not invalidated by section 74 of the Contract Act. It remains effective, but the amount awarded as compensation for its breach is left to the discretion of the Court up to the maximum fixed by the clause. [p. 349, col. 1.]

A Court is not in any way bound to fix the rate of interest from the date fixed for payment up till the date of realisation according to the provisions of the mortgage-deed, but in fixing it it ought to be guided by the circumstances of each particular case. [p. 350, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 31st October 1912.

JUDGMENT.—The suit, against the decree in which the present appeal and cross-objections have been filed, was instituted on the 22nd of August 1911 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad. It was subsequently transferred for hearing to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, by whom it was decided on the 31st October 1912. The plaintiff is the Oudh Commercial Bank, Limited, Fyzabad. The Manager of the Bank was Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur and there were several Directors. The suit was instituted on the foot of a deed of simple mortgage, dated the 2nd September 1894, executed by Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh, Talukdar of Hanswar, for a consideration of Rs. 2,35,000. The plaintiff Bank claimed Rs. 9,25,935-14-3 principal and interest, together with such demands, as under the terms of the deed might become due from the date of the suit to the date of realization, along with costs and interest up to the date fixed by the Court for payment, and in default of payment the attachment and sale of the mortgaged property in satisfaction of the amount due out of the sale-proceeds, and further an assertion of the right of the Bank to a decree for the realization of the remaining money if the sale-proceeds were not sufficient to cover the entire demand. The defendant admitted execution of the deed and the accuracy of the account and statement of re payments. He denied his liability for a sum of Rs. 4,700 said to have been paid towards commission. He further set up that the whole claim was barred by limitation, and took a secondary plea that, even if the whole claim were not barred by limitation, the claim for the mass of interest was barred by limitation. He further asserted that the claim for interest could, in no way, be considered as a charge upon the mortgage security. He pleaded in addition undue influence, fraud, and misrepresentation, and claimed certain modifications. Fourteen issues were framed.

The learned Subordinate Judge found, that the defendant's acceptance of the clauses as to enhanced rate of interest had not been secured through undue influence, fraud, or misrepresentation, and that the stipulations as to enhanced interest were neither hard nor unconscionable. He found, however, that one stipulation was of a penal nature. His decision as to the modifications set up was that the defendant had not established that any of the alleged modifications could affect the terms of the deed. He decided the plea of limitation against the defendant, and in the end awarded a decree for Rs. 7,26,725-15-6 with proportionate costs. He declared the whole amount a charge on the mortgaged property and fixed the 30th of April 1913 as the last date when the decretal amount should be paid.

The appeal filed by the defendant traverses the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge on every point decided against the defendant. The cross-objections traverse the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge on every point decided against the plaintiff. The appeal has been argued very fully by leading Counsel, and the whole of the points in dispute have been set out thoroughly and clearly.

The deed was written in Urdu. An accurate translation of its terms is on the record. The arrangement of the clauses is unmethodical, and in order to understand the terms of the deed; it is better to rearrange its provisions so as to bring out each head. The references are to the clauses.

The deed is dated the 2nd September 1894. The amount advanced was Rs. 2,35,000.

All the taluka villages were hypothecated in security.

Conditions as to re-payment of the amount advanced with simple interest.

(1) The amount advanced was to be re-paid in fifteen instalments of varying amounts falling due on specified dates, and

(2) interest at 8 per cent. per annum was to be paid on 30th June and 31st December on the amount due for "principal." (The Bank in their calculations have interpreted the word "principal" in this place to mean amount advanced less amount re-paid on account of instalments and amount due on unpaid instalments. It will be discussed later whether the word "principal" should bear that meaning).

Conditions as to payment of compound interest.

(1) In default of full payment of amount due on account of any instalment on due date, interest at 12 per cent. per annum, which was to be calculated with six-monthly rests (in other words, compound interest at 12 per cent. with six-monthly rests), was to be charged on the amount unpaid.

(2) In default of payment of amount due for interest on due dates at 8 per cent. on the principal (the interpretation of this word in the calculations of the Bank has already been noted) compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests was to be charged on the balances of interest due.

(4) If there were a balance due on account of principal or interest or both on 1st September 1909, compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests was to be charged on the balance.

Post diem interest.

(9 and 14) In case the Bank had to sue on the foot of the deed, interest was to run on the decretal amount plus costs at 12 per cent. per annum till realization. (This interest is treated as simple interest in paragraph 9 and as compound interest with six-monthly rests in paragraph 14.)

Right to sue.

(5 and 6) The villages hypothecated were to be cleared of all declared encumbrances. If that were not done within four months, the Bank was to be at liberty to bring a suit for attachment and sale of the hypothecated property.

(10) If the villages hypothecated were encumbered with undeclared encumbrances or decayed, the Bank was to have a right to sue from the date of discovery of undeclared encumbrances or the date of decay.

(7) If both the following contingencies arose:

(i) the entire demand for instalments for two consecutive years and interest on principal for two consecutive years remained unpaid, and

(ii) nothing were paid within two consecutive years on account of principal or interest, the Bank was to have the right to sue for the whole amount due.

(14) If the mortgagor and his heirs "neglected to fulfil the conditions of the deed" or did not pay interest or the instalments at the appointed times the Bank was to have the right to sue, and to obtain compound interest on the decretal amount at 12 per cent. with six-monthly rests in conformity with the conditions laid down in paragraph 7.

(The meaning of these provisions will be discussed later).

NARENDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. OUDH COMMERCIAL BANK, LTD.

Duties and disabilities of the mortgagor.

- (13) He was to pay any balance due.
 (8) He was not to mortgage, sell, hypothecate, or transfer the property or get it placed in the charge of the Court of Wards.
 (12) He was deprived of the power to effect a decrease in the gross rental or to grant leases for more than seven years.

Rights of mortgagor.

- (15) He could pay instalments in excess of Rs. 10,000 and pay off the whole balance after two years with one year's notice.

We proceed to examine the evidence which shows how the deed came into being. On the 19th September 1893 the defendant submitted a form of an application for a loan to the plaintiff Bank (Exhibit 2). In this application he stated that his annual income was Rs. 50,000 and requested a loan of Rs. 2,25,000 for payment of his prior debts to be re-paid by instalments within fifteen years. He offered to pay 8 per cent. per annum on the loan and proposed to hypothecate the whole of his taluka (the net profits of which he stated to be Rs. 41,473) as security. The Bank replied in a letter, dated the 21st of September 1893, asking him to state his liabilities in detail and to give further particulars as to the security. On the 5th October 1893 the defendant replied enclosing a list of his liabilities, which was subsequently found to be inaccurate, and offering to give further details as to the security. He appears to have sent a subsequent letter dated 12th November 1893, which is not in evidence. To that letter the Bank replied on the 21st November 1893 stating that he had not so far sent complete details as to the security. The defendant appears to have written again on the 27th November 1893. The contents of that letter are not proved. The Bank replied to that letter on the same date, requesting the defendant to come to Fyzabad town (the defendant resided in the Fyzabad District at a distance from Fyzabad town) in order that he might see one of the Directors, by name Hari Singh, to discuss the terms of the loan with him personally. It does not appear whether the appellant did or did not comply with that request. However another letter passed dated the 19th January 1894 from the Bank to the defendant, which appears to show that there had been an interview of the parties between the 27th of November 1893 and 19th of January 1894. On the 28th March 1894 a draft deed (Exhibit 186) was sent by the Bank to the defendant. This fact is established by the contents of a letter dated 7th April 1894 from the Bank to the defendant (Exhibit 81). The defendant replied on the 14th April 1894 (Exhibit 9) that he had been unable to sign the draft, as it required some amendments which he could not discuss properly except in a personal interview, and that he was ill and unable to come to Fyzabad though he hoped to do so later. He apparently came to Fyzabad later, for in a subsequent letter of the 13th of May 1894 he refers to a visit to Fyzabad on the 29th April 1894. He sent the draft with certain corrections to the Bank on 7th May 1894, as is shown by letter Exhibit 10. The draft is before us. It shows that the defendant had gone through every paragraph, noting the portion which he accepted and the portions with regard to which he proposed corrections. When he proposed corrections he inserted the nature of the corrections proposed in the margin. He treated a subsequent draft in the same manner. Comparing this draft with the deed that was finally executed, we find that clauses 1 and 2, which have been retained in practically the same words in the final deed, were accepted by the defendant. The third clause, which related to the payments of the instalments, was not accepted by the defendant. He proposed alterations both in the dates of payment and the amounts payable. The effect of those alterations (which were finally accepted by the Bank, subject to the modification that as Rs. 2,35,000 were eventually borrowed alterations became necessary which involved an increase of the four last instalments) was to cause the dates for re-payments of instalments not to coincide with the dates for re-payments of interest, and further to reduce the amounts of instalments payable at first and increase the amounts of instalments payable later. As it was the intention of the parties that interest should be paid upon the balance of the principal due, the result of these alterations was that while the interest was high the instalments would be smaller, and when the amount of interest payable decreased the instalments would be larger. The suggested correction shows that the defendant was capable of making an intelligent arrangement in his own interests. He accepted the fourth clause, which allowed compound interest at 12 per cent. with six-monthly rests to be calculated upon any balance of instalments not paid within fifteen years. This clause in the first draft has been reproduced practically in the final deed. He accepted the fifth clause, which has been slightly altered in the final deed. In the first draft the defendant is given three months within which to clear off declared encumbrances and in the final deed he was given four. In the sixth clause he proposed certain alterations which did not materially affect the force of the clause. With regard to the seventh clause there was a distinct disagreement. The Bank had inserted in the seventh clause a condition of the nature of the condition 7 (i) as given earlier in this judgment in the description of the contents of the deed. The defendant did not wish the Bank to have the power to sue for the whole amount due if the entire demand for instalments for two consecutive years and interest on principal for two consecutive years remained unpaid. He wished the Bank to have only the power to sue for the amount of unpaid instalments and interest, if such a contingency arose. He agreed to the eighth clause, which prohibited his power to transfer. The ninth clause in the draft was to have the effect of allowing compound interest at 12 per cent. with six-monthly rests by way of post diem interest. The defendant agreed to the principle, but wished to alter the words. The tenth clause was objected to by the defendant. It refers to his liability in case of disturbance of the mortgage security. The eleventh clause in the draft declared a right to charge compound interest at 12 per cent. with six-monthly rests on the amount of any instalments not paid within due date. The defendant desired to alter the wording of the clause. He accepted the principle. The twelfth clause referred to the defendant's disability to effect a decrease in the gross rental of the hypothecated property or to grant a lease for more than seven years. It has been practically reproduced in the final deed. The defendant accepted this clause in its entirety. The thirteenth clause is a more or less formal clause by which the defendant was to agree that he and his heirs and representatives should be bound by the terms of the deed. He accepted this clause in its entirety. The fourteenth clause purported to give the Bank the power to sue for the whole amount due on certain conditions. It reproduced and included the seventh clause. The defendant did not agree to this condition. He desired that the Bank should only have the power to sue for the instalments due. The fifteenth clause which defined the rights of the Bank and gave the defendant power to pay more than the stipulated amount of instalment, was not noted on by the defendant.

On the 7th May 1894 (Exhibit 10) the defendant sent the draft back to the Bank with his proposed amendments on it, and the Bank is said by him in his letter of the 13th of May 1894 (Exhibit 11) to have replied at once that the Directors would consider his proposals. In a letter dated 16th May 1894 (Exhibit 12) from the Bank to the defendant it is stated clearly that the Bank would consider the amendments. This letter crossed the defendant's letter of the 13th May and on the 16th May (Exhibit 13) the Bank repeated in reply to the letter of the 13th that the amendments would be carefully considered. In these letters the Bank requested the defendant to come personally and arrange the terms at an interview. On the 19th May 1894 (Exhibit 14) the defendant wrote to the Bank apologising for his inability to come. On the 30th May 1894 (Exhibit 15) the Bank wrote to defendant expostulating with him for failing to come. On the 5th June 1894 (Exhibit 16) the defendant wrote a long letter to the Bank explaining the reasons for his absence. A second draft was then submitted by the Bank to the defendant. This draft, Exhibit 187, was prepared on the 21st July 1894. The amount to be borrowed was again stated in this draft to be Rs. 2,25,000. Clauses 1 and 2 remained practically the same. In clause 3 the Bank accepted the defendant's suggestions as to the dates of payments and the amounts to be paid on account of the instalments. The fourth clause remained practically the same. In the fifth clause the period for clearing the declared encumbrances was extended to four months. The defendant suggested some alterations in wording of the clause for the extension of the period. The defendant took no exception to the sixth clause which has been practically retained in the deed. With regard to the seventh clause the parties were again in dispute. The Bank wished to sue for the whole amount due, if for two years consecutively payment was not made of instalments or on account of interest. The defendant had previously objected to the Bank having a right to sue for the whole amount due on account of default of payment of instalments or interest. In this draft he wished to cut out that clause altogether, and to substitute a clause giving the Bank a right to sue for the whole amount if nothing were paid for two years on account of principal or interest. To the eighth clause the defendant wished to add words, giving him the right to obtain further loans on the mortgaged property by means of deeds of subsequent charge. The ninth clause referred to post diem interest. The defendant noted against that "this is quite unnecessary but I do not see any harm in it." The tenth to the fifteenth clauses were accepted by the defendant. They are practically the same as those clauses in the existing deed.

The only correspondence which we can discover with regard to this second draft is contained in four letters from the defendant to the Bank, Exhibit 189, Exhibit 190, Exhibit 17 and Exhibit 191, dated respectively the 1st of August, the 4th of August, the 8th of August and the 18th of August 1894. Exhibit 189 refers to certain amendments proposed. Exhibit 190 is important on two points. In this (as translated) the defendant states: "The commission on Rs. 2,35,000 borrowed from the Bank comes to Rs. 4,700 at the rate of 2 per cent. The stamp required for the execution of the deed will be worth Rs. 1,175. The money required for the stamp should either be sent to me or you may yourself purchase the stamp from the treasury. However after the execution and completion of the deed, this entire money which amounts to Rs. 5,875 shall be deducted from the debt. The rest of the money will be held in deposit by the Bank and the same will be made payable by means of cheques." In Exhibit 191 he says much the same. These two letters show that the amount to be borrowed had been raised from Rs. 2,25,000 to the figure at which it finally stood, Rs. 2,35,000. Further the defendant had agreed that after the execution of the deed and after the payment of Rs. 2,35,000 to him by the placing of that amount to his credit in the Bank's books (presumably in current account) a debit should be made against that account of Rs. 4,700 on account of commission and Rs. 1,175 on account of the expenses of the stamp on the deed. It is clear that the deed was finally executed on the 2nd September 1894, and it is to be noted that the difficulty with regard to clause 7 was got over by inserting both the suggestion of the Bank and the suggestion of the defendant with regard to the Bank's right to sue for the whole amount in case of default. The manner in which this deed was prepared explains the obscurity of certain passages, the inconsistencies and redundancies. Continual alterations by parties who were desiring different objects resulted in the creation of a clumsily worded document.

Having examined the manner in which the transaction came into being, we shall now discuss the pleas taken by the learned Counsel for the appellant in the eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh grounds of appeal to the effect that the execution of those clauses of the deed which refer to the payment of enhanced interest was procured by undue influence, fraud, and misrepresentation, and that those clauses themselves are hard and unconscionable.

An examination of the notes and criticisms of the defendant upon the drafts indicates that the defendant was perfectly capable of understanding the meaning of every term of the document and their effect. He was not only capable of objecting to what did not suit him, but he was capable of suggesting what would suit him. It will be seen that the negotiations which culminated in the execution of the deed in suit lasted very nearly a year, and that during that period the defendant had studied at his own residence the conditions of the proposed arrangement for many months. The defendant has given evidence on his own behalf, and his case appears to be that he understood what would be the effect of the clauses with regard to enhancement of interest, but that he assented to those clauses because he had been assured by Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur, who was then one of the Directors, and by Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur that those clauses would never be enforced against him. The learned Subordinate Judge has given satisfactory reasons for his finding that he does not believe the evidence of the defendant upon this point. We agree with his conclusion and with the reasons supporting it. We find that in the first draft (Exhibit 186) the defendant, while taking exception to other clauses, accepted unconditionally the second clause, with regard to the charge of compound interest on arrears of interest, and proposed with regard to the eleventh clause, that related to the charge of compound interest on unpaid instalments, alterations in the wording only. He accepted the principle that compound interest should be paid on overdue instalments. His explanation, that he was talked over by Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur and the others into accepting these clauses on the understanding that they would never be enforced, would, in our opinion, be too weak to be accepted if it stood alone. In view of the fact that when enhanced interest was charged under these clauses he made no protest, it becomes incredible. We find that, when he received an account charging interest at the enhanced rate, he replied on the 21st October 1896 (Exhibit 28) excusing himself for non-payment of the amount due because he had no ready money and making no protest against the charge of enhanced interest. On the 10th February 1897 (Exhibit 30) he writes acknowledging the correctness of the accounts submitted and making no protest as to the enhanced interest charged. Nowhere can it be found that he made a protest in subsequent correspondence against the enhanced rate of interest. Thus there is not the slightest ground for a finding that the defendant was induced by anybody to believe that the clause allowing enhanced interest would not be enforced, or that his consent to any portion of the deed as executed was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation.

The plea of undue influence is based on the following grounds. It is asserted that the defendant owed money to the Bank at the time that the negotiations commenced, that the Bank had threatened to sue him with regard to that amount, and that he was so obsessed by fear of legal proceedings being taken against him that he was unable to resist the influence put upon him by the Bank to accede to onerous conditions. Further, it is set up that Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur had been the defendant's legal adviser in various cases (the gentleman in question was a Pleader practising in Fyzabad), and that the defendant was thus absolutely under the influence of Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur. At the time that the deed was executed the defendant's debts amounted in all to Rs. 2,25,811-8-3. Many of these debts were on account of deeds executed by the defendant's father. Out of this total amount he owed the plaintiff Bank at the date that the deed was executed only Rs. 22,517-9-6. If the Bank had sued him for that amount, he could have paid it from six months of his income for on his own showing in his application for the loan (Exhibit 2) his annual income was then Rs. 50,000. At the time that the negotiations commenced he owed the Bank something less than Rs. 22,517-9-6. The suggestion of undue influence in respect of what he previously owed the Bank cannot possibly be accepted. With regard to the alleged influence of Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur on the defendant, we find no reason to suppose that Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur exercised any influence whatever upon the defendant to induce him to accede to the terms of the loan. It would appear rather that the defendant utilized Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur's friendship to obtain a loan, his legal adviser happening also to be a Director of the Bank from which he wished to obtain money, and he appears to have trusted to the latter gentleman's friendly offices to obtain what he wanted. With regard to his other debts, the learned Subordinate Judge has shown that he was paying higher interest on the deeds that he proposed to satisfy than the interest which the Bank agreed to accept. This transaction was distinctly to his advantage. The defendant's income, as has been stated, was then some Rs. 50,000 a year, Rs. 41,473 of which were obtained from the profits of the mortgaged property. In ordinary circumstances he had every prospect of re-paying the amount of interest and the instalments due under the terms of the deed and retaining sufficient income to support himself with suitable comfort. At the time that he executed the deed he had every reason to suppose that his income was likely to rise. It appears that, in spite of the fact that the land revenue on his taluka has been somewhat enhanced, the income actually has risen, for the defendant stated in his evidence (o. p. 75) that his income in 1912 was Rs. 63,000. The terms of the deed were not onerous if he paid the interest and the instalments regularly. As far as we can see, in spite of his losses at the time of the famine of 1896 he could have, if he wished, paid the interest and the instalments regularly all along. We, therefore, find that he was not induced by undue influence to accede to any portion of the deed, and from our previous findings it is clear that the terms of the deed are neither hard nor unconscionable.

We next consider the point taken in the 23rd ground of appeal. The amount of Rs. 4,700, which was included in the total consideration of Rs. 2,35,000, was paid on account of commission by a cheque dated the 4th of September 1894, two days after the execution of the deed (Exhibit A36). Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur endeavoured to explain in examination-in-chief what was meant by this item. He stated (o. p. 125): "The sum of Rs. 4,700 was paid to the plaintiff by the defendant as commission. It had been agreed with the defendant before the loan was advanced that he will have to pay Rs. 2 per cent. on the loan as commission since the money had been lying unused so long. (Exhibit 190 shown). This agreement as to commission must have been made before the 4th August 1894." In cross-examination (o. p. 148) he stated, "the defendant paid Rs. 4,700 at the rate of 2 per cent. on the amount advanced. The money was lying idle for about three or four months. We did not invest it nor attempt to invest it because we thought we might be called upon to advance it to the defendant any time.

"I did intimate to the defendant that he would be liable for interest upon the money lying idle.

"Q. Whether you charged commission at the rate of 2 per cent. calculating the loss of interest on the money lying idle?

"A. I did not calculate the actual loss in interest when fixing the amount or rate of commission.

"(Exhibit A 33 shown). The word commission appears on the cheque and also in the Bank accounts (Exhibits A 34 and A 35.)

"Q. I put it to you that you are ashamed to admit that your Bank charged commission, though you actually did charge it and now you call it compensation?

"A. No, I am not ashamed of it."

The defendant deposed (o. p. 73), "there was no talk about the commission before the deed was executed. There was no talk about compensation to be paid for the money lying idle in the Bank during the negotiations. I issued the cheque for payment of commission after the deed had been executed," and at o. p. 115 when shown Exhibits Nos. 190 and 191 he stated: "They bear my signatures. These are my letters. On going through these letters I now say that before execution of the deed in suit I had agreed to pay commission to the plaintiff Bank."

We have already given the portions of these letters relating to the payment of commission. It is clear that the charge for commission at 2 per cent. was of the nature of a bonus. There is nothing to show that any particular sum of money was kept idle. But the letters and the accounts show that Rs. 2,35,000 were credited in consideration of the execution of the deed to the defendant in the Bank's books, and that, after that amount had been credited, he paid the Bank Rs. 4,700 on account of this commission.

There are two leading Chancery cases on the subject of commission. The first case is the case of James v. Kerr (1). In that case a young man in poor circumstances borrowed £100 from a Solicitor at 5 per cent. per annum, and covenanted in a deed of mortgage to employ a particular third person as his Solicitor to conduct his case in an impending action and to pay, if he succeeded in that action, £225 by way of bonus. He succeeded in his action and then sued to redeem the mortgage. The Court held (1) that the mortgage was tainted with champerty, (2) that the bonus was illegal as being a collateral advantage stipulated for by a mortgagee and (3) that the transaction was voidable as an undue advantage obtained from the mortgagor when under the pressure of distress. Redemption was accordingly decreed for £100 and interest thereon. In that case the bonus was disallowed on three grounds, the two most important of which were that the transaction was champertous, and that undue influence had been exercised upon the mortgagor. It is true that the plea that there was a collateral advantage which clogged redemption was also accepted. The learned Judge, who decided this case, decided the subsequent case of Mainland v. Upjohn (2). In that case he decided that, when a commission had actually been paid, the mortgagor could not obtain credit for the payment of that amount in a subsequent suit on the mortgage. He stated at page 143: "Sir Horace Davey was justified in saying that Mr. Upjohn could not insist on any commission which had not actually been paid, but he said—and this is really the turning point to my mind on this part of the case—that where the commission had actually been paid the transaction amounted in fact to this—the payment by the mortgagee of the whole amount of the advance to the mortgagor and the return by the mortgagor of a certain part of it to the mortgagee. It does not matter whether the money was actually paid over in cash and then re-paid. If two persons not only understand what they are about—and I have no doubt that in this case Mr. Douglas did thoroughly understand what he was about—if those persons meet and one says to the other, 'now

I will lend you £1,000 upon condition that out of it you pay me a certain sum as commission for that loan,' and the transaction is concluded there and then on that basis, and only a portion of the £1,000, deducting the bonus, is paid over, that is equivalent to the payment over of the full amount of the £1,000 and a re-payment out of it of the bonus. If the mortgagor has been deceived, or taken by surprise, or if there has been any oppression or improper dealing in the matter, there is ample equity, of course, to set it right on that ground; but if both parties know precisely what they are doing, and this is voluntarily done, and done in pursuance of a deliberate bargain, how a mortgagor can possibly say to a mortgagee, 'pay that money back to me,' I cannot conceive. It is impossible. The money can only be recovered when it has been paid over under a mistake of fact, or under some pressure—some advantage taken of the payer which disentitles the payee to retain the money. But where no such advantage has been taken, where there has been no such improper pressure, if the parties are completely on equal terms, all I can say is that the money in such a case as that must be treated as having been actually paid by the mortgagor to the mortgagee as an inducement to lend the rest of the amount; and then, I conceive, the mortgagor has no right to recover it, nor has he any right to complain that the whole amount is charged against him in the mortgage-deed. Of course, all this is quite independent of any case of improper dealing, exorbitant amount, great oppression, dealing with an ignorant person who has not got proper advice, and so on. All cases of that kind I entirely exclude; but treating for the moment both parties as being on completely equal terms, one not at all under the influence of the other, both bargaining and knowing perfectly well what they are about, in my opinion, money so paid over cannot legally be claimed back, nor can a mortgagor say to the mortgagee in such a case, 'though I have paid you that money and agreed that it should be received by you as a consideration for the advance you have made me, I will strike it out of the mortgage account.'" to the case of Potter v. Edwards (3). Now in that case a commission had been allowed by the Court of Equity on the ground that the security was risky and Kay, J., discussed the decision in Potter v. Edwards (3) and accepted it completely. It is to be noted, however, that in the subsequent passage he has carried the doctrine further than the doctrine laid down in Potter v. Edwards (3). He has applied principles, which relate to all cases in which a commission has been actually paid apart from the fact whether the security is or is not risky. There is no conflict between the decision of James v. Kerr (1) and Mainland v. Upjohn (2), because in the previous case the commission had not been paid. We find it necessary to draw attention to this point as the head-note of the report in Mainland v. Upjohn (2) is misleading. It commences, "where advances have been made by a mortgagee to mortgagor upon security of a speculative character, such as a building estate." We do not find that Kay, J., decided anywhere that security in Mainland v. Upjohn (2) was of a speculative character. The security was partly free-hold property, the mortgagee does not appear ever to have lent more than could be recovered with safety upon the security, and Kay, J., has clearly laid down that the question of risk does not enter in the determination of the point.

Applying the principles of Mainland v. Upjohn (2) the defendant would not be entitled to the recovery of Rs. 4,700. He had not been deceived or taken by surprise, nor had there been any improper pressure or unfair dealing in the matter. Both parties knew perfectly well what they were doing. Their acts were voluntary and in pursuance of a deliberate bargain. There was no mistake of fact, no pressure, and no advantage taken of the prayer. The parties were completely on equal terms.

The principles in Mainland v. Upjohn (1) have been affirmed, in so far as Indian Courts are concerned, by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sunder Koor v. Rai Sham Krishen (4). It will be seen from the report of that case (page 152) that a sum of Rs. 8,700 and a sum of Rs. 3,300 had been expended for commission on the execution of the first and second bonds. These sums formed a portion of two sums of Rs. 35,000 and Rs. 20,000 (page 157) and were separable from the remaining items. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court had held that the larger amounts (which included the lesser) were chargeable, and their Lordships of the Privy Council agreed with their conclusion. We, therefore, decide this point against the appellant.

We shall now take up the points covered by the 12th and 13th grounds of appeal, which are also covered by a portion of the cross-objections. We shall first examine the difference in figures up to the end of 1895 if instalments and interest had been paid in full or if nothing had been paid on account of instalments and interest. Under the terms of the deed the mortgagor had to pay interest at 8 per cent. on Rs. 2,35,000. Thus he had to pay on 31st December 1894 Rs. 6,214-7-0, the interest from 2nd September 1894 to 31st December 1894. There would be further due the interest from the 1st of January 1895 to the 28th of February 1895, Rs. 3,123-5-4, and on the 1st of March 1895 he had to pay Rs. 10,000 towards the first instalment. According to the interpretation of both parties, when he had paid the first instalment the principal was reduced to Rs. 2,25,000 and the interest on that amount at 8 per cent. from the 1st March 1895 to 30th June 1895 amounted to Rs. 6,000. The interest at 8 per cent. from 1st July 1895 to 31st December 1895 amounted to Rs. 9,000. Thus, if he had paid up everything that was due from him, he would have paid Rs. 10,000 instalment towards principal and Rs. 24,347-12-4 towards interest—Rs. 34,347-12-4 in all—and the total amount due would have remained at Rs. 2,25,000, making a grand total of Rs. 2,59,347-12-4. If he paid nothing during this period he would owe at the end of it Rs. 2,35,000 principal, and according to the manner in which the plaintiff Bank has calculated the interest, Rs. 24,347-12-4 interest, that is to say, Rs. 2,59,347-12-4 plus that is to say, he would be worse off to the extent of Rs. 2,350-1-7 if he paid nothing on account of interest and the first instalment. This calculation is made on the interpretation placed by the Bank on the terms of the deed. If these terms be taken (as we consider they should be taken) to mean that in default simple interest continued to run at 8 per cent. on the whole Rs. 2,35,000 and not on Rs. 2,35,000 less the amount of instalments due, and compound interest at 12 per cent. with six-monthly rests on unpaid interest and unpaid instalments, the amount would be greater.

Examining the contents of the deed we find that it contains inter alia

- (a) a primary obligation to re-pay Rs. 2,35,000 in fifteen instalments, with simple interest at 8 per cent. per annum payable six-monthly on balance due after payment of instalments due. (It is to be noted that there is no condition to pay compound interest at 8 per cent. per annum.)
- (b) a secondary obligation to re-pay, in case of default of instalments, compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests on each instalment or part of an instalment not paid by due date.
- (c) another secondary obligation to repay, in case of default of interest due, compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests on the balance of interest not paid by due date.

The failure to comply with seconddary obligations (b) and (c) involved an obligation which as has been shown, would (even on the interpretation of the plaintiff Bank) have amounted in the case of total default by the end of 1895 to Rs. 1,024 in the case of (b) and Rs. 1,316-1-7 in the case of (c).

The question now arises whether stipulations (b) and (c) are "stipulations by way of penalty" within the meaning of section 74, Act IX of 1872, as amended by Act VI of 1899. The learned Subordinate Judge considered clause (b) not to be a stipulation by way of penalty, and considered clause (c) a stipulation by way of penalty. There is an appeal against his decision on the first point and a cross-objection against his decision on the second. Until the amendment of section 74 the doctrine laid down for the most part in Indian Courts was that an agreement to pay enhanced interest from date of default was not a penalty within the meaning of the unamended section and must be enforced. This doctrine is set out inter alia in the case of Mackintosh v. Crow (5) and Nanjappa v. Nanjappa (6). At page 166 of the latter decision it is stated: "In such an agreement no question of penalty arises because it imposes an obligation on the debtor to pay a larger sum than what was originally due. In the words of section 74 of the Contract Act"—that is to say, before amendment—"no sum is named as the amount to be paid in case of such breach." The Bombay High Court, however, had laid down that apart from the provisions of the section as then unamended, such an agreement might be considered penal in certain circumstances. This decision will be found in Umarkhan Mahamad Khan Deshmukh v. Salekhan (7). At page 113 the following words are used:—"Upon this review of the authorities we think the safer conclusion is that.....a proviso for enhanced interest in the future cannot be considered as a penalty, unless the enhanced rate be such as to lead to the conclusion that it could not have been intended to be part of the primary contract between the parties."

According to the former view an agreement to pay enhanced interest from the date of default could in no circumstances be considered penal. According to the latter view it could be considered penal in certain circumstances. The view of the Bombay High Court was based upon the principles enunciated by English Courts of Equity in Astley v. Weldon (8), Wallis v. Smith (9) and other cases.

But the amendment of the section which, in extension of the previous abolition of the distinction between penalties and liquidated damages, declared that, if the contract contained any other stipulation by way of a penalty, the Court should award not the penalty stipulated for but reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount of the penalty, and further explained that a stipulation for increased interest from the date of default may be a stipulation by way of penalty, withdrew decision of the point to a considerable extent from consideration of the question of the meaning of the primary contract.

In cases decided after the section was amended, it was held in Kutub-ud-din Ahmad v. Rashid-ud-din (10): "According to the English authorities it is well-settled that if a mortgagee stipulate for a higher rate of interest in default of punctual payment, he must reserve the higher rate as the interest payable under the mortgage and provide for its reduction in case of punctual payment, and if he do so he will be entitled to recover the higher rate. But he cannot effect his object by reserving the lower rate and then fixing a higher rate in case of non-payment of the lower rate at the appointed time, such an agreement being considered in equity as in the nature of a penalty."

The decision goes on to say that the soundness of the rule has been questioned, but the rule was approved as binding on Indian Courts. The facts in that case were that the rate of interest was to be at 24 per cent. per annum from the date of execution, and that the mortgagor was entitled to a reduction to 15 per cent., if he paid the interest punctually. The Court held that, as he had not paid the interest punctually, it could be calculated at 24 per cent. There was no question of enhanced interest being charged from date of default, and we quote this decision simply with regard to the remarks as to the penal nature of enhanced interest from date of default. In Sunder Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (4)—a case to which we have referred in another connection—their Lordships of the Privy Council at page 157 examined the explanation in the amended section 74, but did not decide all the conditions which would cause increased interest from date of default to be considered a stipulation by way of penalty. They said: "The 'explanation' to section 74 of the Contract Act as amended says that 'a stipulation for increased interest from the date of default may be a stipulation by way of penalty.' The Indian Courts have invariably held that where (as in the present case) the stipulation is retrospective, and the increased interest runs from the date of the bond and not merely from the date of default, it is always to be considered a penalty, because an additional money payment in that case becomes immediately payable by the mortgagor. Their Lordships accept that" view of the Statute, and it is unnecessary to discuss under what circumstances increased interest running only from default should or should not be considered a stipulation by way of penalty."

The history of the law on the subject and the meaning of the amended section have been discussed fully by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Avathani Muthukrishniah v. Sankaralingam Pillai (11), which overrules the decision in Sankaranarayana Vadhyar v. Sankaranarayana Ayyar (12). Nowhere has a criterion been laid down, by which it can be decided when a stipulation for increased interest from the date of default is, and when it is not, a stipulation by way of penalty. It has been brought to our notice that in two cases decided in this Court by single Judges, Jai Ram v. Sheo Shanker Bakhsh (13) and Banke Behari Lal v. Ahlad Singh (14), stipulations similar to the stipulations in this case were not regarded as penal, but [apart from the fact that the latter decision was based on the decision of Sankaranarayana Vadhyar v. Sankaranarayana Ayyar (12), which has since been overruled] neither decision lays down any principle on the point, and the decisions interpret only the terms of the deeds before the respective Courts.

Interest is generally the price paid for the use of money advanced, and as such is not of the nature of a penalty. A debtor is not punished by payment of simple interest. He pays interest for the accommodation. In the case of an agreement to pay simple interest there can be no difficulty in accepting this proposition. In the case of an agreement to pay compound interest at the same rate as the simple interest agreed on, the debtor fixes the price paid for the accommodation at a progressive rate, and the element of punishment or penalty is absent. Thus their Lordships of the Privy Council say in Sunder Koor's case (4), to which reference has been made, "Compound interest is in itself perfectly 'legal,'" that is to say, it can be legally enforced as part of a contract. But where the parties agree that, if the debtor does not keep his engagement to pay the interest by due date either at the non-progressive rate when the interest first falls due, or at the progressive rate on subsequent defaults, he shall be made to pay at a higher rate, the element of punishment appears. A penalty then arises for non-compliance with the conditions. So their Lordships continue, "But compound interest at a rate exceeding the rate of interest on the principal moneys, being in excess of and outside the ordinary and usual stipulation, may well be regarded as in the nature of a penalty."

There has been a disposition in some Courts to regard the words "stipulation by way of penalty" as meaning "stipulation by way of a hard and unconscionable penalty." In Avathani Muthukrishnier v. Sankaralingam Pillai (11) to which reference has been made, the ordinary common sense meaning of the word "penalty", when used in relation to contracts, is stated to be "a liability agreed to by the parties to be imposed as a vindictive punishment on the party committing the breach of contract, and not merely as reasonable and even liberal compensation to the other side injured by the breach of contract." We consider that the definition should be rather a liability agreed to by the parties to be imposed as a punishment on the party committing the breach of contract. A penalty may be a vindictive penalty or a reasonable penalty. It may be severe or mild, it may be fair or unfair, but in all circumstances it remains a penalty. To constitute the existence of a penalty it would appear only necessary to establish the element of punishment, however well-deserved and temperate such punishment might be. It may be argued against this interpretation that its acceptance would involve a substitution of the words "is a stipulation by way of default" for the words "may be a stipulation by way of default" in the explanation to section 74. We do not concede that this interpretation involves such substitution. It is true that according to our interpretation cases in which a stipulation for increased interest from the date of default would not be a stipulation by way of a penalty would be rare, but it does not follow that they would not exist. We regard illustration (d) as intended to give a glaring instance of such a stipulation by way of penalty. The existence of illustration (f) is not against our conclusion as it obviously gives a case of the price paid for accommodation. No interest is there charged.

We have derived considerable assistance from certain remarks in Avathani Muthukrishnier v. Sankaralingam Pillai (11) at page 265:—"What then is the real principle underlying the Court's interference with the contract between parties as to a payment to be made by way of damages? In my opinion it can be no other than this—the doctrine that the Court will carry out all contracts between parties is confined to the carrying out of the primary contract and does not extend to a secondary or subsidiary contract to come into operation if the primary contract is broken. In bonds securing the payment of money, the contract regarded as primary is the promise to pay the amount due to the creditor with the interest, if any, agreed upon. Any further contract, to be binding on the promisor if he breaks this contract, is regarded as a secondary one, intended to secure the fulfilment of the primary contract, and the Courts both in England and in India do not feel bound to carry out such a secondary contract apart from its justice and reasonableness...

.....If the secondary contract is a just and reasonable one, the Court, of course, has the power to award the damages secured by it as reasonable in the circumstances."

We are of opinion that both stipulations (b) and (c) are stipulations by way of a penalty. But it does not follow from this that the penalty stipulated is in either case an unreasonable penalty, and it is our duty to assess reasonable compensation for the breach of these stipulations which must be something between 8 per cent. simple interest and the highest amount due under these stipulations. It is to be noted that no rate of 8 per cent. compound interest was ever fixed, and, even if it had been we need not necessarily have awarded it, for our duty would be to award reasonable compensation. To decide the amount of compensation we must examine the evidence showing the conduct of the parties subsequent to the execution of the deed.

The defendant after a very short time began to get irregular in his payments and seems soon to have become dissatisfied with the terms of his obligation and to have formed the idea of borrowing money elsewhere to satisfy it. Before August 1895 he had according to his evidence (o. p. 64) approached a certain Babu Moti Chand and the Bank of Upper India to obtain a loan. He failed in both instances. In August 1900 he had paid Rs. 61,895-14-2, but the debt in spite of that re-payment had then accumulated to Rs. 2,97,638-15-0. He then approached the Allahabad Bank, Lucknow, asking for a loan of Rs. 3,00,000. His letter to the Allahabad Bank has not been proved. The Bank replied, (Exhibit A2) in a letter dated the 28th August 1900, asking the defendant for a definite agreement to pay 8 per cent. and to mortgage his entire property. The defendant had apparently had an interview with the Agent of the Allahabad Bank at Lucknow. Reference is made to this in a subsequent letter from the Agent (Exhibit A3) dated 24th September 1900. There is nothing to show how negotiations progressed between that date and the 6th of April 1901. But we find from Exhibit A4, a letter from the Agent dated 12th April 1901, that the defendant had agreed in the letter of 6th April to the terms proposed by the Allahabad

Bank. In Exhibit A4 the Agent notes his intention of sending a draft bond, and on the 20th May 1901 (Exhibit A5) the Agent wrote to the defendant enclosing the draft bond (Exhibit A5 X). This was a bond for Rs. 3,15,000. The Bank were at liberty to call in the money at the expiration of five years if there had been default in the payment of interest. If interest were paid regularly the right to sue was deferred. Compound interest was to be charged at 8 per cent. with six-monthly rests. There appears to have been some discussion as to the terms of this draft, and amendments proposed by the defendant seem to have been accepted (see his evidence at o. p. 64). On the 22nd July 1901 the Agent telegraphed to the defendant (Exhibit A6), "When may we expect draft deed duly approved?" Then (see defendant's evidence at o. p. 64) the defendant went to Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur taking with him the whole of the papers and at Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur's instance wrote the following letter dated 23rd July 1901, of which this is a translation to the plaintiff Bank (Exhibit 97):—

"Your letter demanding the payment of money due to the Bank together with the accounts for the half-year ending with June 1901 came to hand. As the money due to the Bank has enormously increased and as the interest on the unpaid instalments is also running at a high rate I, therefore, request you to have a fresh deed executed by me in respect of the money due to the Bank bearing interest at 8 per cent. per annum fixing the period of re-payment at 15 years. Half-yearly interest to be payable on 30th of June and 31st of December, but if the same be not paid on the due dates then the same will also carry interest at 8 per cent. per annum. Kindly let me hear soon about the acceptance or non-acceptance of this my proposal of 23rd July 1901."

It is to be noted that the defendant did not ask the plaintiff Bank to give him the same terms as the Allahabad Bank had accepted. Under the terms of the Allahabad Bank a right to sue accrued within five years if interest were not paid regularly and within ten years in any circumstances. The defendant asked the plaintiff Bank to give him a deed on which the Bank would not have a right to sue for fifteen years. Rai

NARENDRA BAHADUR SINGH V. OUDH COMMERCIAL BANK, LTD.

Ram Saran Das Bahadur on receiving this letter put up this memorandum to the Directors (Exhibit A32) on 24th July 1901:—

"Attached is a letter from Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh, talukdar (Fyzabad District). in reply to our half-yearly letter regarding his balance to 30th June 1901, amounting to Rs. 3,16,794. Under the conditions of the existing bond the total amount is payable on the 1st March 1909, but as he has been very backward in paying his instalments of principal and interest, we can demand the whole amount due at once.

[We note that under the conditions of the deed (as we shall subsequently explain) the plaintiff Bank had not the right to sue on their deed at that time. Of course they could have demanded the whole amount then, but they could not have recovered it legally. If Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur meant to suggest that the right to sue had arisen, he misinterpreted the terms of the deed].

"One of the conditions of the bond is that interest at 12 per cent. will be charged on all arrears of instalments of principal and interest, although the amount was advanced at 8 per cent.

"The applicant now says that as the condition for payment of interest at 12 per cent. is very hard, the rate being excessive for large amounts, another bond may be taken from him for three lakhs or so, on the mortgage of his whole taluka in this district, as before, with this proviso, that interest will be charged at 8 per cent. and no higher on the whole amount, compound interest being payable if the interest is not paid regularly on 30th June and 31st December.

(We note that Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur did not draw the attention of the Directors to the fact that the defendant did not wish the right to sue under the new bond to accrue within less than fifteen years).

"He wishes to know at an early date, whether the Directors are willing to grant his request. The property is worth about 9 or 10 lakhs of rupees.

"To the Directors for consideration and orders."

The Directors before whom this memorandum was laid were Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur, Kadir Bux, Sarju Prasad and E. L. Graham.

We do not know whether there were any other Directors of the Bank at that time. On the 24th July 1901 Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur, who had been consulted by the defendant and informed of the proposed arrangement with the Allahabad Bank, Lucknow, made the following note: "I have learnt from a very reliable source" (he apparently meant from the defendant himself) "that the Allahabad Bank has already agreed to advance money to this talukdar at 8 per cent. If we do not agree to have the bond renewed on the terms suggested by him, he will pay our money at once. Under these circumstances I would advise the Bank to grant the prayer without any lapse of time." The remaining three Directors agreed with Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur. On the 25th July 1901 the Bank sent the following reply (Exhibit 97):

"Your letter dated 23rd instant was laid before the Directors of the Bank and your proposal regarding interest has been accepted and it will be given effect to from the date of the execution and completion of the deed. Please remit as much money as may be in hand, so that the account in respect of the entire money due to the Bank may be prepared and sent to you. Also please send a list of the villages showing their nikasi kham, malguzari, cesses, etc., in accordance with the current Land Revenue Register, so that an inquiry may be made."

It is to be noted that no necessity has been established by the plaintiff Bank for the making of any such inquiry. From that date the defendant ceased to carry on negotiations with the Allahabad Bank, Lucknow. There is no evidence to show that he ever broke off negotiations with the Allahabad Bank, Lucknow. He seems simply to have discontinued the correspondence. It is impossible to say whether he definitely intended to drop negotiations with the Allahabad Bank, Lucknow, then or at any future time. Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur has given evidence with regard to what happened afterwards. He stated (o. p. 128), "The defendant never sent in the papers asked for nor turned up, and thus the negotiations fell through." He further stated in cross-examination (o. p. 150), "I had no doubt as to the sufficiency of the security in spite of enhancement of Government revenue under the Revised Settlement. I did not like the idea of being paid off in 1901 under the transaction between the defendant and the Allahabad Bank when we could offer the same terms as the Allahabad Bank did.

"I did not like the idea of so much money being returned to us.

"I was willing to give up the claim for the future interest at the enhanced rate.

"At that time I took Rs. 8 per cent. per annum, without any stipulation as to future enhancement in the rate of interest, as a good investment.

"(Note on Exhibit A32 shown to the witness). It was initialled by Gokul Chand and signed by all other Directors. Kadir Bux, Sarju Prasad and Mr. E. Graham besides Gokul Chand were the Bank Directors at the time (Exhibit 98 shown).

"There was nothing in the note (on Exhibit A 32) requiring a fresh security.

"Q. Why should you then have asked for such a list as is referred to in the Exhibit 98?

"A. To satisfy ourselves as to the net income at that time.

"Q. You were going to reduce the interest on the security of the same property and yet you say that you were going to ascertain the income. Does it not look strange to do so?

"A. All I wanted was to ascertain if the income was such as would enable the defendant to pay interest.

"I started the inquiry at my own initiative as Manager of the Bank.

"I knew at the time of this letter that the Revised Settlement had been concluded."

At o. p. 153 he stated: "I sent no draft to the defendant because the defendant had not supplied the list as asked for. The new deed would have comprised the same property.

"The consent as regards reduction in the rate of interest was not contingent upon the defendant's furnishing further security. We had decided to forego the clause about the enhanced rate of interest without calling for fresh security.

"Q. Then why did you ask for further list?

"A. We were anxious to know the net profits, simply to find out how the defendant was going to pay up the interest."

There is much in this transaction upon which we shall have to comment, but at present we need only remark that the proceedings of the plaintiff Bank (apart from the proceedings of Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur) show clearly that in July 1901 they knew that, if they held their hands, the defendant would in all probability re-pay them the total amount due on the deed, and that they deliberately entered into negotiations with him to prevent his paying at the time, but that they never carried these negotiations to the point of drafting a fresh deed and forwarding it to him for approval.

The defendant was dissatisfied with his failure to obtain a fresh deed from the plaintiff Bank and he deposes that he approached the Maharaja of Ajudhia, who was an intimate friend of his, about January or February 1902 (o. p. 67). The Maharaja appears to have approached the Manager of the Delhi and London Bank, Lucknow, and to have asked him whether he could advance the defendant the money that he required. We find a copy of an important letter which was admitted as genuine by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff at the time of appeal (although admission of a copy of it was objected to when the writer was examined on Commission) dated the 28th August 1902, in which the Manager of the Delhi and London Bank, Lucknow, wrote to the Manager of the Delhi and London Bank's Head Office, London — "Narendra Bahadur Singh, Talukdar, Bishan Chandpur, Fyzabad District, No. 142, Talukdar List, page 50.

"This Talukdar has applied to us through the Maharaja of Ajudhia for a loan of three and a half lacs of rupees on the security of his property paying Government revenue Rs. 45,731, the profit being over 1 lac. The loan is to be for a period of five years, instalments Rs. 40,000 a year and interest half-yearly.

"Kindly let us have your instructions by wire."

The copy which we have before us need not necessarily be an accurate copy of the original but it has been certified as a true copy by Mr. Corlett, the successor of the Manager who wrote that letter. The profits of the defendant's estate were certainly not one lakh and there must be a clerical error as to the amounts of instalments, as five instalments of Rs. 40,000 a year amount only to Rs. 2,00,000 in five years. If the Maharaja of Ajudhia had stated that the defendant's profits were a lakh of rupees, it does not follow that the Bank would have agreed to advance the money, if it had subsequently discovered that the profits were about half that amount.

We next find a letter from the Maharaja of Ajudhia to the defendant (Exhibit A8) dated the 1st of September 1902. This was to inform the defendant that the Manager of the Delhi and London Bank, Lucknow, had shown some inclination to lend the defendant the money that he required. On the 8th October 1902 the Delhi and London Bank in London sanctioned the loan by telegram. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff takes no objection to the proof of the copies of the telegram dated the 8th of October 1902 and the letter dated the 10th October 1902 confirming it. The interest agreed on this transaction if it eventuated was 7 per cent. On the 11th October 1902 the Maharaja of Ajudhia telegraphed to Narendra Bahadur Singh (Exhibit A9) that the Delhi and London Bank required a copy of the deed in suit and the khewat and jamabandi of extra villages. On the 22nd October 1902 the Maharaja telegraphed to the defendant (Exhibit A10) to come at once. On the 28th October 1902 (Exhibit A11) the Maharaja of Ajudhia wrote to the defendant asking him why he had not come, and pointing out the necessity of his putting through the transaction quickly. On the 4th November 1902 Kali Charan, the Cashier of the Delhi and London Bank, Lucknow, telegraphed to the Maharaja of Ajudhia (Exhibit A 13) that the Bank was losing interest owing to the failure of the defendant to complete the transaction. On the 5th November 1902 the Maharaja of Ajudhia telegraphed to the defendant informing him of what Kali Charan said (Exhibit A 14). The defendant appears to have telegraphed then saying that he was ill. He frequently seems to have been ill when his presence was essential for the completion of a business transaction. There is no proof as to what he telegraphed, but there is a letter dated the 7th of November 1902 (Exhibit A15), in which the Maharaja of Ajudhia expressed his regret at hearing the defendant's illness. There were subsequent letters on the 10th and 16th November 1902 from the Maharaja of Ajudhia on the same point, and on the 26th November 1902 (Exhibit A18) Kali Charan, Cashier, requested the defendant to come to Ajudhia on the following Sunday to meet the Manager of the Delhi and London Bank. It appears that many of these telegrams and letters were not admitted in evidence before the lower Court, but the learned Counsel for the plaintiff agrees to their admission now and to their discussion. Mr. Fulton, the Manager of the Delhi and London Bank, apparently arrived at Fyzabad on the last Sunday in November and discussed the matter with the defendant. A draft deed was prepared. There is a conflict of evidence as to what happened exactly after this. The defendant's account (o.p. 68) is as follows :—

"On the day following I went to Rai Gokul Chand taking all the papers with me, viz., the draft deed and telegram sent to me by Delhi and London Bank.

"I handed over all the papers to Gokul Chand. He said he would get the Bank rate reduced to 7 per cent. per annum. He wrote me a letter. I saw Rai Ram Saran Das. He asked for an application which I submitted on the 11th December 1902. Rai Ram Saran Das said that as the Delhi Durbar was drawing near he would send me a reply and draft deed later on."

It is quite possible that the defendant saw Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur early in December. Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur denies that he saw the defendant as early as the 2nd or 3rd of December, but admits that he saw him later. Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur had evidently had an interview with the defendant on this subject before 9th December 1902, for we find (Exhibit A 21) a letter from Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur dated 9th December 1902, which may be translated as follows :—

"Your transaction has been completely settled as I have informed you yesterday. Please see Babu Ram Saran Das and settle other details with him."

According to Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur whose evidence appears to us more likely to be correct on this point, he and Rai

NARENDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. OUDH COMMERCIAL BANK, LTD.

Gokul Chand Bahadur saw the defendant on the 10th December 1902. He is unable to fix the date clearly and he thinks that it was somewhere between the 5th and 11th December. A remark in the letter of Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur (Exhibit A21) would indicate that it was the 10th. According to Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur (o. p. 132), Rai Gokul Chand and he represented the Bank at that meeting and all that was agreed to was that there should be a new deed executed on which the interest would run at 7 per cent. He denies that the defendant was ever promised on behalf of the Bank that the Bank would give him the same terms as the Delhi and London Bank had offered to give him.

The draft propounded by the Delhi and London Bank is Exhibit A37. The draft is an incomplete draft. The amount of consideration is not stated. It is said that the money was to be paid off in instalments, but neither the dates nor the amounts of instalments were stated. The draft is not a draft which anybody could agree to accept as it stood. It could at best have afforded a basis for the execution of another deed. Some of the terms no doubt might have been utilized in the preparation of another draft. But there would have been a considerable amount to clear up. It is to be noted that the terms of the draft vary considerably from the terms of the proposed loan submitted by Mr. Fulton to the Head Office in London. On the 11th December 1902 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff Bank a letter (Exhibit 158) of which the following is the translation:—

"I beg to say that I borrowed two lakhs and thirty-five thousand rupees from the Oudh Commercial Bank, Fyzabad, under a deed and agreed to re-pay the debt by instalments in 15 years with interest at Rs. 8 per cent. per annum and also stipulated that interest in case of default and on the overdue instalments would be paid at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. This increased the amount of debt and I had to sustain a heavy loss and damage, and it is owing to this reason that the said debt has not yet been repaid. Being now compelled I have arranged to borrow elsewhere at 7 per cent. per annum to re-pay the said debt and the settlement and acceptance of the terms of the loan have already been communicated to the Oudh Commercial Bank through a letter from Rai Bahadur Gokul Chand, Pleader." (This letter has not been proved, and although it is possible that a letter was written it does not follow that the particulars suggested were contained in it). "I, therefore, beg to say that if the Oudh Commercial Bank, Fyzabad, itself agrees to accept, in the same manner, the same terms and the same interest, the said Bank may get the deed renewed by me, because it is excessive interest and penalty that necessitate arrangements for a loan elsewhere. I hope you will inform me of the acceptance of the proposal."

This letter was written on the 11th December 1902.

On the 13th December 1902 the defendant admits that he broke off all negotiations with the Delhi and London Bank. He did not wait to get an answer from the plaintiff Bank. He deposed at o. p. 69: "The Maharaja got annoyed that I should have cancelled the loan settled through him. He asked who would pay the damages to the Delhi and London Bank for keeping unused for a month the money intended to be advanced by that Bank. I replied that I would pay the damages. Maharaja said he would pay the money out of his own pocket.

"The Maharaja issued a cheque to Bhagwan Pershad Bakhshi for Rs. 2,500 to be paid after realisation to Delhi and London Bank. The cheque was issued in my presence. The Maharaja asked Bakhshi to pay the money to Delhi and London Bank."

It has been proved that such a cheque was paid. The cheque is dated 13th December 1902 and the counterfoil runs, "Pay to Bakhshi Bhagwan Pershad Rs. 2,500 on account of penalty in respect of the deed of Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh in favour of the Delhi and London Bank."

But the evidence of the then Manager of the Delhi and London Bank proves that no portion of this money was ever received by the Bank. It would appear that the money was paid as commission (unauthorized by the Bank) to certain Indian subordinates of the Bank in respect of the trouble they had taken in endeavouring to negotiate the loan. The incident is of importance as showing that negotiations were definitely broken off with the Delhi and London Bank on the 13th December 1902 before the defendant had time to obtain a reply to his letter from the plaintiff Bank. The defendant then went to the Delhi Durbar of 1902-03. After his return Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur wrote to him (Exhibit A 22) a letter dated 15th January 1903, to the effect that the papers had been made over to Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur and that it was settled that the deed should be renewed. On the 7th February 1903 the defendant wrote to the Bank (Exhibit 159) asking why nothing had been done, and pointing out that he was losing money owing to the Bank's delay. The same day the Directors passed the following resolution (Exhibit A 31):

"Read an application from Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh, talukdar, for the renewal of his bond at 7 per cent. interest. Resolved that the bond may be renewed on condition that if the amount due to the Bank will at any time exceed four lakhs, the Bank will have the option to sue for the whole amount (principal and interest)."

The resolution agreed to an arrangement different from the arrangement proposed by the defendant. It is not possible to say whether this resolution was passed before or after the defendant's letter of the same date was received. On the 9th February 1903 Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur replied to the defendant (Exhibit 160) by a letter the translation of which is as follows:—

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 7th instant and in reply beg to state that the Bank is willing to advance the loan at 7 per cent. per annum as you were told then, i. e., at the interview." (This would apparently be the interview that took place on the 10th December 1902.) "You have not yet sent the list of villages whereby we might have been apprised of the Government revenue, gross rent, and profits, and enabled to make arrangements for an inquiry, nor have you favoured us with your presence.

"At all events, the delay which has occurred is due to you.

"I would, therefore, request you to send the required list through one of your experienced karindas, so that some person from this place may be sent with him with a view to make necessary inquiries.

"I beg to add that as long as the deed is not renewed, no proceedings can be taken apart from the terms of the old deed."

It is to be noted that this is the first reply that the defendant received to the letter of the 11th December 1902 and that any one would consider on reading it that it implied a qualified acceptance of the proposals in that letter, in other words, that it implied a readiness on the part of the plaintiff to give the defendant the same terms which he had been offered elsewhere, but that those terms would not be substituted for the terms of the old deed until a new deed had been executed. Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur knew that the plaintiff Bank did not intend to offer the defendant the same terms as those offered by the Delhi and London Bank, and that so far from accepting a deed on which the right to sue would not accrue for fifteen years the plaintiff Bank proposed the execution of a deed on which the right to sue would accrue very quickly. Yet he refrained from informing the defendant of the terms of the resolution of the Bank. The defendant replied to this letter in Exhibit 161 dated the 14th of February 1903. In this he stated that there had been a delay in sending the list showing the gross rental. From this it would appear that he had promised to send such a list. The translation of a portion of this letter is important:

"You know this full well that had I taken the loan early in December 1902 when the transaction was settled with the Delhi and London Bank, Lucknow, I would have been secure against the loss sustained. On the 5th December 1902, Rai Bahadur Babu Gokul Chand and you too verbally said that I should enter into the transaction with your Bank in the same manner in which the loan transaction was settled with the Delhi and London Bank, Lucknow on the same terms and at the same rate of interest, i. e., 7 per cent. per annum; that you had sanctioned the same; that I should send a letter to the Oudh Commercial Bank, Limited, Fyzabad, communicating the terms whereon settlement was made elsewhere and that the aforesaid Bank's sanction in writing will be sent to me after which I might renew the deed.

"On the assurance given and the agreement made orally by you and Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur as well, I refused to enter into the transaction of loan settled with the Delhi and London Bank, Lucknow, for which, as you know well, I had to pay Rs. 2,500 as penalty on account of interest."

NARENDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. OUDH COMMERCIAL BANK, LTD.

A reply to this is contained in Exhibit 162, dated 17th February 1903, in which Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur makes no attempt to reply to these complaints. This letter states that, as a perusal of the estate record shows that the profits of the property hypothecated have come to about Rs. 33,500, no renewal will be made unless further security is given. To this the defendant sent a very long reply (Exhibit 163) dated the 21st February 1903, in which he complained of the delay in settling the matter and of the bad faith of the plaintiff Bank. The plaintiff Bank's reply (Exhibit 164) dated 23rd February 1903, does not touch the points raised. It merely requests the defendant to have a personal interview. The defendant replied in Exhibit 165, dated 5th March 1903, that he did not see the object of a personal interview as nothing remained to be settled. In Exhibit 166 dated the 7th March 1903, Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur replied that nothing had been settled respecting the security of the terms of the loan and that a personal interview was necessary. The defendant replied on the 18th March 1903 (Exhibit 167) that a complete settlement had been made. On the 20th March 1903 the plaintiff replied begging the defendant to come to a personal interview (Exhibit 180) and on the 1st of April 1903 (Exhibit 181) repeated the request. After that nothing appears to have been done for some six years. In 1909-10 an attempt was made to settle matters by the District authorities. That attempt proved unsuccessful. It was suggested in the lower Court that a modification of the terms was arrived at by the action of the District authorities. The learned Subordinate Judge found that no modification had been arrived at and ground No. 22 of the appeal refers to this point. The learned Counsel for the appellant has withdrawn that ground in the course of argument. The defendant made no further payments and finally the suit was brought.

It has been argued that the defendant man incapable of taking care of himself who has been overreached by clever rogues. We do not consider that the defendant is deficient either in intelligence or judgment. He appears to have been perfectly capable of taking care of himself and managing his loan transactions. He seems to have criticized the terms of the loan with considerable ability. He was indolent and lax. It was with the greatest difficulty that he could bring himself to keep an appointment or to check accounts. Sometimes he would examine a draft, suggest conditions, refuse conditions, or get people to check accounts for him, and when roused he could make effective protests. But he was palpably a man who was disinclined to attend to his affairs and at the end he seems to have let himself drift. It is to be noted that portions of the correspondence which we have gone through show that it took several months to get a complete list of his liabilities and securities out of him. He kept the drafts in his hands for five months, though a final agreement could easily have been arrived at in a week. He was continually missing appointments. Sometimes he sent excuses, sometimes he did not. When he made re-payments he was usually late. He always had some excuse for breaking engagements, usually illness, and an excuse of undeserved misfortune for not making re-payments. He does not appear to have treated the persons with whom he did business with consideration, for example, when he negotiated the loan with the Agent of the Allahabad Bank he got the best terms he could, and then, leaving the matter in suspense, went off at once to the plaintiff Bank to see whether he could use the arrangement that he had made with the Allahabad Bank as a weapon by the use of which he could extract better terms. Finally he grew tired of the transaction, or thought it was not worth his while to take any further trouble in the matter, and dropped negotiations with the Allahabad Bank. Then he put the Maharaja of Ajudhia to the trouble of arranging for a loan with the Manager of the Delhi and London Bank, Lucknow. When the Maharaja wanted him and telegraphed to him on more than one occasion to come and settle the business he made no effort to oblige him, and offered the usual excuse of illness, which on this occasion does not appear to be true, as it was put in at the last moment. After a long time he went to Mr. Fulton at Fyzabad and practically settled everything with him. Having done this he threw over the Maharaja and the Delhi and London Bank with the nonchalance with which he had previously thrown over the Allahabad Bank, went back to the plaintiff Bank to see if he could screw better terms out of them, and finally, without waiting for an answer from the plaintiff Bank, broke off negotiations with the Delhi and London Bank leaving the Maharaja of Ajudhia to pay compensation for him. He has stated in his evidence (o. p. 110) that he preferred to get a renewal from the plaintiff Bank because he was averse to pay an unauthorised commission of Rs. 14,000 to the Indian subordinates of the Delhi and London Bank for negotiating the loan. He never informed the Maharaja of Ajudhia of this fact and seems to have been absolutely indifferent with regard to the inconvenience, to which he put his friend in the cause of the transaction. In our opinion he was endeavouring to play off one Bank against another, but was unable to do so with success. Owing to his carelessness and indolence he got the worst of the transaction. But this was not because the other side endeavoured in the beginning to take advantage of him, but because he tried to take advantage of the other side and was not equipped for the encounter. It was open to him at any time until the end of 1904 to re-open negotiations with either the Allahabad Bank or the Delhi and London Bank. (After that date these Banks would have probably refused to have anything to do with him.) But he made no attempt to do so. He could then have cleared off the whole debt with comparatively little sacrifice by selling a portion of his property. When he discovered that he was not likely to get any better terms from the plaintiff Bank he did not do this either.

We now come to the conduct of the plaintiff Bank. The two persons connected with the plaintiff Bank, with whose conduct we are mainly concerned, are Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur, one of the Directors, and Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur, the Manager. The former may be exonerated on all charges set up against him with regard to the execution of the original deed. There is nothing to show that he was the defendant's family lawyer. He appears to have represented him in certain legal proceedings. He was in no position to dominate the defendant's will, and there is nothing to show that he ever attempted to dominate the defendant's will. The defendant wanted money, and, knowing Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur socially and professionally, he obtained his assistance to procuring a loan. Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur hardly came on the scene at first. The loan was fair. The defendant's story as to misrepresentation and so on is a false story, such as would be told by a weak man like himself who has an idea that he had been badly treated over a pecuniary transaction. The transaction in the beginning was fair enough. The defendant was in a position to pay the interest and the instalments regularly, and there is nothing to show that he could not have done so, had he made a reasonable effort, and up till the time that the defendant entered into negotiations with the Allahabad Bank there is nothing in the conduct of the plaintiff Bank to which we take exception. But after that, the action both of the Bank and of the two gentlemen to whom we have referred is open to considerable criticism. The defendant informed Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur of his proposed loan from the Allahabad Bank and Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur (who was of course only one Director out of many) discussed with him the advisability of attempting to get the same terms from the plaintiff Bank. Whether the idea of approaching the plaintiff Bank emanated from Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur or from the defendant is not clear. We cannot go so far as to say that the former suggested it. The defendant's evidence shows that he is capable of saying anything which he thinks would help his case, and on his word alone we cannot say that Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur suggested the arrangement. Whoever proposed it, the result of the conversation was the letter of the 23rd of July 1901 (Exhibit 97). The balance was then Rs. 3,16,794. The defendant had re-paid Rs. 71,895.14-2 and had incurred a total liability of Rs. 1,50,000 in seven years of which he had paid something less than half. Rs. 1,50,000 was not a very large sum for the accommodation provided up till that time.

The Directors were asked to decide, whether they should recover their money at once by letting the defendant borrow money from the Allahabad Bank and re-pay them and incidentally lose a customer for the time or whether they should accept his terms, and give him a new deed which would tie up their money for fifteen years further. There was no third suggestion that things should be left as they were, and on the terms of the deed which they possessed they were not entitled then to sue for the money in spite of the suggestion made by Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur. The Directors deliberately agreed to grant the defendant's application and to tie up the Bank's money for fifteen years further. They could have realized their money at once by letting the defendant borrow the money from the Allahabad Bank and they refused to take it. The Bank can thus claim no sympathy for having been kept out of its money so long.

From this time it appears to have entered into the head of Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur that he might retain the defendant as a customer without giving him any fresh terms. There is no proof that the Directors were cognizant of his plan. But he, as Manager, had been expressly authorized under their resolutions of the 24th and 25th July 1901 to complete the transaction, and this authorization was a good authorization under the provisions of section 68, Act VI of 1882. In his reply to the defendant of 25th July 1901 (Exhibit 97) he rightly pointed out that it was necessary to execute a new deed to give effect to the arrangement. But it was, of course, the business of the Bank to prepare the draft as it had done with regard to the original deed. The latter portion of the letter requesting information as to the profits of the villages was clearly inserted to place obstacles in the way of execution of a new deed. The Directors had never asked that such inquiries should be made, and no useful purpose could be served by making them. The defendant had mortgaged by the original deed the whole of the taluka property, and had no landed property left, except a little property of trifling value in the Gorakhpur and Azamgarh Districts (o. pp. 71 and 73). If the income of his property had been considered sufficient to pay interest at a higher rate under the original deed, it is difficult to see the necessity of checking that income when it was proposed to reduce the rate of interest in the subsequent deed. In no circumstances was it necessary to make such an inquiry. A very short calculation would show that if Rs. 3,20,000 were lent on a deed at 8 per cent. to be re-paid in fifteen instalments, Rs. 25,600 would be due for the first year as interest and Rs. 21,333-5-4 would be due as an instalment, the total amount being Rs. 46,933-5-4. The defendant had stated his total income in Exhibit 2 to have been Rs. 50,000 in 1894, and, as the Directors had already agreed to the terms of the new deed for Rs. 3,20,000 re-payable in fifteen instalments, it was clear that the defendant could not pay the amount of instalments and the amount of interest and leave for himself more than a bare pittance to live on. Those are the facts, and Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur was in a position to know them. The Bank was not likely to get its instalments paid regularly. If the instalments were allowed to go, the amount of interest payable under the new deed could be paid regularly if the defendant wished to pay it. The plaintiff Bank did not want its money back. It could have got its money back by letting the defendant execute a deed in favour of the Allahabad Bank, and the question whether interest would or would not be regularly re-paid depended not so much on the amount of the defendant's income as on the determination of the defendant to keep his obligations. It is tolerably clear that the Bank did not want its money back and that it wanted interest to accumulate.

The best way of getting interest to accumulate was to keep the defendant to the terms of the old deed, and it was very easy to arrange that he should be kept to the terms of the old deed. Any one, who knew his character, would know that a request to give further information would be resented. He might or might not give the information. If he were requested to make arrangements for drafting the deed himself in all probability he would never take the trouble to do so. So the onus of drafting the deed was thrown upon the defendant and he was asked to give additional information. He did neither, and the arrangement fell through. All this will have a very distinct bearing when the question of compensation has to be considered.

We next come to the arrangement proposed with the Delhi and London Bank. Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur may be exonerated here on the charge of ever having promised anything definite. Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur appears as the defendant's adviser. He was not authorized by the other Directors to represent the Bank. There is nothing to show that Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur, although he gave advice, ever promised anything definite. The defendant went to him for his opinion and also to see whether he could not get better terms out of the plaintiff Bank than the half promise of the Delhi and London Bank. This letter may have been obtained on a misconception as to the defendant's income. Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur apparently encouraged the defendant to approach the plaintiff Bank and offered to represent his case. But he does not appear to have pledged the plaintiff Bank in any way to accept the terms of the draft prepared by the Delhi and London Bank. His letter of the 9th December 1902 (Exhibit A21) shows that he told the defendant to see the Manager and settle other details. If he had pledged the Bank to an unqualified acceptance there would have been no other details to settle. There is nothing to show that Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur and Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur represented themselves as plenipotentiaries. They evidently told the defendant that the Bank would probably agree that interest would run at 7 per cent. But nothing further appears to have been settled. They could not have agreed to a deed on exactly the same terms as the draft from the Delhi and London Bank, for that draft did not set up anything definitely.

One strong point in favour of this finding is that the letter sent by the defendant on the 11th December 1902 (Exhibit 158) contains no reference to an agreement made by Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur and Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur to give the defendant as good or better terms as the Delhi and London Bank had offered. The learned Counsel for the appellant suggests that the defendant was deceived by Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur and Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur and wrote the letter at their instigation. But the defendant never says this. At o. p. 68 he says that Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur asked for an application. At o. p. 102 he says that he thought that formal assent had been given by Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur. He admits at o. p. 105 that Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur and Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur said that they would consult their colleagues and did not pledge the plaintiff Bank into accepting his terms, and at o. p. 106 he says that he does not understand what other details there were left to settle. It is true that when he asserted in Exhibit 161 that these two gentlemen had sanctioned the arrangement and that the Bank's sanction would be subsequently sent to him, Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur avoided answering this allegation in his reply (Exhibit 162), and when the accusation was repeated in Exhibit 163 again refused to answer it, and only answered it when it was repeated again in Exhibit 165 when he made a statement in contradiction in Exhibit 166. But the explanation would appear to be that the defendant never received a real assurance. If he had received such an assurance he would have mentioned it ordinarily in his letter of the 11th December 1902. No doubt he received a partial and modified assurance, which did not bind the plaintiff Bank, and was trying in his subsequent letters to get an admission from Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur that an unqualified assurance had been given him. Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur undoubtedly tried to avoid making an admission that any assurance had been given, but his shuffling on this point does not show that an unqualified assurance was given. The conduct of Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur in the subsequent correspondence shows that he was again playing with the defendant, and endeavouring to wear him out until he dropped the negotiations out of fatigue. He was working on his knowledge of the defendant's character, and Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur as shown in his letter of 15th January 1903 (Exhibit A22) had also a similar intention. There is no evidence that any other Director knew anything about it. The conduct of Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur in subsequent letters was disingenuous. In all the transactions he had carefully avoided giving anything like a definite assurance and he pledged neither the plaintiff Bank nor himself to anything of value. He was palpably keeping the defendant imbred with hope and working on his hope and on the defendant's inherent incapacity ever to complete anything, in order to prevent the defendant entering into transactions with another Bank: He kept back from him the resolution of the plaintiff Bank. He did nothing towards having that resolution carried out. The plaintiff Bank is bound to this extent in the matter. It had the opportunity of saying to the defendant that it would do nothing for him, that it would refuse to give him any better terms and that if he got the money elsewhere and paid off the debt, it would be pleased with the result. But the Directors clearly did not want to be paid off. They wanted to let the money lie, and to let it accumulate until the principal and interest due approached the value of the security, and then to sell the mortgaged property, leaving the defendant to depend on the little property that he has in Gorakhpur and Azamgarh. The Bank was not responsible for every act of Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur, but it was responsible for a deliberate refusal to part with the defendant as a client and it has no claim for consideration on the plea that the Bank had been kept out of its money for a considerable number of years.

We leave for the moment decision as to the amount of compensation to which the plaintiff can reasonably be entitled for breach of the penal clauses.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided that the parties could not be put on the same terms as the terms proposed either by the Allahabad Bank or the Delhi and London Bank, because in both cases a novation of the contract was suggested by the defendant to the plaintiff—

(a) firstly, on the terms proposed by the Allahabad Bank, and

(b) secondly, on the terms proposed by the Delhi and London Bank.

Such a novation, according to his view, could only be effected by execution of an agreement in writing, and no such agreement was executed. The defendant's remedy, if any, was according to the learned Subordinate Judge to sue for specific performance of the agreement to modify, and such remedy had become barred by limitation some time previous to the institution of the present suit. In the case of the transactions of July 1901 it is clear that the Directors agreed (but with a qualification) to accept the terms proposed in defendant's letter of the 23rd July 1901, "I, therefore, request you to have a fresh deed executed by me in respect of the money due to the Bank bearing interest at 8 per cent. per annum fixing the period of re-payment at 15 years, half-yearly interest to be payable on 30th of June and 31st of December; but if the same be not paid on the due dates then the same will also carry interest at 8 per cent. per annum," and a qualified assent was conveyed to the defendant in the letter of the 25th July 1901, "Your proposal regarding interest has been accepted and it will be given effect to from the date of the execution and completion of the deed." The arrangement fell through simply because a deed was not executed. It was, as found by the learned Subordinate Judge, the duty of the plaintiff to prepare a draft of the deed, and the plaintiff failed to do this without justification. But there can be no doubt as to the fact that a novation or modification of the existing contract was not effected by the two letters in question.

We do not consider that the provisions of section 92 (4), Act I of 1872, have application in this connection. The defendant has not proposed to prove an oral agreement. His proof is contained in the proceedings of the Directors (Exhibit A32) of 24th-25th July 1901 and the two letters which have already been quoted. But reading all three together, no legal novation or modification is created. The proposal is accepted in a qualified manner, and the Bank's reply implies that the amount due is to be calculated on the terms of the present deed up to the execution of a fresh deed. Thus as no fresh deed was executed, it is impossible to state even the amount due on which new calculations of interest could be based. The non-execution of a subsequent deed was attributable to the deliberate abstention from action of Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur, but the defendant (as Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur no doubt expected he would do) was too lax to take his proper remedy. He could have insisted within the period of limitation allowed that the Bank should carry out its obligation, but he did not do so, and he is debarred by the law of limitation from doing so now. The position of the respondent is even stronger with regard to the events of 1902-1903. The proposal here is contained in Exhibit 158 dated 11th December 1902, and there was no acceptance of that proposal by the Bank. We are not satisfied that there was an acceptance of that proposal by Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur or Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur. The Bank agreed in its resolution not to lend money on the terms on which the Delhi and London Bank had proposed to lend it, but on different terms (Exhibit A31, dated 7th February 1903), and the qualified acceptance (Exhibit 160, dated 9th February 1903) in addition to containing a palpable clerical error (7 per cent. per mensem being written) refers to conditions stated at an interview which we are satisfied fell short of the acceptance of the Delhi and London Bank.

The learned Subordinate Judge did not, however, consider the question from the two points of view which were put before him in argument. The first is whether the Bank agreed to a remission of the rate of interest which could be enforced by way of a qualification of the terms of the deed in suit, and the second is whether the Bank is equitably estopped by its conductor the conduct of its authorized representatives from asserting a right to more than could be obtained under the terms of the draft deed of the Allahabad Bank or the draft deed of the Delhi and London Bank. With regard to the first point there was no suggestion on the part of either side as to remission of arrears. We consider that there was no unqualified agreement on the part of the plaintiff Bank to reduce the rate of interest in the future. Such an agreement unless unqualified cannot be considered in this connection. With regard to the second point we find that on the widest extension of the principle of estoppel, without confining the rule to the rule laid down in section 11^a, Act I of 1872 [Ganges Manufacturing Company v. Sourajmull (15)], and applying the principle laid down in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (16), the defendant is not at liberty to invoke that doctrine in his aid, unless he can show that he broke off negotiations with the Allahabad Bank and the Delhi and London Bank because the plaintiff Bank or their authorized agents induced him to do so by offering him the same terms as or better terms than were offered by those Banks. It is to be noted that he is not proved ever to have broken off negotiations with the Allahabad Bank and that within less than a year from the date that he received the last proved communication of the Allahabad Bank (which he is not proved to have answered) he had opened negotiations with the Delhi and London Bank. We find that he definitely broke off negotiations with the Delhi and London Bank on 13th December 1902, when he had received no assurance from the plaintiff Bank, and that he was partly actuated in so doing by reluctance to pay Rs. 14,000 as an unauthorized commission. He had received no assurance from the plaintiff Bank, Rai Ram Saran Das Bahadur, or Rai Gokul Chand Bahadur that the plaintiff Bank would give him as good or better terms. On this finding we are unable to modify the conditions under colour of the doctrine of equitable estoppel. This disposes of the points taken in the 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, and 21st grounds of appeal.

We now come to the first, second, third fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh grounds of appeal. The appellant urges that the whole suit is barred by limitation. According to our construction of the deed the right to sue could originate on the occurrence of one of the contingencies stated in clauses 5, 6, 10, 7 and 14. The contingencies provided for in clauses 5, 6 and 10 did not arise. We now examine the meaning of contingencies provided for in clauses 7 and 14. Badly worded as these clauses are, the meaning is fairly clear. No right to sue accrues under the provisions of clause 14 unless a right to sue accrues under the provisions of clause 7. Clause 7 provides on the face of it that the plaintiff cannot sue unless (1) the entire demand for two instalments for two consecutive years and interest for the principal on two consecutive years remains unpaid and (2) nothing is paid for two consecutive years on account of principal or interest. The second clause is not included in the first for if (unlikely as it might be) the defendant had paid Rs. 1,30,000 in the first year, Rs. 85,000 of which was to go to payment of instalments and Rs. 45,000 to advance payments for interest, and paid nothing for the next five years, no right to sue would have accrued. On the other hand the first clause is not included in the second. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that acceptance of the plea of the plaintiff on this point involved an absurdity. He noted that, if no suit could be brought unless a breach of the second clause could be shown, the money could not be called in for fifteen years if the defendant paid one pie every alternate year. We agree that, if the clauses are read as independent, this will be the result, but we do not find any reason to suppose that it was not the deliberate intention of the parties that this should be so. As we have shown in a previous part of this judgment, clause 7 was the subject of considerable controversy. The plaintiff Bank wished to insert only clause (1); the defendant wished to insert only clause (2). Finally they compromised by inserting both. The defendant's object in obtaining the insertion of clause (2) was evidently to give himself undisturbed possession of the mortgaged property for fifteen years. The plaintiff Bank's acquiescence may well have been due to the fact which has been made abundantly clear by the Bank's whole conduct that as it eventually wanted to let the debt accumulate and not to sue soon, it was immaterial if the right to sue could be stopped by the defendant at will for fifteen years. The Directors did not arrive at this conclusion at first, but palpably did so at the end.

We, therefore, decide that the right to sue would not accrue apart from conditions laid down in clauses 5, 6 and 10, unless nothing was paid on account of principal or interest for two years. The last payment was made on the 24th October 1902. So the right to sue accrued on the 24th October 1904. The suit is thus well within time.

We need not discuss at length the other objections as to limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge, while finding that the right to sue accrued on 20th June 1898, held that the suit was within time under the provisions of section 20, Act IX of 1908, owing to proved payments towards interest. The learned Counsel for the appellant, while not contesting that such payments had been made towards interest, objected that under Order VII, rule 6, Act V of 1908, no exemption had been claimed in the plaint. To this the plaintiff Bank replied that it had not instituted the suit after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, and that, if it had, it did not claim exemption (which it urged only referred to legal disabilities under section 6, Act IX of 1908) but rather invited the Court to apply the law. The question has become academic in view of the fact that we find that the right to sue accrued on the 24th October 1904, and further inasmuch as the plaintiff Bank has before us applied to amend its plaint in order to get over any possible difficulty. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff Bank, while applying to amend the plaint, did not admit that there was necessity for amendment. He made the application ex maxima cautela. We do not consider that there was any necessity to amend the plaint, but we have allowed the application for the same reason as that which caused the learned Counsel to present it. We make no order as to costs on the amendment, as the amendment is purely of a formal nature. By allowing the amendment, the defendant has not been prejudiced in any way nor have his costs been increased.

The next point taken by the appellant is that, if this Court holds that any clause is penal, it cannot allow compensation for breach of such clause as a portion of the mortgage-money, or as included in the contract, that it can only allow such compensation as damages for breach of a registered contract for a period of six years from the date of suit and cannot charge their recovery to the mortgaged property. The learned Counsel argued that the Court could either enforce or not enforce the contract as it stands. It could not enforce an altered contract. He continued that a penal clause had no effect and that, when that penal clause is cut out, the contract is absolutely altered, and cannot be enforced though damages can be given for breach of its terms. He quoted in support of his argument the decisions in

NARENDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. OUDH COMMERCIAL BANK, LTD.

Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coommar Singh (17), Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (18) and Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (19), but all these decisions refer to damages arising outside the provisions of the contract of mortgage.

The learned Counsel for the respondent replied that at the worst a Court can sever the illegal from the legal part of a contract, and that the good can be retained and the bad can be rejected, but that there was no occasion to sever the penal clauses from the rest. The law, according to his argument, does not invalidate a penal clause. It enforces the clause, but leaves the penalty to the discretion of the Court. Further he argued that anything awarded under the terms of the deed could be charged against the hypothecated property. We consider that the amount awarded as reasonable compensation for breach of penal clauses in a mortgage-deed must be considered for the purposes of limitation as a portion of the mortgaged money. We accept the argument that a penal clause is not invalidated by section 74, Act IX of 1872. The clause remains effective, but the amount awarded as compensation for its breach is left to the discretion of the Court up to the maximum fixed by the clause. The amount awarded can be charged against the hypothecated property. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the decision previously quoted as Sunder Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (4) upheld a decree sanctioning the award of compensation for breach of a penal clause in a mortgage-deed from a date as far back as 15th June 1891 up till 17th September 1901. As the decree of the Court of original hearing was passed on 31st May 1900, it appears that the compensation (which was awarded in the form of compound interest) was for more than six years. This compensation was charged on the mortgaged property.

Further we find that in Baid Nath v. Shamanand Das (20) compensation for breach of a penal clause was awarded for eleven years and eleven months and declared a charge on the mortgaged property.

(20) 22 C. 148.

We, therefore, decide all the points taken in the first seven grounds of appeal against the appellant. We have now to determine the amount of compensation that should be awarded to the plaintiff Bank for breach of the penal clauses. While we do not consider that the defendant's conduct in the proceedings entitles him to any particular sympathy, we are of opinion that the conduct of the plaintiff Bank leaves much to be desired. It did not deceive the defendant. There was neither fraud nor misrepresentation present in its dealings with him, but it undoubtedly exploited his weaknesses. It knew that he was vacillating, unmethodical, and unbusiness-like, and deliberately took advantage of his failings to keep him as a debtor, while interest accumulated progressively. It intentionally refrained from recovering in 1901. The Bank had an opportunity to ensure a speedy recovery in 1903. It refused to take it. The right to sue accrued on our finding in 1904. The suit was not instituted till 1911, when after payment of Rs. 86,020 the original amount of Rs. 2,35,000 had increased to Rs. 9,25,935-14-3, and had approximated on the Manager's estimate to the value of the defendant's property (vide Exhibit A32, dated the 24th July 1901). The plaintiff Bank cannot be held absolved from complicity in the acts of their Manager and while we have no wish to make the share-holders suffer for acts for which they are not directly responsible, we cannot lose sight of the fact that the plaintiff Bank deliberately laid itself out to leave the defendant with barely an acre of land as a result of their seventeen years' connection with him.

After careful consideration we have come to the conclusion that a reasonable compensation in all the circumstances will be to raise the 8 per cent. simple interest, which the non-penal clauses of the deed provide, to 8 per cent. compound interest with six-monthly rests crediting all repayments first to interest due, and then to principal.

We now come to the final point for decision. The learned Subordinate Judge fixed the 30th April 1913 as the date for payment under the decree, and he allowed interest according to the rate which he considered due from the date of institution till the date fixed for payment. From that period onwards till realization he allowed simple interest on the total amount (including costs) at 6 per cent. per annum. In the 24th ground of appeal the appellant urges that no interest or only interest at a nominal rate should have been awarded from the date fixed for payment to the date of realization.

The plaintiff-respondent has filed cross-objections to the effect that interest should be allowed at 12 per cent. per annum from the date fixed for payment up to realization, in view of the fact that the deed contains provisions for the payment of the post diem interest at that rate. We do not consider that we are in any way bound to fix the rate of interest from the date fixed for payment up till the date of realization according to the provisions of the deed. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided in Sunder Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (4)—a decision to which reference has been made in more than one place in this judgment—that the scheme and intention of the Transfer of Property Act was that a general account should be taken once for all, and an aggregate amount be stated in the decree for principal, interest, and costs due on a fixed day, and that after the expiration of that day, if the property should not be redeemed, the matter should pass from the domain of contract to that of judgment, and the rights of the mortgagee should thenceforth depend, not on the contents of his bond, but on the directions in the decree. Although the law has been amended since this decision has been passed, and the provisions of Act IV of 1882, to which it refers, have now become embodied in the provisions of Order XXXIV, Act V of 1908, there has been no alteration in the amended law which renders the decision of their Lordships any less authoritative, and we do not consider that it is possible for parties to contract themselves out of the provisions of the law in such a manner as to deprive the Courts of their discretion to fix the rate of interest awarded from the date fixed for payment to the date of realization. Our finding to this effect is supported by a decision of the Calcutta High Court, Managi Singh v. Saheb Ram Singh (21). Thus we find against the contention taken by the respondent Bank in its cross-objections. We are not compelled to follow the provisions of the deed with regard to the rate of interest to be allowed from the date fixed for payment until the date fixed for realization, and on the merits we see no reason to accept that rate of interest as the rate that should be awarded. But we are not in complete accord with the contention raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant on this point. It would be unfair, we consider, to deprive the plaintiff Bank of all interest upon their money from the 1st May 1913 to the date of realization. At the same time we think that the rate of future interest should be reduced to 4 per cent. We, therefore, find partly in favour of the appellant on the point raised in the appeal and against the respondent on the point raised in the cross-objections and reduce the rate awarded by the learned Subordinate Judge to 4 per cent.

The result is that the appeal succeeds to a certain extent and that the decree will be modified as follows:—

The plaintiff will be awarded the principal sum of Rs. 2,35,000 with compound interest at 8 per cent. per annum calculable with six-monthly rests up to the 30th of April 1913. From this sum will be deducted all repayments made by the defendant; such repayments will be credited first to the interest due and, if at the time they be in excess of the interest due, then to principal. The plaintiff Bank will receive costs of the lower Court proportional to its success and will pay costs of the lower Court proportional to its failure. Remaining costs will be on parties.

The cross-objections are disallowed with costs.

The balance due to the plaintiff on account of costs of the lower Court shall be added to the amount of principal and interest due on the deed according to the principles above enunciated, and simple interest at 4 per cent. per annum shall be awarded upon this total amount from the 1st May 1913 till the date of realization.

The appellant shall pay and receive costs on this appeal proportionate to his failure and success. The plaintiff Bank will pay its own costs and those of the appellant on the cross-objections. Remaining costs of the appeal and cross-objections shall be on parties. The net balance of costs (if any) payable from the appellant on this appeal shall be added to the decretal amount due on the date that this decree is signed cent. per annum till date of realization. The total amount due under the decree shall be recoverable by sale of the mortgaged property.

Appeal partly allowed.

Babus Jiben Krishna Banerji and Aditya Prasad, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT—The plaintiffs in this case instituted a suit for possession of a one-third share of a grove on the allegation that they were entitled to succeed to the last holder, Musammat Chourasi, as reversioners and they filed a pedigree with their plaint to prove that they were the nearest reversioners in the family. In the course of the proceedings, one of the plaintiffs made a statement with regard to the family relationship which was at complete variance with the statement in the pedigree which had been filed with the plaint. The learned Munsif permitted the plaintiffs, in view of the fact that this contradictory statement had been made, to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. It was not the case that the plaintiffs had put in a pedigree which, owing to a clerical error, contained certain mis-statements and they sought to correct the error. Nor was it and carry simple interest at 4 per cent. the case that there were two pedigrees, and that they had by error put in the wrong pedigree with the plaint and sought to put in the right pedigree later. One of the plaintiffs had made a statement in which he admitted that the pedigree filed with the plaint was wrong and it was on this allegation that they were permitted to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh one. There was no formal defect by reason of which the suit must fail, and I do not consider that the circumstance, that one plaintiff has admitted that the pedigree filed with the plaint is incorrect in several particulars, is a sufficient ground for allowing the suit to be withdrawn and a fresh suit to be instituted.

I, therefore, allow this application, set aside the order of the learned Munsif, and send back the case to him that it may be tried out on its merits. Costs will follow the result.

Where the Raja of Cochin was sued as the Cochin Sircar represented by the Dewan of Cochin:

Held, that the suit being virtually against the Raja was forbidden by section 86 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 352, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 78 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Chowghat, in Original Suit No. 537 of 1911.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishnan Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—An objection has been taken that this second appeal will not lie, as the suit is of a Small Cause nature.

It is, however, clear from the plaint that the cause of action was not the value of the goods received by the temple, but the dues accruing to the plaintiff by reason of his hereditary office as purveyor of ghee for a fixed annual allowance (see Article 13 of the second Schedule, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.)

Mr. Menon has raised three points, viz., that the suit as framed will lie without permission being obtained under section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

1. Because the suit is not to obtain any personal relief against the Raja of Cochin or against his State.

2. Because the first defendant is really the Dewan of the Cochin State and not the Raja.

3. Because the suit is against the temple trust, which is an aggregate Corporation and because any one of the trustees has, he argues, no separate and independent existence.

The first point was considered and decided by Tyabji, J., in Kuthaldath Narayan Mootha v. Cochin Sircar (1), in which the defendant was described in a similar manner to the description in this suit viz., the Cochin Sircar represented by the Dewan of Cochin. I agree with what the learned Judge observed on this point, and I would add that this section makes no distinction between cases in which personal relief is asked for and others. In every suit whether a particular defendant is a pro forma defendant or a principal party, the Court must be taken to have the power to order his appearance in person under Order V, rule 3, or to direct him to pay costs and otherwise subject him to the jurisdiction of the Court by making him obey its directions.

The second point has not been raised either in the lower Appellate Court or in the second appeal memorandum and having regard to paragraph 2 of the plaint and to paragraph 1 of the District Munsif's judgment, it is clear that the plaintiff's case till now has been that the trusteeship was vested in the Raja rather than in his Dewan and that in mentioning the Dewan and describing him as representative of the Cochin Sircar, the plaintiff was merely complying with the provisions of section 87 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The third point does not arise in this suit, which is ostensibly against the trustees for what they have done or rather left undone.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

COTTE TROTTER, J.—I am of the same opinion. When the pleadings are properly translated, it is apparent that the Cochin Sircar is the first defendant, and a reference to section 87 of the Civil Procedure Code shows that this is tantamount to suing the Raja which is forbidden by section 86, see Gilmore v. State of Travancore (2).

The suggestion that section 86 does not apply where the Prince or Ruler is sued only in a representative character as a trustee is to my mind unarguable.

I express no opinion as to whether the objection to the jurisdiction is or is not good, as, in my opinion, the appeal fails on the merits in any event.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revisional jurisdiction of High Court—Presidency Small Cause Court's decision—Wrong decision on a question of law—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25.

Under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure a High Court can revise a decision of the Presidency Court of Small Causes. [p. 353 col. 2.]

Ismailji Ibrahimji Nagree v. Macleod, 8 Bom. L. R. 969; 31 B. 138, dissented from.

Haladhar Maiti v. Choytonna Maiti, 30 C. 588; 7 C. W. N. 547; Ramdin Bania v. Sew Baksh Singh, 6 Ind. Cas. 473; 14 C. W. N. 806; 37 C. 714; Sarat Chandra Singh v. Brojolah Mukerjee, 30 C. 986, followed.

But its powers under section 115 (a) and (b) are not co-extensive with its powers in appeal, it cannot, therefore, go into facts nor can it interfere on the ground of mere mistake in fact or law. [p. 354, cols. 1 & 2.]

Oldfield J.—A wrong decision of a question with which a Court is competent to deal cannot affect its jurisdiction to pass a decree based on that decision though a Court cannot confer jurisdiction on itself by the wrong determination of a question. [p. 354, col. 1]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Even in the case of revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the High Court has a discretion to interfere or not and where substantial justice has been done in the lower Court, it is not advisable to use revisional powers on purely technical grounds. [p. 354, col. 2.]

Gopala Iyengar v. Venkatakrishna Iyengar, 17 Ind. Cas. 748; (1912) M. W. N. 1227, followed.

Much less is it advisable to interfere when the High Court's powers of revision are invoked under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 254, col. 2.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar, dated the 24th February 1914, in Civil Revision Petition No. 354 of 1913 reported in 23 Ind. Cas. 572, preferred against the decree of the Presidency Court of Small Causes at Madras, in Ejectment Suit No. 91 of 1913.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are clearly stated in the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar reported in 23 Ind. Cas. 572.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Appellants:—On the merits the notice given was a valid one, the term fixed was not for 15 years and 6 months but for 15 years certain. The High Court cannot use its revisional jurisdiction under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and set aside an order under section 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act on the ground of a mere error of law. Even if there was such jurisdiction to interfere, the learned Judge could not under section 115 set aside the order, as there was no irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

Messrs. M. O. Parthasaradhy Aiyangar and K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent:—The notice being invalid there was no notice to quit and the jurisdiction under section 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act does not arise for its exercise.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—On the first point dealt with by the learned Judge, this Court's power to revise the decisions of the Presidency Small Cause Court, I follow the Calcutta cases, Haladhar Maiti v. Choytonna Maiti (1), Sarat Chandra Singh v. Brojolah Mukerjee (2), Ramdin Bania v. Sew Baksh Singh (3) in preference to Ismailji Ibrahimji Nagree v. Macleod (4) decided in Bombay, the former moreover being in accordance with the practice in this Presidency. The learned Judge's decision in favour of the existence of this Court's powers of revision must be sustained.

The question is then whether their exercise was justified in the case before him; one of a decree for ejectment under section 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, obtained on a finding as to the validity of the notice given, which the learned Judge held to be and which may for the present purpose be treated as being mistaken in law. It is contended that this decree can be revised because it was passed in the exercise [to follow the wording of section 115 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code] "of a jurisdiction not vested in the Small Cause Court by law," inasmuch as the determination of the tenancy by a valid notice was a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction under section 41 and was not fulfilled.

This seems to me unsound, because the validity of the notice in question was no more a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction than any other fact the establishment of which might be necessary before a decree could be given, if other facts had been put in issue. And in fact the principle involved in the contention would, if accepted, entail that the Court's powers under section 115 (a) and (b) are co-extensive with its powers in appeal. So broad a principle requires strong authority to support it. But none has been adduced and there is the clear language of the Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (5) to show that the wrong decision of a question, with which the Court is competent to deal, cannot affect its jurisdiction to pass a decree based on that decision. It is no doubt true that a Court cannot confer jurisdiction on itself by the wrong determination of a question; and in order to reconcile this principle with that enunciated by the Privy Council it may be necessary to adopt some definition of the term "jurisdiction" such as that proposed by Woodroffe, J., in Shew Prosad v. Ram Chunder (6). If the definition which he prefers, that based on the presence of local, personal or pecuniary consideration or the nature of the subject-matter of the suit, be adopted, the result would be in accordance with the form of section 115, since objections to the Court's competence to entertain the proceedings or to its refusal to entertain them would then be covered by section 115 (a) and (b), whilst section 115 (c) would deal with all action and refusal to take action after the beginning of the trial, which otherwise complied with its requirements. It is, however, unnecessary to elaborate the discussion further in this direction, since there is, in my opinion, no ground for treating the establishment of the validity of the notice in the case before us as having any more special character than the other facts essential to a decision on the merits or as a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction. I, therefore, cannot uphold the learned Judge's interference with reference to section 115 (a).

We have also considered it with reference to section 115 (c). But it is clear from the Privy Council decision already referred to that we cannot interfere on the ground of mere mistake in fact or law, and we have been shown nothing also. For it is not suggested that the conduct of the trial in the Small Cause Court was in any respect irregular or illegal.

In these circumstances, the Letters Patent Appeal must be allowed, the decision of the learned Judge being set aside and that of the Small Cause Court Judge restored. The defendant will pay the plaintiffs' costs throughout.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—There are absolutely no merits in the defendant's case. Taking it that on the construction of the rental agreement the defendant is entitled to be in possession for a term of not less than 15 years and 6 months, that is, till the 29th December 1912, the present suit was brought in ejectment in 1913 and the defendant had notice in October 1911, more than 15 months before the suit was brought, that the plaintiffs were determined not to allow him to occupy the premises for a day more than the defendant was entitled to do. Even in the case of revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the High Court has discretion to interfere or not and where substantial justice has been done in the lower Court, it is not advisable to use revisional powers on purely technical grounds. [See Gopala Iyengar v. Venkatakrisna Iyengar (7)]. Much less is it advisable to interfere when this Court's powers of revision are invoked under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On the point whether a question of jurisdiction is involved in this case so as to allow of interference under section 115, it has, no doubt, been held in Vuppuluri Atchayya v. Sir Kanchumarti Venkata Seetarama Chandra Rao (8) that where an Appellate Court by reason of error of law decides that the Court of first instance has or has not jurisdiction to entertain a suit taking the facts alleged in the plaint as proved, the High Court can interfere under section 115 with the wrong decision of the Appellate Court. I was the dissenting Judge in that Full Bench case. That decision (I fully admit) is binding upon me notwithstanding that two very learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Shew Prosad v. Ram Chunder (6) have taken the view which is almost identical with mine. But all those observations of that very learned Judge (Sundara Aiyar, J.) in his judgment in the above Full Bench case which went beyond the actual conclusion of the Full Bench are obiter and not binding. The judgment of the Chief Justice (then Mr. Justice Wallis) in that case confined itself to the point which arose for actual decision.

In the present case, the allegation in the plaint being that proper notice to quit had been given to the defendant, the jurisdiction of the Presidency Small Cause Court over the suit was clearly not taken away by any provision of the Common or the Statute Law and the Small Cause Judge did not clutch at jurisdiction through any error of law committed by him. The decision in Vuppuluri Atchayya v. Sir Kanchumarti Venkata Seetarama Chandra Rao (8) does not apply, therefore, to this case and the learned Judge of this Court whose decision is appealed against had, therefore, no jurisdiction to interfere under section 115 with the judgment of the Small Cause Court. I agree, therefore, that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Madras Forest Act (V of 1882), ss. 6, 10, 16, 17—Notice under s. 6, essential—Knowledge of claimant by other ways, immaterial.

Per Wallis, C. J. and Coutts-Trotter, J.—The Madras Act V of 1882 is an expropriating Act and therefore it must be strictly construed. [p. 356, col. 2; p. 357; col. 2.]

The combined effect of sections 6 and 10 of the Madras Forest Act, is to make the notice under the second part of section 6 of that Act an essential prerequisite to confer jurisdiction on a Forest

Settlement Officer to declare the land a reserved forest under sections 16 and 17 of the Act. Where no such notice is served on the claimant his ordinary right of action is not lost and the fact that he obtained notice of the reservation by any other means is immaterial. [p. 356, col. 1; p. 357, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Coutts-Trotter, J.—The terms of both parts of section 6 are not merely directory but mandatory; and the mandate in the second part as to notice must be strictly observed. [p. 357, col. 1.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—By the use of the words “besides poromboke” in an inam title-deed where the inam tenure was converted into a free-hold, the intention is to confer absolute rights over “porombokes” also. [p. 356, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Cuddappah, in Original Suit No. 10 of 1911.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and A. Krishna-swami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 24th February 1915 and having stood over for consideration till the 5th March 1915, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff against the Secretary of State in Council to establish his title to, and to recover possession of, certain lands in the village of Putlampalli, which in the year 1905 were declared to be reserved forest by a notification under section 16 of the Madras Forest Act and have since been in the possession of Government. The plaint alleges that the declaration and taking of possession were illegal and ultra vires, because the Forest Settlement Officer did not give notice to the plaintiff or his agent as is required by section 6 of the Act before proceeding to constitute the lands a reserved forest. The plaintiff gave evidence that he was never served with notice, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary the District Judge found that this was so, and this finding has not been seriously contested. He inferred, however, from Exhibits 1, 2 and 3 that the plaintiff was presumably aware that the suit lands were being included in the reserved forest nearly a year before the publication of final notification under section 16, and held that, as the plaintiff did not avail himself of his right under section 17 to satisfy the Forest Settlement Officer, if he could, before the publication of the notification that he had sufficient cause for not preferring his claim within the period prescribed for the submission of claims in the notice issued in the year 1895, and so secure an investigation of his claim, the irregularity was cured and did not prevent the plaintiff being barred under that section. No authority has been cited before us in support of this view, and I am unable to accept it. Under the Act the Forest Settlement Officer is constituted a Court for the decision of claims to lands which it is proposed to include in a reserved forest as between Government and the claimant, and in the event of the claim being allowed he is required under section 10, if no arrangement is come to with the claimant, either to exclude the land in question from the proposed forest or to acquire it for Government under the Land Acquisition Act. Under section 6 he is required, besides publishing notices calling for claims at the headquarters of each taluk in which any part of the land is situated and at every town and village in the neighbourhood of such land, to serve special notice to the same effect on every known or reputed owner or occupier of any land included in or adjoining the land proposed to be constituted a reserved forest or his agent or manager, and it is not disputed that the plaintiff as the registered inamdar of the village in which the suit land was situated should have received notice under this section. It should also be stated that there is no evidence that the steps which were being taken under the Act came to the knowledge of the plaintiff under more than five years after the issue of the proclamation under section 6. In these circumstances, it is, I think, clear that the Forest Settlement Officer in the absence of the notice required by the section had no jurisdiction to make any decision affecting the rights of the plaintiff. Numerous cases might be cited in support of this position, but it is sufficient to cite the decisions of their Lordships in Nusserwanjee Pestonjee v. Meer Mynodeen Khan (1) and Saunby v. London Waterworks Commissioners (2).

In the latter it was held by their Lordships that the Statutory Commissioners having proceeded without serving the notice required by the Act the appellant had not lost his ordinary right of action for the trespass on his property. Reference may also be made to the forcible language of Lord Macnaghten in Herron v. Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners (3) and to Rameshwar Singh v. Secretary of State for India (4).

If, as I hold, the notification issued under section 16 is not binding on the plaintiff and his rights are not barred by section 17, I agree with the District Judge that he is entitled to a decree. Under the terms of his inam title-deed, Exhibit K, his inam tenure has been converted into a permanent free-hold, to use the language of the grant; and the only question is, whether it includes the unassessed waste lands in the village which have been included in the reserved forest. Exhibit K acknowledges his title to a personal inam consisting of the right to the Government revenue on land claimed to be 39.169 acres of dry and 287.69 acres of wet land situated in the Shothriem village of Plutampalli "besides poromboke." The poromboke here mentioned obviously means the poromboke or unassessed waste of the Shothriem village in question, and this is the construction put upon the words in similar grants in Secretary of State for India v. Ragunatha Thathachariar (5), and Papala Narayanaswami Naidu v. Pensalani Kanmiappa Naidu (6), where, however, it is held that certain lands including lands used for communal purposes, etc., do not pass under such a grant. The inam register, Exhibit J, which was before the survey, no doubt underestimates the area of the poromboke in the village, but there is no ground for interpreting the grant as not conferring the whole poromboke of the village. The appeal must be allowed and the suit decreed for the plaintiff with costs throughout.

COURTS-TROTTER, J.—I am of the same opinion. The Act which we have to construe is an expropriating Act and to a certain extent ousts the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts of law in favour of tribunals consisting wholly or in part of executive officers. Certain machinery is provided by the Act for the purpose of giving notice to persons who may be injuriously affected by the Act and enabling them to prosecute their claims before the tribunal set up by the Act. It is conceded that in one respect the procedure outlined by the Act has not been followed in this case, inasmuch as no notice has in fact been served upon the appellant as a known or reputed owner of lands affected, in accordance with the concluding paragraph of section 6 of the Act. It also appears that there was some evidence to show that the appellant in fact knew that it was proposed to include his lands in the new forest area, notwithstanding the absence of a notice directed to him personally. In these circumstances it was urged on behalf of the respondent that the broad policy of the Act must be looked at; and that all that was essential to give jurisdiction under it was that the appellant quoquo modo should have knowledge in fact of the proposal to include his lands. In support of this contention reliance was placed on the language of section 6 and of section 16. No doubt section 6 fixes no limit of time within which the personal notice to owners must be given: and section 16 fixes the date for notification of the reservation of the proposed forest only by reference to the time limited by the proclamation prescribed by the first part of section 6. From that it is argued that the second part of section 6 is only directory and that neglect to carry out its directions is a mere irregularity, which can be cured by proving that notice in fact reached the appellant. The appellant contends on the contrary that the sending of the notice prescribed by the second part of section 6 is as much a condition precedent to the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by the Statute as the issuing of the proclamation enjoined by the first. Looking at the language employed in the two parts of section, its terms are as mandatory in the one as in the other; "the Forest Settlement Officer shall publish a proclamation" is followed by "the Forest Settlement Officer shall also serve a notice." Where such language is used, I think, its proper construction has been determined in a series of cases in the House of Lords and Privy Council, of which I need only refer to Herron v. Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners (3). The result of those cases, in my opinion, is that every such statutory mandate in an expropriating Statute must be strictly observed and that its observance is a condition precedent to the whole jurisdiction conferred. I, therefore, hold that the appellant never became amenable to the special jurisdiction of the Madras Forest Act, and that the present suit lies, if he can prove his title as inamdar to the property sought to be afforested. That is a question of fact upon which, in my opinion, the evidence is conclusive in his favour.

This appeal having been posted to be spoken to this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—It will not be necessary to remand the case to ascertain the amount of the mesne profits, as the parties have agreed without prejudice that they should be awarded at Rs. 75 a year. The appellant will be entitled to recover mesne profits at this rate up to date of delivery.

THE RAJAH OF KARVETNAGAR, MINOR,
BY GUARDIAN, W. A. VARADACHARIAR, AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 96 (3), O.

LODD GOVINDA DOSS v. RAJAH OF KARVETNAGAR.

XXI, rr. 2, 11 (e)—Order appointing Commissioner by consent of parties—Appeal—Certifying payment or adjustment, mode of—Power and duty of Court to make inquiry—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Doctrine of 'no estoppel against law'—Public policy—Agreement to account for certain payments in execution of decree—Estoppel—Decree, construction of—Duty of Court—Madras Court of Wards Act (I of 1902), ss. 43 (5), 32, 55—Calculation—Payment.

Section 96 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to an order directing the appointment of a Commissioner with the consent of parties. [p. 359, col. 2.]

Section 43 (5) of Madras Act I of 1902 does not provide for any payment but a reference to sections 32 and 55 of the Act shows that the calculation mentioned in that section will determine the net income which the Court of Wards having management will be in a position to set apart for payment. [p. 360, col. 1.]

There is no authority or principle which binds a Court to construe a decree in the mode in which the parties intended it to operate however incompatible such a construction may be with the plain language of the decree. The duty of the Court is to execute the decree as it finds it and not as understood by the parties. If a particular construction has been placed by the Court upon a decree, and if it has been enforced by the process of the Court, the parties may be estopped, with certain limitations, from claiming that the decree should be construed differently. [p. 360, cols. 1 & 2.]

Rule 2 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, should be so construed as not to defeat justice. [p. 362, col. 2.]

Where a decree holder certifies a payment or adjustment to the Court under Order XXI, rule 2, the Court is bound to inquire into the truth or correctness of the statement made and to ascertain the exact amount for which credit should be given to the judgment-debtor. The Court is not confined to merely entering the figures supplied by the decree-holder. [p. 361, col. 1.]

No particular words are necessary for the purpose of certifying a payment or adjustment to the Court under Order XXI, rule 2. A mere intimation in an execution application that a certain amount had been received from the judgment-debtor but that it had been appropriated towards another liability amounts to certifying within the meaning of the rule. [p. 362, col. 1.]

The doctrine that there can be no estoppel against a plain provision of the law should not be pushed too far. The principle is that parties should not be permitted by an arrangement between themselves to commit an illegality. The right should not be extended to cases which have the effect of enabling parties to make a law for themselves in violation of the law of the land. But where such a result will not follow, there is nothing to prevent the application of the provisions of section 115 of the Evidence Act to agreements between the parties. [p. 363, col. 1.]

There is nothing opposed to public policy or illegal in parties stipulating that a certain sum of money which is recoverable as between themselves in a regular suit should be adjusted in execution proceedings. Therefore, where a decree-holder certifies and informs the Court of an adjustment, he is not entitled to say that payments received by him are accountable by him only in a regular suit. [p. 363, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against the orders of the District Court of North Arcot in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 520 of 1911 (in Execution Petition No. 145 of 1905 in Original Suit No. 12 of 1901) and in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 145 of 1905 (in Original Suit No. 12 of 1901) dated the 11th October 1911 and 7th August 1911, respectively.

Messrs. R. Sadagopachariar, T. Ranga-chariar, S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and K. Basu-yam Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals are from an application to execute a mortgage decree. The decree was passed in favour of the appellant's father on the 29th of September 1903. The suit itself was instituted in 1901. At the time of the institution of the suit, the Court of Wards was in charge of the estate a portion of which was mortgaged to the appellant's father. The possession of the Court commenced in 1900 and was relinquished in or about September 1905. The appellant took possession of the village thereafter. There is a dispute as to the exact date when he assumed management. He presented his application for an order absolute and for the sale of the mortgaged properties in December 1905. That order has not been exhibited in these proceedings. The District Judge says: "Before the order for sale was passed, it was not, however, ascertained what the balance of the mortgage-debt outstanding at the time of the application was, nor was the order absolute made for the realisation of any specific amount." This statement of the Court below has not been contested before us. On the 2nd of September 1909, the District Judge granted a prayer for execution and called for an affidavit, a draft proclamation and an encumbrance certificate from the appellant. On the 7th of October 1909, the appellant filed his affidavit. The judgment-debtor filed a counter-affidavit objecting to the valuation of the property and to the amount stated to be due to the decree-holder. On the 7th of August 1911, the District Judge passed an order to the effect that having regard to the dispute about the amount due, it is desirable that a Commissioner should be appointed to ascertain it. His order says: "The decree-holder's Vakil does not object to this being done." Then he referred to the suggestion of the Vakil that the accounts should be examined at the village and not in Court, and said that the request was reasonable. It is clear that on this date, the decree-holder through his Vakil consented to the appointment of a Commissioner. The only outstanding dispute was as to the place where the examination of the accounts should take place. But on the 8th of August and on the 11th of August, the Vakil is said to have filed two petitions requesting that the question "whether the decree being one for sale, the petitioner decree-holder was bound to account at all under the terms of the decree in the execution proceedings, and whether the judgment-debtor could insist on accounts being rendered in these proceedings", should be determined before a Commissioner was appointed. These two petitions are said to have been withdrawn. We regret that this should have been allowed. The grounds on which the Vakil wished to recede from the position taken up by him on the 7th of August are material. The Vakils on both sides were heard on these petitions. Finally, the District Judge affirmed his previous order on the 11th October 1911. Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 266 of 1911 is presented against this final order. Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 267 of 1911 is against the earlier order of the 7th August.

The appeals have been argued at great length. A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay against the first order as that was passed on consent. We do not think section 96 (3) applies to an order directing the appointment of a Commissioner. Reference may also be made to Order XXXIII, rule 4 (2), and to Mata Palat v. Beni Madho (1). Moreover, although the Vakil for the appellant accepted the suggestion to appoint a Commissioner, the District Judge formed his own conclusion on the materials placed before him. We must everrule the preliminary objection.

The matter in dispute between the parties relates to the amount received by the decree-holder from the mortgaged property after he took possession of it from the Court of

Wards. The judgment-debtor contended that the appellant should give credit for the net income received by the appellant and that execution should issue only for the balance. The decree-holder does not deny that he is liable to account to the judgment-debtor for the profits realised as mortgagee in possession, but argues that this liability does not prevent his levying execution for the full amount entered in the decree. There can be no manner of doubt that the conduct of the decree-holder led the judgment-debtor to believe that a separate suit for an account of the income need not be instituted and that credit will be given for the net profits in execution. It was said that a suit for the recovery of the profits will now be barred by limitation, whether there will be any such bar, and if so, to what extent, need not be gone into in these proceedings. The first question we have to decide is, whether under the decree the appellant is bound to give credit for the income received by him as mortgagee in possession. The decree says: "This Court doth further order and decree that the plaintiff be entitled to the net rents and profits of the mortgaged property from the beginning of fasli 1310 according to the provisions of section 43 (5) of Madras Act I of 1902, and that all payments made to the plaintiff on account thereof be applied in reduction of the amount due to him under the compromise deed." As we pointed out before, this decree was passed when the Court of Wards was in possession. Its intervention was sought by the zemindar for the purpose of liquidating the enormous debts which had accumulated over his estate and of saving, if possible, a portion of the estate for him. It was because the Court found that there was no possibility of securing to the zemindar any portion of the property it gave up possession in 1905. Therefore, when it assumed possession, it was with the object of paying to the secured creditors the income available from the properties mortgaged, so that after crediting a portion of the payment for the interest accruing due, the balance may be applied towards the discharge of the principal debt. The Court of Wards is in the position of a Receiver, Adipuram Pillai v. Gopalasami Mudali (2). When these facts are remembered, the provision in the clause for the payment of the net profits becomes intelligible. It is true, as pointed out by Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar, section 43 (5) does not provide for any payment. By reference to sections 32 and 55, it is clear that the calculation mentioned in section 43 will determine the net income which the Court having management will be in a position to set apart for payment to the mortgagee. Section 32 distinctly provides for the payment of the debts due by the ward. However that may be, there is no warrant for reading into the clause a provision that when the mortgagee is in possession, he has to apply the net income towards the decree-debt. There are patent objections to such a construction. The clause speaks of payment and not of appropriation. Section 43 (5) which is referred to in the clause, speaks of a dispossessed incumbrancer. That same section provides for the net profits being recoverable from the Court of Wards. Obviously, therefore, the decree had reference to the management by the Court and to the payment to be made by it and not to the resumption of possession by the decree-holder. It was by an oversight that the decree did not provide for the contingency of the Court withdrawing from the management. There is no warrant for importing into the decree a provision like the one which the judgment-debtor says was in the contemplation of the parties. That would be adding to the decree and not construing it. It was argued that if the parties understood the decree in a particular sense, the Courts should give effect to it. We have no clear evidence in this case of any course of conduct by the parties which placed the construction we are asked to adopt. Nor do we think that the contention that Courts are bound to construe a decree in the mode which the parties intended it to operate is well founded. If a particular construction has been placed by the Court on a decree and if it has been enforced by the process of the Court, the parties may be estopped from claiming that the decree should be differently construed. Even this view has its limitations. But we know of no authority or principle which renders the executing Court a mere recording machine for the interpretation which the parties choose to put upon a decree, however incompatible such a construction may be with the plain language of the the decree.

Secretary of State for India in Council v. Durbijoy Singh (3) does not help the respondent. On other hand, Bakhtiar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (4) suggests that it is the duty of the Court to execute the decree as it finds it and not as understood by the parties. We must hold that the decree does not provide for the application of rents and profits received by the decree-holder in satisfaction of the decree.

One other minor contention may be disposed of before dealing with the principal question. In the course of the execution-application the Pleader for the decree-holder undoubtedly assented to the appointment of the Commissioner at one stage of the proceedings, although he subsequently withdrew his consent. In Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Bashyakarl Naidu (5), the Judicial Committee concurred with the view of the High Court that it is open to a Pleader to abandon an issue relating to the impartibility of a zemindari. It was argued that this decision will not enable a Pleader to give up a question of law. It cannot be said that the point conceded before the District Judge related to a pure question of law. In his affidavit, the appellant had admitted his liability to account for the profits during the period he was in possession; and the Pleader was within his rights in following up this admission by consenting to the appointment of a Commissioner. Rama Iyengar v. Kasinivenda Iyengar (6) only deals with an erroneous admission that a question of law was unarguable. See also Narayan v. Venkatacharya (7). These do not affect the present case. However, having regard to the fact that the admission was withdrawn soon after, we do not wish to base our judgment on the consent alone.

The main point for decision is, whether the fact that the receipt of the income from the property has not been certified to the Court by the decree-holder, prevents the Judge from directing an inquiry into the amount realised. There are two provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure relating to this matter, Order XXI, rules 2 and 11. The first of these rules deals with certifying to the Court and the latter with the contents of the application for execution. Rule 2 is an enabling provision. Rule 11, clause (a), imposes a duty on the decree-holder to state to the Court whether any payment or other adjustment has been made. It was contended that whereas the right given to the judgment-debtor to apply within a specified period for certifying the payment or adjustment may necessitate an inquiry, when the decree-holder certifies the Court has to act solely on his representation and any enquiry, regarding the amount of the payment or adjustment is not within the competency of the Court. We are not prepared to place such a restricted construction upon the powers of the Court. We fail to see why the arithmetic of the payment or adjustment is beyond the Court's jurisdiction. We cannot accede to the contention that when the manner of payment or adjustment has been notified, the Court has no power to ascertain to what extent the decree has been satisfied. To take a concrete case: suppose a decree-holder informs the Court that he desires that the judgment-debtor should be credited with the balance that may be found in his favour after taking account of a mutual and current account between the parties, we see no reason for holding that the Court is powerless to order an enquiry regarding the amount. The phrase "adjustment in whole or in part" suggests that the Court is not confined to merely entering the figures supplied by the decree-holder. The further question for consideration is whether the decree-holder has certified any such adjustment to the Court. No particular words are necessary for this purpose. See Saadoollah Shaikh v. Kalee Churn (8), Alathoor Badruddin v. Gulam Moideen (9), Ramayyar v. Ramayyar (10) and Lakhi Narain Ganguli v. Felamani Dasi (11). Two statements made by the decree-holder are relied on. In the Execution Application No. 145 of 1905 presented by him, he says: "this and a small amount collected by the plaintiff himself from the tenants have been appropriated towards the expenses of the management to which the plaintiff is entitled." Then in the affidavit which he was called upon to submit prior to the settlement of the proclamation of sale, he stated: "the amount for the recovery of which the sale was ordered is Rs. 23,11,183 on the 29th March 1903, with further interest to be added. Accordingly, with further interest up to 29th September 1909, deducting the amount of net rents paid to me by the Court of Wards, the total amount comes to Rs. 29,05,187-1-11. Credit will be given for the net income received by me up to the date of final settlement of accounts in execution proceedings. I may be permitted to add the amount of expenditure incurred over and above the net income received by me during the course of management of the said Narayanavanam Taluq." Mr. Rangachariar argued that the last clause of the paragraph is an intimation that there was no surplus income. We cannot accept this construction. The paragraph opens with a statement that "the net revenue available after deducting the peishcush and the land-cess" will be about Rs. 97,500. In the middle of the paragraph, it is said that "credit will be given for the net income." The last clause is only a suggestion that if in the calculation of the net income, the decree-holder had omitted to give himself credit for any legitimate expenses incurred by him in the course of the management, he would submit a statement for making deductions in that behalf. To read the clause as the learned Vakil wants us to do will render the whole paragraph meaningless. We are of opinion that in this paragraph the decree-holder distinctly intimated to the Court that credit will be given for the amounts received as net profits during the years that he was in possession. It was next contended that the affidavit only provided that "credit will be given for the net income received up to date;" and such language is not equivalent to asking the Court to certify the adjustment. The affidavit was filed with a view to enable the Court to fix the amount to be entered in the sale proclamation. The plaintiff clearly wanted the Court to apply its mind to the figure that should be so entered. It is not suggested in what other proceeding this credit was intended to be given by the decree-holder. We are of opinion that these words were intended to inform the Court that the decree must be taken to have been satisfied to the extent of the net income received by the decree-holder. We must, therefore, hold that the decree-holder intended to certify adjustment by his affidavit, that it is competent to the Court to inquire into the quantum of this adjustment and that the appointment of a Commissioner for this purpose was justifiable.

There is one other aspect of the case which leads to the same conclusion. Under Order XXI, rule 11, the decree-holder is bound to inform the Court of any adjustment or payment that has been made. It was held in Ramayyar v. Ramayyar (10) that if the decree-holder fraudulently keeps back information in this respect the executing Court will have power to order an inquiry. In Pampayya v. Narasannah (12), it was held that even apart from fraud the Court can determine whether any adjustment has been made. In neither of these cases, the effect of rule 2 upon rule 11 (section 235 or section 258 of Act XIV of 1882) were considered. The cardinal principle, no doubt, is to see that neither party overreaches the other. But where no intimation is conveyed by the decree-holder, it is doubtful whether the Court can start an inquiry on the ground that the decree-holder should have certified payment or adjustment. The better view seems to be that in all cases where the Court is seized of the question either from intimation conveyed by the decree-holder at any time before orders are passed or from the judgment-debtor within the prescribed period, the Court will be bound to inquire into the truth or correctness of the statement made. This view would give effect to the imperative provision in rule 11, clause (e), and to the permissive provision in rule 2. In the present case, the decree-holder did say in the petition for execution that moneys have been received, but he coupled it with an assertion that it has been appropriated towards the expenses of the management. The truth of this assertion is a legitimate subject for inquiry. The decision in Tukaram v. Babaji (13) is very analogous to the present case. In that case, the decree-holder relied on uncertified payments to save limitation and the judgment-debtor denied them and pleaded that execution was barred. The Court held that it had power to direct an inquiry. If the truth of an assertion of an adjustment can be enquired into for the purpose of saving limitation, we fail to see why the same principle should not be extended to ascertain the exact amount for which credit should be given to the judgment-debtor. See also Roshan Singh v. Mata Din (14). Fateh Muhammad v. Gopal Das (15) was strongly relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellant. It only lays down that where an arrangement by which a decree is adjusted, is not certified, the executing Court should not recognise it. There are observations in that judgment which are not reconcilable with recent decisions, which place a more liberal construction on the manner of certifying. In Trimbak Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (16), the question was whether a decree-holder who received moneys outside the Court without certifying was estopped from pleading that they should not be recognised as adjustments. We agree with Mr. Justice Heaton that section 258 (rule 2 of Order XXI) should be so construed as not to defeat justice. In Khushalchand v. Nandram (17), the learned Judges of whom Mr. Justice Chandavarkar, who took part in the decision in Trimbak Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (16), was one inclined to the view that a mere intimation of adjustment is equivalent to certifying. Jogendra Nath Sarkar v. Probhat Nath Chatterjee (18) follows the view taken by Mr. Justice Chandavarkar in Trimbak Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (16). These decisions do not compel us to hold that where a statement has been made in the execution petition that a certain payment was made, it is not within the province of the Court to inquire whether the mode of appropriation suggested in it is true or not. Our conclusion is that the District Judge was right in appointing a Commissioner to ascertain to what extent the profits received by the appellant and referred to by him in his petition should be applied towards the amount of the decree. The decree-holder in applying for an order absolute left the question of the amount due open.

Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar has raised a further contention that as the decree-holder has agreed to give credit to the income from the mortgaged property in execution and as the judgment-debtor did not object to this course, the appellant should not be allowed to invoke the aid of Order XXI, rule 2. Mr. Rangachariar's reply to this is that as there can be no estoppel against a plain provision of the law, the decree-holder is not precluded from pleading that his assent does not bind him; and he relies upon Jogendra Nath Sarkar v. Probhat Nath Chatterjee (18), Trimbak Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (16) and Komma Somakka v. Kodidala Pedda Ramiah (19). There has been a tendency in recent years to push this doctrine too far. The principle is that parties should not be permitted by an arrangement between themselves to commit an illegality. The right should not be extended to cases which have the effect of enabling parties to make a law for themselves in violation of the law of the land. But where such a result will not follow, there is nothing to prevent the application of the provisions of section 115 of the Evidence Act to agreements between the parties. There is nothing opposed to public policy or illegal in parties stipulating that a certain sum of money which is recoverable as between themselves in a regular suit should be adjusted in execution proceedings. The accountability arose after decree. It was between the parties to the suit and in respect of the subject-matter of the litigation. Clause 2 of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure shows that an arrangement of the kind we have referred to is not obnoxious to legal procedure. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (20) supports this view. Mr. Rangachariar distinguished this case on the ground that the sanction of the Court was given in that case to the mode of enforcing the claim. Although that distinction is well founded, we think that its extension to cases like the present will not be unwarranted, especially as the Code is in favour of treating applications as suits. Section 47, clause 2. See Muhammad Sulaiman v. Jhukkilal (21), Lakshmana v. Sukiya Bai (22), Kondaji Bagaji v. Anam (23). Moreover, in the present case after the filing of the application by the decree-holder, in which he referred to the receipt of income from the mortgaged property which he alleged he applied in a particular manner, the Court took action on it by issuing notices to the judgment-debtor. The Court by these orders must be deemed to have sanctioned the proposal of the decree-holder to give credit in execution proceedings to moneys which he is bound to account for in a regular suit. See also the observations of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (24).

The decisions in Appa Rao v. Krishna Iyengar (25), Vaidhinadasawmy Aiyar v. Somasundaram Pillai (26) and Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetti (27) relied on by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar do not affect the question. If the respondent in this case contended that receipts as mortgagee ought to be regarded as payments to the decree-holder, these decisions will be in appellant's favour. We are not deciding this case on that ground. We hold that the decree-holder has certified, that he has informed the Court of an adjustment and that he is not entitled to say that payments received by him are accountable by him only in a regular suit. The decision of the District Judge is right for the reason mentioned by us. We dismiss the appeals with costs of the sole respondent in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 266.

The Commissioner will take accounts from the 1st July 1907 up to the 30th of June 1915. Credit will be given for the amount reported by the Commissioner to the judgment-debtor and in the sale proclamation the decree amount minus other amount will

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 127—Trespasser, suit against—Mesne profits, decree for—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

Section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act does not compel a person to recognise a trespasser as a tenant and to sue him for arrears of rent at such rate as the Revenue Court may consider fair and equitable. He has the option either of going to the Civil Court and suing him for possession and damages in the manner laid down in Order II, rules 2 and 4, Civil Procedure Code, or to acquiesce in his occupation and sue him for rent at a fair and equitable rate under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act.

Lala Singh v. Hazari Singh, 26 Ind. Cas. 242; 17 O. C. 343 at p. 344; 1 O. L. J. 574, referred to.

Where a person, who finds his agricultural land in the wrongful occupation of another, elects to sue him in the Civil Court for possession and mesne profits, the Court cannot, while giving a decree for possession, refuse that for mesne profits on the ground that the plaintiff's remedy lies in the Revenue Courts under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 2nd August 1913, upholding that of the Munsif, Bahraich, dated the 30th April 1913.

Babu Salig Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fakhruddin Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant is the lessee of the village Kishunpur Mitha on behalf of the Court of Wards in charge of the Nanpara Estate. The land in dispute is situated in that village and was cultivated by Dasrath, who was ejected by the plaintiff in June 1912. The allegation of the plaintiff was that Dasrath and his father Balgovind wrongfully took possession of the land and the former was ejected. The plaintiff, therefore, sued for possession of the land and mesne profits. The defence was that the plaintiff gave the land to Balgovind under an agreement made in May 1912. The Court below found that no such agreement was proved and gave a decree for possession of the land. The Court of first instance also gave a decree for Rs. 120 on account of damages, but the lower Appellate Court refused to uphold that decree, on the ground that the plaintiff's remedy was to sue for such rent as the Revenue Court might consider fair and equitable under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act.

Section 127 does not, however, compel a person to recognize a trespasser as a tenant and to sue him for arrears of rent at such rate as the Revenue Court may consider fair and equitable. A person, who finds his land in the wrongful occupation of another, has, as pointed out in Lala Singh v. Hazari Singh (1), the option of either going to the Civil Court and suing him for possession and damages in the manner laid down in Order II, rules 2 and 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure, or to acquiesce in his occupation and sue him for rent at a fair and equitable rate under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. The suit for possession, which has been decreed by the Court below, was in itself a sufficient indication that the plaintiff was not willing to acquiesce in the cultivation of the land by Balgovind. The lower Court ought, therefore, to have gone into the question of damages and given a decree to the plaintiff for such compensation for the wrongful use and occupation of the land to which he might have been found entitled. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff stated that he is willing to accept the amount of damages awarded by the Court of first instance. There is nothing to show that that amount is excessive.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff's claim decreed for Rs. 120 damages with proportional costs here and below against Balgovind, defendant No. 2. The defendant-respondent will bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—In this case, the plaintiff is the appellant. He filed a suit on 14th May 1909 against Srimati Thaka Sundari Dasi, wife of Naba Gopal Roy, for specific performance of an agreement to sell to him certain land. The suit has been dismissed in both the lower Courts and the plaintiff has consequently appealed.

It appears that, by a bainamāh, dated 12th Sravan 1315 (27th July 1908), the first defendant, Thaka Sundari Dasi, agreed to sell to the plaintiff this land for a sum of Rs. 3,100. Of that Rs. 200 was paid as earnest money. The bainamāh provided that the sale should be completed in three months, when the sale-deed was to be registered and the balance of the purchase-money paid.

The plaintiff subsequently paid and the defendant accepted a sum of Rs. 85 on 7th Asvin 1315. That was before the three months named in the bainamāh had expired. The parties thereafter did not come to terms with regard to the completion of the document. The plaintiff says that he asked Naba Gopal that his wife should go to Jamtara, and register the deed, but that Naba Gopal refused and required the plaintiff to come to Nagori where they lived and have the deed executed there. Nothing, therefore, was done with regard to the completion of the agreement. On 14th May 1909, some 10 months after the agreement, the plaintiff filed the present suit. After he had filed the suit, namely, on 16th July 1909, the defendant Thaka Sundari Dasi purported to sell the same property to Bhairab Chandra Mandal and Gopal Sundari Dasi, who are said to be mortgagees of the property from Thaka Sundari Dasi. That deed was registered on 17th July 1909. In consequence of that sale, those two persons were made parties defendant in this suit, and it is they who have contested the suit throughout. Thaka Sundari Dasi has stood aside; and, after filing her written statement, has taken no further part in the proceedings.

The learned District Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's suit in toto. In doing so, we think that he was clearly in error. In any case the plaintiff might have been given a chance of recovering the deposit which he had made, unless it was shown that he was guilty of laches which would prevent him from so doing. But the error of the learned District Judge consists in this that he has regarded the three months named in the contract as being the extreme limit, within which the contract was to be performed, and that there could be no extension of that time. In other words, that the three months fixed was of the essence of the contract. Now the Specific Relief Act does not apply to the Sonthal Parganas; nor did the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 in which there was a section dealing with specific relief. The case will, therefore, have to be governed by the ordinary rules of justice, equity and good conscience. It has been a long standing rule in all matters of specific performance of contract for sale of land that time is not of the essence of the contract, until the parties expressly make it so. Some time is generally named in the agreement to sell, but that is rarely adhered to; and it is not until one side or the other gives the opposite party reasonable notice to complete the agreement within a definite time that the opposite party can be tied down to the time so prescribed. In this case, nothing of that kind was done; and within 10 months, the plaintiff filed the suit in which he offered to pay the amount and asked the Court to insist upon the defendant Thaka Sundari Dasi executing a conveyance in his favour. It appears to us that he was right in so doing.

It is argued that the matter would be in some way governed by the provisions of the Contract Act. There are really no provisions in the Contract Act, which are in conflict with the ordinary rules with regard to the specific performance of contracts of sale of land. On the contrary section 55 says: "If it was not the intention of the parties that time should be of the essence of the contract, the contract does not become voidable by the failure to do such thing at or before the specified time; but the promisee is entitled to compensation from the promisor for any loss occasioned to him by such failure." That would not prevent the plaintiff from coming in and requiring the defendant to perform her contract in his favour. The Limitation Act, gives three years for a suit for specific performance. This does not mean that the plaintiff is entitled to stand out for three years, but, in this case, there seems to have been no laches on the part of the plaintiff nor is any such laches found by the Courts below. The fact that he brought his suit within 10 months of the date of the bainamah shows that he was anxious to carry out the contract on his part.

Then, it is said that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were purchasers for value without notice. The Transfer of Property Act applies to the Sonthal Parganas and section 52 provides that in a case of sale of the property in question by any party to a suit or proceeding, such sale cannot affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court and on such terms as it may impose. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who have contested this suit, have no equities whatever in their favour. They were mortgagees of the property and they will, no doubt, be able to recover their mortgage-money from the purchase-money if and when it is paid by the plaintiff.

We think that the decisions of the Courts below cannot be upheld. We accordingly set them aside, and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for specific performance of the contract on the plaintiffs' depositing in Court, within two months of the receipt of the record in the Court below, the balance of the purchase-money. There will also be a decree for possession to be given to the plaintiff on payment of the purchase-money and the execution of the conveyance, but subject to any rights of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as mortgagees of the property. Plaintiff must have his costs of suit from defendants Nos. 2, 3 in all the Courts. If the balance of the purchase-money is not paid into Court within the two months as aforesaid, the suit will stand dismissed with costs.

Let the record be sent down without delay.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Mortgage executed by pardanashin ladies—Attestation—Witnesses identifying ladies by their voices—Mortgage—Priority—Priority claimed but not insisted upon by an appeal, effect of—Estoppel.

A mortgage, the amount secured by which exceeded Rs. 100, was executed by two pardanashin ladies. The ladies did not appear before the two attesting witnesses and, consequently, their faces were not seen by the witnesses. However, the witnesses were well acquainted with the voices of the ladies and recognised and identified them, at the time when the mortgage-deed was executed, by their voices.

Held, that the mortgage-deed was duly attested by the two witnesses within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 366, col. 2.]

PADARATH HALWAI v. RAM NARAIN UPADHIA.

In 1887 the two villages A and B were mortgaged to S. In February 1892 the village A alone was mortgaged to L. In June 1892 the villages A and B were again mortgaged to S with three more villages. In 1893 the village A alone was further mortgaged to L, who in 1896 sued on his both mortgages making S a defendant to his suit. In his written statement S distinctly claimed priority in respect of his mortgage of 1887. But under an erroneous decree, against which S did not appeal, the village A was sold, the proceeds of the sale were applied first in payment to L in respect of his mortgage of February 1892, and the balance was paid to S, though it was insufficient to satisfy the mortgage of 1887. As L's mortgage of 1893 remained entirely unsatisfied, L obtained a decree, under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, in execution whereof the village B was sold and was purchased by P in 1904. In defence to a suit by S it was contended by P, that as S did not, by an appeal against the first decree of L, insist on his priority under the mortgage of 1887, the village B was relieved of all liability in respect of that mortgage.

Held, (overruling L's contention) that the fact that S did not insist on his priority did not affect his claim against the village B. [p. 370, col. 1.]

Consolidated appeals from a judgment and decrees of the High Court, Allahabad, dated March 29th, 1909, modifying those of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur, dated May 25th, 1905.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are sufficiently set forth in their Lordships' judgment. The case was remanded for further evidence on the question of attestation. Their Lordships have held in the case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (1) that attestation as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 could not be in due force unless the attesting witnesses saw the mortgagor signing the deed. Further evidence was that the ladies were seen through a chick signing the deed and were identified by their voices.

Sir E. Richards, K. C. and Mr. Brown, for the Appellants, contended that the mortgage-deed was not duly attested as it had to be signed by the mortgagor in presence of attesting witnesses. It was so laid down in Shamu Patter's case (1).

[LORD ATKINSON: It is not the question of fraud. It is the question of attestation acknowledged by attesting witnesses. The question is whether the attesting witness saw the attestation. He knows from his sense of hearing though not of sight. What is the difference between the sense? What superiority has one over the other?]

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., for the Respondent, then argued that the attestation was complete as the witnesses had seen the ladies signing the deed through a chick. He referred to Parke v. Mears (2) and Synd Abbas Ali Khan v. Yadeem Ramy Reddy (3).

Sir E. Richards, K. C., in reply, said that the two men outside the parda did not know the ladies by sight. This could not be attestation. By holding that this was attestation the greatest security in case of pardanashin ladies would be taken away.

[SIR GEORGE FARWELL: One has to be satisfied whether the hand is that of the lady or not.]

[MR. AMEER ALI: It purports to be by A. The question is whether it was by A or B. The document cannot be put in evidence before the person executing it is ascertained.]

[LORD ATKINSON: It is proved as a fact that it was executed by the ladies and that they were in the room. Are they not justified to presume that the hands were of the ladies?]

At this stage of the argument their Lordships directed Counsel to address the Board on other points, holding that attestation was proved. The judgment on this point was delivered by Lord Atkinson.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., continuing, argued that the mortgagees were not appealing against the procedure of the lower Court that their charges should have been satisfied out of the proceeds for the sale of the first village. They lost their right by not insisting on payment. The appellants bought the village free from all incumbrances. He referred to Mamraj v. Brij Lal Chakerverti (4); Ponnusami Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Naicken (5); Imam Ali v. Baij Nath Ram Sahu (6); Gur Narain v. Shadi Lal (7).

Mr. DeGruyther, was not called upon to reply.

PADARATH HALWAI v. RAM NARAIN UPADHIA.

appeals from decrees, dated respectively the 29th March 1909, of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad. The two decrees appealed from were made in appeals in the same suit. The suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur on the 29th November 1904 to enforce, by sale of the village Baragaon and other villages, the payment of Rs. 66,809 odd, due under a mortgage dated the 25th June 1892. The Subordinate Judge decreed the claim in part and in part dismissed it. Each side appealed to the High Court at Allahabad. The High Court dismissed the defendants' appeal, and in the plaintiffs' appeal gave them a decree for their claim.

When these consolidated appeals first came on for hearing before this Board, it was contended on behalf of the appellants that the mortgage upon which this suit was brought had not been attested by at least two witnesses, and as the amount secured by it exceeded one hundred rupees the alleged mortgage was ineffective and could not be given in evidence. That point had not been raised in either of the Courts below. Under the circumstances this Board remanded the case to the High Court in order to enable the parties to produce evidence on the question of attestation. Evidence on that subject has been taken and has been returned to this Board. On behalf of the appellants it has now been contended that the evidence which was given on the remand in proof of the attestation was unreliable, and, even if accepted as true, did not prove that the two attesting witnesses who gave evidence on the remand had seen the mortgagors sign their names to the mortgage.

The mortgagors were two pardanashin ladies who did not appear before the attesting witnesses, and consequently their faces were not seen by the witnesses. These two attesting witnesses were, however, well-acquainted with the voices of the ladies, and their Lordships are satisfied that these two attesting witnesses did identify the mortgagors at the time when the deed was executed. The mortgagors were, on the occasion of the execution of the mortgage-deed, brought from the zenana apartments of the house in which they were to an ante-room to execute the deed. In the ante-room the ladies seated themselves on the floor, and between them and these two attesting witnesses there was a chick, which was not lined with cloth, hanging in the doorway. These two attesting witnesses recognised the ladies by their voices, and they say that they saw each lady execute the deed with her own hand, although owing to the chick they were unable to see the face of either of the ladies. On the other side an attempt was made to prove that a tat, through which nothing could be seen, was hanging in the doorway. Their Lordships accept the evidence of these two attesting witnesses as true, and hold it proved that the mortgage-deed of the 25th June 1892 was duly attested by at least two witnesses within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. It is not disputed that the mortgage-deed was in fact the deed of the two pardanashin ladies, Musammat Niamat Bibi and Musammat Kamar-un-Nisa Bibi, the mortgagors.

The only other question to be considered in these appeals is the contention on behalf of the appellants that the plaintiffs in the suit have by reason of certain events, which will now be referred to, lost their right to enforce against Baragaon payment of a considerable part of the amount which they have claimed.

On the 8th August 1887 Musammat Niamat Bibi and Musammat Kamar-un-Nisa, who will be hereafter referred to as the mortgagors, mortgaged the villages Arghupur and Baragaon to Sarju Parshad and Ramanand to secure Rs. 12,000 and interest thereon. On the 19th February 1892 the mortgagors mortgaged Arghupur to Lukshmi Prasad and others to secure Rs. 30,000 and interest thereon. The mortgagees of the 19th February 1892 and their representatives-in-title will hereafter be referred to as the second mortgagees. On the 25th June 1892 the mortgagors by their deed of that date mortgaged Arghupur and Baragaon, together with three other villages, to Sarju Parshad and Ramanand to secure Rs. 32,000 and interest thereon. This sum of Rs. 32,000 included a sum of Rs. 18,000, principal and interest then due under the mortgage of the 8th August 1887. On the 20th May 1893 the mortgagors further mortgaged Arghupur to the second mortgagee to secure Rs. 21,324 and interest thereon. Sarju Parshad is dead; he is represented in this suit by his son, Ram Narain, who is one of the three plaintiffs. The other plaintiffs are Ramanand and his son, S. Narain.

PADARATH HALWAI v. RAM NARAIN UPADHYA.

On the 14th December 1896 the second mortgagees brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur upon their mortgages of the 19th February 1892 and the 20th May 1893 to obtain a decree for the principal moneys and interest due under the said mortgages, and they prayed that in default of payment on a date to be fixed by the Court, Arghupur should be sold by auction and the proceeds of the sale should be applied towards the satisfaction of their decree. To that suit the second mortgagees made Musammât Kamar-un-Nisâ Bibi as one of the mortgagors and as the heiress of Musammât Niamat Bibi, then dead, the other mortgagor, Sarju Parshad, Ramanand and one Indar Sen Singh, defendants. Indar Sen Singh was a subsequent mortgagee; he is a defendant to this suit, but is not an appellant. In their plaint the second mortgagees stated that Sarju Parshad, Famanand and Indar Sen Singh were mortgagees of Arghupur, and that they, the then plaintiffs, "were ready to pay the mortgage-money due to any of them who may be prior mortgagees and which they (the plaintiffs) may be legally bound to pay."

In their written statement in the suit of 1896, Sarju Parshad and Ramanand distinctly claimed their right as prior mortgagees and said, "If the plaintiffs be willing to get the hypothecated property sold, after paying in full the prior amount due to these defendants, they have no objection whatever to the plaintiffs' claim."

The then Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur, being obviously in confusion of mind as to the rights of the parties to the suit of 1896, by his judgment of the 19th January 1897, decided amongst other things that Arghupur should be sold by auction in the event of the defendants to the suit failing to pay, on or before the 19th May 1897, to the plaintiffs in that suit (the second mortgagees) Rs. 49,275-9, the principal and interest due under the mortgage of the 19th February 1892 and future interest, and that the proceeds of the sale should be applied first in payment of the amount due to the second mortgagees under their mortgage of the 19th February 1892, and that the balance, if any, should be "applied in payment of the sum which may be due to Sarju Parshad and Ramanand on that date with interest. Any surplus left to be applied in payment of the sum due to the plaintiffs under the second document, dated the 20th May 1893." The Subordinate Judge apparently overlooked the rights of Sarju Parshad and Ramanand under their prior mortgage of the 8th August 1887. In accordance with the judgment a decree was made by the Subordinate Judge. Default having been made in payment on the date fixed, a decree absolute for sale of Arghupur was made by the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur on the 4th September 1897. Under the decree of the 4th September 1897, Arghupur was sold. The proceeds of the sale were applied first in payment to the second mortgagees of the sum then due to them in respect of their mortgage of the 19th February 1892, and the balance of the proceeds of the sale was paid to the first mortgagees; that balance did not satisfy the amount then due to the first mortgagees under their mortgage of the 8th August 1887. If the proceeds of the sale of Arghupur had been first applied to the payment of the amount then due under the mortgage of the 8th August 1887, that mortgage would have been satisfied, and the amount due under the mortgage of the 25th June 1892 would have been to that extent reduced. As the proceeds of the sale of Arghupur did not satisfy the amount due to the second mortgagees under their mortgage of the 20th May 1893, they obtained a decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and in execution of this decree the village of Baragaon was sold on the 20th April 1904, and was purchased by the appellants.

On behalf of the appellants it has been contended before this Board and in the Courts below that Baragaon was relieved of all liability in respect of the debt due under the mortgage of the 8th August 1887, by reason of the failure of Sarju Parshad and Ramanand to insist on their priority under that mortgage, it being alleged in support of the contention that Sarju Parshad and Ramanand had agreed to waive their priority as mortgagees of Arghupur, or had waived it, of which, if it were material, there is no proof, and that they were guilty of laches in not insisting on that priority. Their Lordships have found it difficult to follow the argument in support of the contention, as the appellants had no interest in Baragaon until they purchased Baragaon on the 20th April 1904, and what they then purchased was the interest of the mortgagors in that village.

It is true that had Sarju Parshad and Ramanand appealed against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, they could have had their interests as first mortgagees under the mortgage of 8th August 1887 protected, and would, on the sale of Arghupur, have obtained payment of the amount then due under that mortgage. Sarju Parshad and Ramanand did not, by an appeal, insist on their right as prior mortgagees, but the fact that they did not insist on having the amount due under the mortgage of the 8th August 1887 satisfied in priority to the claim of the second mortgagees does not disentitle the plaintiffs to recover the full amount of their claim in this suit, and does not entitle the appellants to relief. No other fact which would entitle the appellants to relief has been shown. The appeals fail.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed.

The appellants must pay the costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Ordinarily and in the absence of a special stipulation, the mortgagor is not entitled to redeem before the close of the period for which the mortgage was executed; but a provision in a mortgage-deed providing for payment by the mortgagor on or before a certain date is sufficient indication of an intention to allow him to redeem before that date, especially where a stipulation is made applicable only to the balance of the mortgage-debt. JUDGMENT.—In the present case the mortgage provides for the re-payment of part of the mortgage-debt at the end of March 1910 and for the re-payment of the rest "within the end of March 1952" which, we think, must mean on or before the 31st March 1952. There has been some difference of opinion as to whether under a provision of this kind a mortgagor is entitled to redeem before the end of the period. It was held in Vadju v. Vadja (1) and in Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (2) that he was not. On the other hand it was held that he was, in Rose Ammal v. Rajarathnam Ammal (3) and in Chinnasami Reddiar v. Krishna Reddy (4) and in Purna Chandra Sarma v. Peary Mohan Pal (5). The recent decision of the Privy Council in Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (6), on appeal from Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (2), lays down that ordinarily and in the absence of a special stipulation the mortgagor is not entitled to redeem before the close of the period for which the mortgage was executed. Their Lordships observed that the language used in that case, "in nine years," was certainly ambiguous, and that much might be said in favour of the conclusion of the Allahabad High Court. It was, however, unnecessary to decide the point. Notwithstanding these observations, we think, we are at liberty to hold, following Rose Ammal v. Rajarathnam Ammal (3) and *Chinnasami Reddiar v. JUDGMENT.—The question for determination in these appeals is whether the payment of the entire mortgage-money by the representative-in-interest of the mortgagor to some of the heirs of a mortgagee is binding on the other heirs of the deceased, who were living separately from the person to whom the payment was made. The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant relies on section 38 of the Indian Contract Act and the decision of Barber Maran v. Ramana Gounden (1). The former, however, does not apply to the case, for it deals with the legal consequences of offers, made to one of several joint promisees, of money to which all of them were jointly entitled. Section 45 of the Act deals with the devolution of joint rights and declares that when a person has made a promise to two or more persons jointly, then, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract, the right to claim performance rests, as between him and them, with them during their joint lives, and, after the death of any of them, with the representative of such deceased person jointly with the survivor, or survivors, and, after the death of the last survivor, with the representatives of all jointly. If the promisee was a single individual, his right will similarly devolve under the ordinary law of inheritance on his heirs jointly. A payment to one of the heirs cannot, however, absolve the debtor from his liability to the other heirs, because as between the co-heirs the devolution is several, though the liability of the debtor to all of them continues to be joint. Where money is advanced to one person by several persons jointly, each person might be regarded by implication, in the absence of evidence of intention to the contrary, as authorized to act on behalf of the other. But no such inference can be made, where the persons entitled to the money are heirs of a single creditor. A release, therefore, of the mortgage-debt by one of the heirs of a deceased mortgagee on payment to him the entire mortgage-money does not bind the other heirs of the mortgagee.

(1) 20 M. 461; 7 M. L. J. 269

As regards the decision in Barber Maran v. Ramana Gounden (1), the correctness of which was doubted in Hans Singh v. Chet Singh (2) and elsewhere, its authority, so far as it was based on the Common Law of England, is considerably shaken by the later decision of the Chancery Division in Powell v. Brodhurst (3). That case was, moreover, of joint promisees, whereas we are concerned here with the case of co-heirs of a single creditor. Section 45 of the Indian Contract Act does apply to a case of co-heirs and, as I observed, in Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader Sahab (4), Sitaram Apaji Kode v. Shridhar Anant Prabhu (5) and Ram Chandra v. Rajjan Lal (6), a payment to one of several co-heirs does not discharge the debtor from his liability to the remainder. On the question of separation the defendant-appellant is concluded by the finding arrived at by the Court below. The plaintiff-respondent ought not, however, to have been allowed any costs in excess of the portion of the claim decreed.

We dismiss Appeals Nos. 101 of 1913 and 106 of 1914 accordingly with costs and allow Appeal No 100 of 1913, so as to confine the decree of the Court below in regard to costs proportionate to the amount of the costs payable to the plaintiff in regard to the claims decreed by the Court below. The plaintiff-respondent in appeal last mentioned will bear his own costs. The defendant-appellant will under the circumstances, bear his own costs in all the appeals throughout.

Appeal allowed.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110, O XLV,
r. 3 (1)—Appeal to Privy Council—Leave—Lower Court's decree only modified by High Court—Value above ten thousand rupees—Substantial question of law
—Misconstruction of part of evidence.*

Where, as regards the subject-matter of a proposed appeal to Privy Council, a High Court has affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance (though it has made some modifications in the decree as regards another portion of the claim), it is essential for the grant of a certificate of leave to appeal to the Privy Council (even if the value of the subject-matter of the proposed appeal is above ten thousand rupees) that the appeal must involve some substantial question of law. [p. 373, col. 1.]

Misconstruction of a portion of the evidence relating to particular facts cannot be treated as a "substantial question of law" within the meaning of section 110, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 373, col. 2.]

Ravi Veeravagharulu v. Bomma Devara Venkata, 25 Ind. Cas. 305; 16 M. L. T. 262; (1914) M. W. N. 695; 1 L. W. 779; 27 M. L. J. 451; 20 C. L. J. 375; 37 M. 443; 19 C. W. N. 97; 16 Bom. L. R. 853, followed.

Gafur Khan v. Secretary of State for India, 23 Ind. Cas. 532; 26 A. 325; 12 A. L. J. 451, distinguished.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue an order for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree of the High Court in Appeal No. 142 of 1910.

FACTS.—Sri Raja Mulraju Lakshmi Venkayamma Rao brought a suit to recover jewels worth about Rs. 1,50,000 from the Estate of Nidadavole, on the ground that most of them had been given to her by the late Papamma Rao of Nidadavole under an oral gift and that some of them were her mother's jewels and also for the recovery of Rs. 16,000 cash, which was deposited with the late Papamma Rao from out of the income of two villages gifted to her absolutely by the late Papamma Rao. Defendants having denied the plaintiff's claim, the Subordinate Judge of Ellore dismissed the whole suit. On appeal the High Court modified the decree by allowing the Rs. 16,000 cash and jewels worth about Rs. 3,800, which were found to belong to plaintiff's mother. With regard to the rest of the plaintiff's claim, the decision of the Subordinate Judge was confirmed.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and P. Nagabhushanam, for the Petitioners, contended (1) that she was entitled to be given leave under the Code, because the decree was not an affirming decree and the value was admittedly more than Rs. 10,000; (2) that there was a substantial question of law relating to the construction of documents.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan and Messrs. T. Prakasam and Purushotham Naidu, for the Respondents, contended (1) that so far as the substantial matter that was sought to be taken in appeal was concerned, it was an affirming judgment and (2) the question of construction of document was not a question of law, when there was other evidence on which the finding was based.

ORDER.—It is argued for the petitioner that as our decree did not affirm the decision of the lower Court, and as the value of the contemplated appeal to the Privy Council is over ten thousand rupees, leave ought to be granted under section 110, Civil Procedure Code, and Order XLV, rule 3 (1).

We see no sufficient reason to dissent from the view of the Calcutta High Court [See Rajah Sreenath Roy v. Secretary of State for India (1)], that where as regards the subject-matter of the proposed appeal, the High Court has affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance (though it made some modifications in that decree in the appellant's favour as regards another portion of the plaintiff's claim) leave to appeal to the Privy Council ought not to be granted unless the proposed appeal involved some substantial question of law (last paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code).

There seems to be no "substantial question" of law involved in the proposed appeal. It is, of course, possible by the expenditure of much ingenuity to formulate in the appeal grounds some questions of law as arising on the facts or on the reasons given for the decisions on certain facts, but the questions so formulated in this case are not "sustainable" questions even taken at their highest. [See Gafur Khan v. Secretary of State (2) as to a "substantial question of law having to be involved."]

The decision in this case does not (in the language of a recent decision) involve any legal question "of general importance," does not affect any large body of persons and does not "threaten the religious or civil rights of any class of the community."

Assuming that in the judgment of this Court, some documents have been misconstrued, the conclusions on the facts are not based on those documents alone or even mainly.

The principle underlying their Lordships' decision in Ravi Veeraraghavulu v. Bomma Devara Venkata (3) seems to me to imply that such misconstruction of a portion of the evidence relating to particular facts cannot be treated as a "substantial" question of law.

We would therefore, refuse the certificate applied for with one set of costs.

Certificate refused.

Under-proprietary right—Nankar, cash, .

MUHAMMAD KHAN v. BECHAN KHAN.

The fact that certain persons are entitled to a cash nankar, does not mean that they possess an under-proprietary right in any land in the village.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 25th February 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Fyzabad, dated the 23rd May 1913.

FACTS.—The defendant-landlord issued a notice of ejectment against the plaintiffs, which they contested on the ground that they were not ordinary but occupancy tenants. The defendant's reply was that the plaintiffs could not, by reason of the second proviso to section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act, set up occupancy rights inasmuch as they were entitled to receive a cash nankar and had, therefore, an under-proprietary right in the village. Thus the main question for determination was whether a right to receive a cash nankar meant an under-proprietary right.

Babu Jiban Krishna Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Babu Sita Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I entirely agree with the Commissioner that the fact that respondents are still entitled to a cash "nankar" does not mean that they possess an under-proprietary right in any land in the village and are so deprived of rights of occupancy in the land which they cultivated or held in 1865.

I also agree with him that the respondents are not entitled to occupancy rights on those lands, which are not shown to have been in their possession at the Settlement before last.

I, therefore, uphold the Commissioner's order and dismiss this appeal with costs.

I also dismiss the cross-objection by respondents.

Appeal—Appellant not entitled to set up in argument fresh story different from that given in the grounds of appeal.

An appellant cannot, at the time of arguing the appeal, be allowed to set up a story different from that alleged in the grounds of appeal. [p. 375, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 17th July 1914, upholding that of the Assistant Commissioner, Gonda, dated the 17th January 1914.

FACTS.—The plaintiff contested a notice of ejectment on the ground that he was not an ordinary tenant but an under-proprietor of the plots entered in the notice. The Assistant Collector dismissed the plaintiff's suit as he could not establish his claim to under-proprietary rights. When the case came up in appeal before the Commissioner, he ordered the plaintiff to file the under-proprietary khewat of the village and the date of hearing was adjourned. When the appeal again came up for hearing on the adjourned date, the Commissioner dismissed it, stating in his judgment that the plaintiff failed to produce the required khewat, though he filed some other khewat which did not show to which year it referred. A further appeal was filed before the Board of Revenue and the first ground of appeal ran thus:—“(1) Because the lower Appellate Court has erred in holding that the document produced by the appellant is not the one he was required to produce by order dated 15th May 1914.” But in argument it was contended that the plaintiff had really produced the under-proprietary khewat before the Commissioner, but that it had by mistake been filed in another case.

Mr. P. N. Rozdon, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Nath Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant now urges that he did, as a matter of fact, produce the under-proprietary khewat which he was directed to produce by the Commissioner's order of 15th May 1914 and that it was filed in another case.

This allegation is not what is made in the grounds of appeal. I cannot allow the appellant to go beyond his grounds and change his story in this way.

JDDGMENT.—The Commissioner has found as a definite fact that the identity of the land in the present suit with that in the previous decisions is not established. Where the grant of a village is described in various documents as a rent-free grant to a temple, the presumption is of a grant of the whole village and the existence of "minor inams" in the village will not affect that presumption unless it is proved that the grant was only of the revenue of a portion of the land in the village. [p. 376, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the inamdar grantee was not the owner of the kudivaram at the time of the grant, the subject of grant is an estate within the meaning of clause (d) of section 3 of the Madras Estates Land Act. [p. 376, col. 2.]

A Receiver having the power of letting tenants into possession of lands in an estate is a "land-holder" within the meaning of section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act. It is not necessary that the land-holder should also be a beneficial owner of the estate. [p. 376, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the temporary Subordinate Judge of Ellore, in Original Suit No. 33 of 1913.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff, the Receiver of the Nidadaval Estate sues to recover possession of certain lands let to the defendant in Fasli 1320 together with mesne profits. His case is that the letting was for one year, and that the defendant is holding over after the expiry of the term. The defendant pleads that he has acquired the occupancy right to these lands under section 6 of the Estates Land Act. The lower Court has dismissed the suit, and the plaintiff appeals.

The principal question which arises for determination in the appeal is whether Venkatapuram Agraharam in which the suit lands are situate is an estate within the meaning of section 3, sub-section 2, clause (d) of the Estates Land Act. Venkatapuram Agraharam is an inam village belonging to Bala Venkateswara Swami and the grant seems to have been made by a former zemindar of Nuzvid. The plaintiff sues as trustee of the temple. The Venkatapuram Agraharam is described in the various documents filed in the case as the sarva or rent-free Agraharam of Sri Bala Venkateswara Swami, and this description occurs from the earliest times. (See Exhibit H, the jamabandi account for fasli 1268.) This would obviously mean that the whole village of Venkatapuram belonged to the temple as inam. However, there are certain minor inams in this village which appear to be of three classes; one class of inams being archaka service inams, the other class being village service inams, and the third dharma dhaya inams. It does not appear whether the grant to the temple of the village was made first or whether the minor inams were granted first.

GOPISETTI NARAYANASWAMI v. NALAM SUBRAHMANYAM.

The appellant contends that inasmuch as there are these minor inams in the same village it could not be said that the Venkatapuram Agraharam is a village of which the land revenue has been granted as inam, within the meaning of section 3 clause (2) (d) of the Act, his contention being that inasmuch as the land revenue on some of the lands in the village had been granted as inam to third parties, it cannot be said that the temple is the grantee of the revenue of that village. We are unable to agree in this contention. The definition in sub-section 2, clause (d), was obviously intended to exclude from the definition of "estate" what are known as "minor, inam" namely, particular extents of lands in a particular village as contrasted with the grant of the whole village by its boundaries. The latter are known as "whole inam villages."

The existence of 'minor inams' in whole inam villages is very common and if these inam villages do not come within the definition of "estate" almost all Agraharam, Shrotriem and Mokhasa villages will be excluded. This certainly cannot have been the intention of the Legislature. These minor inams are generally granted for services to be rendered to the village or to the owner. That seems to be the nature of the minor inams in this case. In all the documents the temple is described as the owner of the whole village and in these circumstances the burden is upon the plaintiff to show that the grant was only of the revenue of a portion of the lands in the village, and he has not put in evidence the inam register which would have supported his case if true. We disallow this contention.

It is next contended that it is not shown that the inamdar, that is the temple, was not the owner of the kudicaram at the time of the grant, which again would take the case out of the definition of an estate. The evidence which is discussed in paragraphs 15 to 17 of the lower Court's judgment shows clearly that the inamdar, namely, the temple was not the owner of the kudicaram at the time of the grant. We, therefore, hold that the Venkatapuram Agraharam of which Sri Bala Venkateswaraswami is the inamdar or the Agraharamdar is an estate within the meaning of clause (d) of sub-section 2 of section 3 of the Estates Land Act.

Mr. P. Nagabushanam, for the appellant, also argued that the suit lands are not 'ryoti lands' but are 'old waste'. In the muchilika, Exhibit B, executed by the defendant, these lands are described as 'jeroyti lands' and in Exhibit IX, a previous lease of the same lands, they are described as 'mamool wet'. We hold, therefore, that these lands are not proved to be 'old waste'; but are 'ryoti lands'.

The appellant finally contended that the Receiver is not a land-holder within the meaning of section 6 of the Act. It is admitted that the definition of 'land-holder' in section 3 includes the plaintiff. But it is said that unless the land-holder is also a beneficial owner of the estate, he is not a land-holder within the meaning of section 6. We do not see any reason to put any such restricted construction on the word 'land-holder' in that section. A Receiver must have the same powers of management as an owner, and letting a tenant into possession of cultivable lands in the estate would ordinarily be included in the power of management. We agree in the conclusions of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 98—Anomalous mortgage—Mortgages, simple and usufructuary, combination of—Redemption, right of—Possession, mortgagee's claim for.

Under the terms of a mortgage-deed, if the interest for four six-monthly instalments was not paid in full or if the entire amount due on the mortgage was not satisfied on a certain specified date, the mortgagee was to be given possession over the mortgaged property for a certain fixed term and redemption was not to take place until the mortgagee had remained in possession for that term. The mortgagor having occasionally paid something towards interest, but not having satisfied the entire amount on the specified date as agreed upon, the mortgagee brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor contended that the mortgage was not an anomalous mortgage and that the suit for possession was, therefore, not maintainable; that under the terms of the deed the only remedy open to the mortgagee was to sue for the amount due to date under the terms of the mortgage, and that a decree should be passed awarding possession in lieu of the payment of the amount due by the mortgagor within the specified time:

Held, that the mortgage was not an anomalous mortgage as defined in section 93 of the Transfer of Property Act, but was a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage, so that the rights and liabilities of the parties were not to be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage-deed. [p. 378, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the mortgagor could not obtain a right of redemption, which would have the effect of defeating the mortgagee's claim for possession, by obtaining a decree stating the amount which would have to be paid as a condition precedent to redemption, inasmuch as he had legally no right to redeem otherwise than what he had agreed upon under the terms of the mortgage-deed. [p. 378, col. 1.]

Held, lastly, that the decree for possession would not affect any right of redemption exercised in the manner provided by law before the delivery of possession. [p. 379, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, dated the 17th September 1914.

Mr. J. Jackson and Pandit Suraj Narain Dikshit, for the Appellant, Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Ishri Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Muhammad Sher Khan executed on the 9th June 1908 a deed of mortgage in favour of Raja Seth Raghubar Dayal for a consideration of Rs. 82,000. Under the terms of the deed interest was to be charged at $7\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. With six-monthly rests and the total amount of principal and interest was to become due on the 18th June 1913. If the interest for four six-monthly instalments was not paid in full or if the entire amount were not satisfied on the 18th June 1913, the mortgagee was to be given possession over the mortgaged property for 12 years and redemption was not to take place until the mortgagee had been in possession for the latter term. The mortgagor paid Rs. 7,060 towards interest on the 19th June 1910 and Rs. 8,000 towards interest on the 10th of June 1911.

Raja Seth Raghubar Dayal having died on the 26th March 1911, his son, Raja Seth Swami Dayal, instituted a suit on the 13th June 1913 for possession of the mortgaged property. The suit was resisted on various grounds but was decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

In the present appeal it has been argued that the mortgage is not an anomalous mortgage and that the suit for possession should have been dismissed. The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that under the terms of the deed the only remedy open to the mortgagee was to sue for the amount due to date under the terms of the mortgage and that a decree should have been passed awarding possession in lieu of the payment of the amount due by the mortgagor within the specified time. We find that the mortgage was not an anomalous mortgage as defined in section 93, Act IV of 1882. It is a combination of a simple mortgage and a usufructuary mortgage. It commenced as a simple mortgage, and it was agreed that on the occurrence of a certain event it should become a usufructuary mortgage. It has been held in Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh v. Debi Bakhsh Singh (1) that the existence of a clause in a mortgage-deed postponing the delivery of possession to a future date does not necessarily show that it is, therefore, not a usufructuary mortgage and that an existence in a mortgage-deed of a condition postponing redemption until a certain period has elapsed after the date of the execution cannot convert what would otherwise be a usufructuary mortgage into an anomalous mortgage. It has also been held in Lalta Prasad v. Hori Lal (2) that where a mortgage-deed provided that the mortgage-money with interest at 2 per cent. would be paid in two instalments and in case of non-payment of the first instalment the mortgagee would be entitled to be put in possession of the mortgaged property, taking profits in lieu of interest and in case of failure to deliver possession, the mortgagee would be at liberty to take possession with the help of the Court, the mortgage was not an anomalous mortgage but the combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage, to which section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply.

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 329; 16 O. C. 56.

MUHAMMAD SHER KHAN V. SWAMI DAYAL.

Agreeing with the principles enunciated in these two decisions we find that this is not a case in which the rights and liabilities of the parties would be determined by their contract as evidence in the mortgage-deed. We do not, however, find that the appellant has been able to make out any case for the setting aside or the modification of the decree. There is nothing in the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act which will give him a right to redeem other than the right which he agreed to accept under the terms of the deed. It is not open to him to obtain a right of redemption which would have the effect of defeating the claim for possession by obtaining a decree in this case stating the amount which would have to be paid as a condition precedent to redemption. We are not concerned with the position that might have arisen had he made a tender before he received notice of intention to bring the suit or even had he made a tender after the suit was brought. He has, so far, made no tender although he has continued to assert his desire to deposit what may be found to be due. A case came before the Judicial Commissioner last year in which the facts are not dissimilar to those in the present case. That was the unreported case of Bhimma Singh v. Puttu Lal (3). In that case a suit had been brought on a mortgage for possession of the mortgaged property. The deed provided for payment of the mortgage-money within a period of three years. In case of default the mortgagee was entitled to take possession and hold the land for a term of ten years. In that case the tender of the mortgage-money was made by the mortgagors after the period of three years had expired, although the amount tendered was not the full amount due under the provisions of the deed and in consequence the tender was both inadequate and beyond time. The learned Judicial Commissioner stated :— "The mortgage, therefore, as it now stands, must be treated as a deed of usufructuary mortgage, and I am unable to see on what ground the mortgagors can resist the mortgagee's claim for possession. It is not sufficient to point out that hardship is involved in the mortgagors having to surrender possession of this property for a period of ten years to the mortgagee. I take it that the mortgagors entered into this contract with their eyes open and I fail to see on what ground they can be relieved of their bargain."

These remarks have application to the present case. We agree with the conclusion of the learned Judicial Commissioner in that appeal. Granting that the mortgagor in this case has the right to assert that the deed is not an anomalous mortgage and that his position in meeting a claim for possession of the mortgaged property is the position of a mortgagor in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, we are unable to find any authority for the proposition that on the breach of conditions, which they proved to exist, the mortgagee can be defeated in his claim for possession while the mortgage subsists.

There were other points raised in the grounds of appeal, but none of those were referred to in argument and the learned Counsel stated that he withdrew all pleas other than those which we have decided.

A Court of Appeal should not entertain an appeal without its being stamped with a Court-fee calculated upon the valuation arrived at by the subordinate Court. [p. 379, col. 2.]

Order XII, rule 23, is subject to the general principle that no order for amendment of a plaint should be passed where it would deprive a party of a substantial right or privilege or otherwise prejudice a party. [p. 379, col. 2; p. 380, col. 1.]

Where but for an amendment a plaintiff's suit should fail and a fresh suit would be barred, the defendant acquires a substantial right and it would be unfair at an appellate stage to order an amendment of the plaint and deprive him of that right. [p. 380, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of Purneah, dated the 18th of January 1915, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge of Purneah, dated the 8th of August 1914, and remanding the case to his Court for admitting the plaint and proceeding with the trial.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is by the defendant in a suit in which the plaintiff sued the principal defendants for a declaration of his title by adverse possession and for confirmation of possession.

It was the plaintiff's case that a cloud was thrown upon his title by an entry in the Record of Rights in favour of the principal defendants. The suit was lodged in the first instance before a Munsif. Upon an objection made by the defendants, the Munsif made an inquiry into the valuation of the property, and coming to the conclusion that the value was Rs. 3,000 he returned the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to a proper Court. The plaintiff then filed the plaint before the Subordinate Judge with a Court-fee of Rs. 17-8. Valuing the relief for confirmation of possession at Rs. 100, he paid Rs. 7-8 as stamp-fee for that relief and for the relief in respect of the declaration he paid a fee of Rs. 10. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the plaint was insufficiently stamped and that the proper fee payable was on a valuation of Rs. 3,000. As the plaintiff failed to pay the full fee the Subordinate Judge rejected the plaint. There was an appeal against that order before the District Judge. The District Judge, while agreeing with the Subordinate Judge that the proper fee payable was upon a valuation of Rs. 3,000, allowed the plaintiff to strike out his prayer for confirmation of possession and convert the suit into one for mere declaration of title upon which a fee of Rs. 10 was sufficient. So, holding that the plaint was sufficiently stamped as amended he set aside the Subordinate Judge's order rejecting the plaint and directed the suit to be tried. Against that order the defendant now files the present appeal.

The first defect that we have to notice in the learned District Judge's proceedings is that he should not have entertained the appeal before him without a stamp-fee calculated upon the valuation which had been arrived at by the Subordinate Judge.

The second and main defect is that by allowing the plaintiff at the appellate stage to amend the plaint, he has seriously prejudiced the defendant. The learned District Judge relies upon Order XII, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, in justification of the amendment; but that rule is subject to general principle that no order for amendment can be passed where it deprives a party of a substantial right or privilege or otherwise prejudice a party. In the present case a fresh declaratory suit would under Article 120 of the Limitation Act be admittedly barred. The defendant, therefore, has acquired a substantial right and it is manifestly unfair at the appellate stage to order an amendment of the plaint and deprive him of that right. The order of amendment, therefore, was, in our opinion, wrong.

In these circumstances, the appeal must succeed, the order of the learned District Judge is set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs in all Courts. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

“(1) That the Commissioner is wrong in holding that there is no proof of the thoks being equal either in area or value.

“(2) That in view of the concurrent findings of fact by the lower Courts he had no right to arrive at that finding.

“(3) That he overlooked the provisions of section 117 of the Land Revenue Act.”

As to (1), on appellant's own admission the Commissioner was perfectly right. Appellant admits that before partition the thoks were not equal in area. As to (2) the Assistant Collector came to no definite finding on this point and even if he had, he had no evidence to support it. As to (3) there is a definite agreement in the wajib-ul-arz that at partition the thoks should not be altered and that the shamilat land should be divided according to shares. Appeal should, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

One appellant has, however, died, and before passing final orders I adjourn the case for a month that any of the appellants or respondents or the deceased person's heirs who may wish to bring his heirs on the record as parties may make the necessary application. If at the expiry of a month, no such application is made, I will pass final orders without calling on parties again.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question before the learned District Judge was whether petitioner's application for the appointment of a Commissioner to work out the shares recoverable under a compromise decree for partition was an application for execution thereof or whether, the decree being merely preliminary, the application was a step in the suit and was not barred by any limitation.

As we shall decide for the latter alternative, we dismiss Appeal against Order No. 162 of 1914 and pass our decision on Civil Revision Petition No. 344 of 1914.

The provisions of the compromise are in every respect appropriate to a preliminary partition decree, such as is contemplated in Latchman Chetty v. Ramanathan Chetty (1) and Appadu v. Venkata Ranga Rau (2), and these two cases show that such an order, as petitioner asked for, could have been made by the lower Court at any time of its own motion, as a step in the disposal of the suit, and that there could be no question of any bar of limitation in connection with the application for it. The argument to the contrary is supported by reference only to cases in which applications for an order for sale in connection with preliminary mortgage-decrees were in question, [Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (3) and Avula Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghavulu (4)] and we do not think that they are in point nor can be applied generally to preliminary decrees of every description.

In these circumstances, we set aside the learned Judge's order and remand the case for re-admission and disposal in the light of the foregoing with reference to Order XXV, rules 13 and 14, Civil Procedure Code. Costs in the lower Court and here to date will be provided for in the lower Court's final decree. There will be no order as to costs in the appeal against order.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree on the question whether an appeal would lie, because the lower Court chose to treat the petition as a petition in execution. I respectfully dissent from the decision in Latchman Chetty v. Ramanathan Chetty (1). Suppose a Court chooses to pass a decree for possession of a house in a suit filed on its Small Cause side for recovery of money, and which suit is undoubtedly within its Small Cause jurisdiction, I do not think that an appeal will lie from such a decree and the proper remedy, I think, should be sought by revision under section 115 of the Civil Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Appellant.

Chaudhri Ram Bharose Lal, for the Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a mortgage suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant to enforce a simple mortgage which was executed on the 11th October 1907 by one Ganga Narain. Ganga Narain was the father of the first and second defendants and the grandfather of the third and fourth defendants. The fifth defendant was the mortgagee and in the fourth paragraph of the plaint it was stated that he had transferred his interest under the mortgage to the present plaintiff on the 17th July 1913. The relief which was asked for in the plaint was that the money due on the mortgage might be realized by sale of the mortgaged property. The defence which was set up was to the effect that the property mortgaged was joint ancestral property belonging to the family of which Ganga Narain, the mortgagor, was a member. It was pleaded that Ganga Narain had no right to make a mortgage of this property. The defendants further pleaded that they were in possession of the property now by right of survivorship and were not the heirs of Ganga Narain. They pleaded, therefore, that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the property brought to sale. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim. The Munsif pointed out that there was no allegation in the plaint to the effect that the mortgage had been executed for legal necessity or for any other purposes which would be binding on the joint family property. Some attempt was made on the part of the plaintiff to produce evidence to show the purposes for which the money was borrowed but this evidence was discredited by the Munsif. The Munsif, therefore, held that as no legal necessity had been proved the property could not be brought to sale, nor could the surviving members of the joint family be made personally liable. He further stated in his judgment that as the plaintiff failed to ask for a personal decree he was unable to give him a decree of that kind. At the same time he was doubtful as to whether in the circumstances disclosed any personal decree could be given. The plaintiff went in appeal to the District Judge, where he pleaded first of all that he was a bona fide purchaser of the mortgagee rights from the fifth defendant, that the deed had been executed for purposes which were binding on the joint family and he claimed in any case that he was entitled to a simple money-decree. The learned Judge dismissed the appeal. He held that the plaintiff having failed to ask for a personal decree in the Court of first instance was not entitled to make that demand in appeal. He further pointed out that there being no proof that the execution of the deed had been made for any legal necessity, the property could not be made liable for sale under the mortgage. In appeal here it has been contended that the plaintiff was entitled to a personal decree. I think this contention cannot be allowed. The facts being as stated above it was incumbent upon the plaintiff, who asked in his plaint for realization of the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property, to prove that the sons and the grandsons of the original mortgagor were liable to discharge the debt and that the property in their hands was affected by the mortgage, so as to render it liable to sale. It is well understood now that the mortgagee in a case like this cannot get a mortgage decree for sale unless he proves that the money was borrowed for purposes which are binding on the joint family. There was no allegation to this effect in the plaint and there was, as the Munsif found, no proof of any such fact. To allow the plaintiff a personal decree against these defendants now would amount to giving him indirectly what he cannot obtain directly, for in execution of a personal decree against these defendants he would be entitled to bring the property in their hands to sale, and as it has not been shown that the money was borrowed for any purpose which would bind the family or its property, in my opinion it cannot be said that there is any right to a personal decree. I think the judgment of the Court below is perfectly correct. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Misappropriation by deceased—Receiver—Property in hands of his legal representatives, liability of—Execution—Procedure—Supreme Court Rules, O. L, rr. 15 (a) to 24.

Under Order XL, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code the proper procedure to bring to sale the properties of a deceased Receiver in the hands of his legal representatives is by way of execution and not by a separate suit. [p. 384, col. 1.]

The word "property" in Order XL, rule 4, and in the other clauses of the section is synonymous with estate and covers income from the property. [p. 384, col. 1.]

Order XL, rule 4, is a residuary provision intended to deal with all cases of loss to the estate not specially provided for and, therefore, applies to a case of misappropriation also. [p. 384, col. 1.]

IN C. R. P. No. 269 OF 1914.

Messrs. P. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar and T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—One Raman Nair brought a suit against the present appellant to remove him from the karnavanship. The first Court directed his removal. Pending the disposal of the appeal against the decree the said Raman Nair was appointed Receiver of the tarwad properties and he gave security for the proper management. The appeal was decided in favour of the karnavan in February 1913. Raman Nair, the Receiver, died in April 1913. The present application is by the successful karnavan for an order that the properties of the deceased Receiver in the hands of the respondents should be held liable for moneys misappropriated by him. The Subordinate Judge held that although an application of this kind might be entertained against the Receiver if he were alive, it is incompetent against his legal representatives and the proper procedure is to sue the latter in a regular suit. We think this order is wrong.

LEKHA SINGH v. BODIL SINGH.

Order XL, rule 4, provides that where a Receiver had occasioned loss to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence, the Court may direct his property to be attached and sold. Mr. Rosario raises two objections to the applicability of this clause. He contends that the word "property" only refers to what was actually entrusted to the Receiver and not the income derived therefrom. We are unable to agree with him. Property in this and in the other clauses of the section is synonymous with estate. In most cases it is for the collection of the income that Receiver is appointed. We are of opinion that the income from a property entrusted to the charge of a Receiver is covered by the word.

The learned Vakil also urges that by misappropriating the income it cannot be said that the Receiver committed wilful default or negligence. The clause is not very happily phrased. It is a residuary provision and is intended to deal with all cases of loss to the estate not specially provided for. One cannot say that a man who uses for his own benefit the money entrusted to him does not occasion loss by his wilful default. We must overrule this objection also.

The far more serious objection raised was that in a summary proceeding, the legal representatives should not be proceeded against. There is no question of the respondents being executors under the Will of the deceased. They are the original legal representatives of the deceased. The provision in rule 4 is that the property of the Receiver should be attached and sold. It does not necessarily involve the conclusion that the Receiver is alive. In section 50, clause (2) of the Code, where a provision is made for executing the decree against the legal representatives the language employed is "that the property of the deceased in his hand should be liable." We think that the Legislature has advisedly rendered the property liable in Order XL in order that execution may be levied against it in the hands of the legal representatives. If a suit has to be instituted, the same representatives would have to be impleaded as being in possession of the assets of deceased and we see no reason why the question which can be decided in a suit should not be disposed of in the execution application. Mr. Rosario drew our attention to the cases reported as Jenkins v. Briant (1) and Ludgater v. Channell (2), in which it was held that the legal representatives of the defaulting Receiver should not be held liable in summary proceedings. In Order L, rules 15 (a) to 24 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, there is no provision directing the recovery of the money against the estate of the Receiver as we have in Order XL of our Code. We do not think that the cases cited affect the specific provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. We agree with the learned Vakil that section 145 has no application. It contemplates proceedings against a third party who has given an undertaking for the due discharge of the obligations resting upon a party to the suit. The Receiver is not in that position. We think that provisions of rule 4, Order XL, are comprehensive enough to enable execution being had against the legal representatives of the deceased Receiver. We cannot accede to the contention that as the Receiver is an officer of the Court the respondents cannot be his legal representatives. In giving an undertaking to properly manage and in furnishing security in that behalf, he is rendering himself, and is, personally liable and in that capacity the respondents are his legal representatives.

For these reasons we must reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct him to dispose of the petition. Costs will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—In this case some issues were remitted to the Court below for trial by our order dated the 22nd December 1914. The learned Subordinate Judge found that Tikam Singh, one of the arbitrators, was not present at the first sitting when some of the witnesses were examined, that the examination of the witnesses was not conducted in the presence of the parties and that, though the substance of the evidence taken by the arbitrators present at that sitting was communicated to Tikam Singh, the parties were given no opportunity to be present when that evidence was communicated. He also found that the defendants had not agreed to dispense with the presence of Tikam Singh and that they were materially prejudiced by the manner in which the proceedings were conducted.

It appears from the evidence of the arbitrators examined in this case, that the first sitting of the arbitrators took place on the 11th July 1914 at Maupore, where all the arbitrators, except Tikam Singh, had assembled. There is no reliable evidence to show that the parties had agreed to dispense with the presence of Tikam Singh at that sitting on account of his old age. He was appointed by the parties as a sarpanch or head arbitrator, and his presence at the time when the evidence was heard was absolutely essential. It is true that no oral evidence was adduced by the parties at that sitting, but it is not disputed that some witnesses were examined by the arbitrators at the time of their own motion, and two documents, purporting to be bonds or mortgage-deeds in which Maharaj Singh was described as an adopted son of Nandan Singh, were read. It appears from the evidence of Shao Bakhsh Singh, Chatter Singh and Gajra Singh that the above witnesses were not examined in the presence of the parties and that the parties had no opportunity to cross-examine them or elicit facts for which the other side was contending. The next sitting of the arbitrators took place at Rasulpore on 13th July 1914 at the house of Tikam Singh. Whatever was done there was done in the absence of the parties, who had no opportunity to prosecute their cases in the presence of Tikam Singh before the final decision was arrived at. The award cannot, therefore, be sustained [Benode Lal Pakrasi v. Pran Chandra Pakrasi (1) and Nga Hla Gyaw v. Mi Ya Po (2)]. The arbitrators were unquestionably prompted by the best motives and dispensed with the presence of Tikam Singh at the first sitting in consideration of his old age and infirmity. But they acted improperly in taking evidence in absence of the parties, in communicating the substance of that evidence to Tikam Singh and obtaining his opinion on merits of the case without giving the parties an opportunity of presenting their respective cases before all the arbitrators.

We see no reason, therefore, to interfere with the order passed by the Court below and dismiss the appeal, but under the circumstances direct each party to bear his own costs throughout.

Under section 203 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882) the Court can sanction only a bona fide and workable scheme. [p. 387, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Tinnevely, dated the 21st of February 1913, in Original Petition No. 116 of 1911.

Petition proposing a scheme for the conduct of the Company involved in the said Appeal against Order No. 101 of 1913.

Petition praying that in the circumstances the High Court will be pleased to sanction the said scheme and stay the winding-up of the Company.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. D. Devadoss, A. Sundaram, K. Pandalai and Messrs. King and Partridge, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Ayling and Hannay, JJ., ordered the appeal against the winding-up order to be dismissed unless a scheme for the payment of creditors was put forward in six weeks' time. This was not done, but when the case came on in March of this year before Ayling and Tyabji, JJ., the 3rd respondent consented to the case being adjourned to allow of meeting of creditors and share-holders to approve a scheme. The meetings were held and a scheme approved, which came on for approval under section 203 of the Companies Act of 1882 before this Court, before which the appeal against the winding-up order is pending. On the materials before us we are not satisfied that the scheme was a bona fide or workable one, and we adjourned the case till after the vacation to enable the appellants to show that they were in a position to finance the scheme proposed by them. After a careful consideration of the case we have come to the conclusion that the scheme should not be approved. The mills were acquired in 1909 for a price of over two lakhs. They worked for six months and were then closed in consequence of the mortgagee refusing to advance more money. According to the evidence of the Managing Director it would have required Rs. 1,000 a month to keep the machinery in proper order, but no such expenditure has been incurred for the last three years. It is, therefore, clear that the machinery must have most seriously deteriorated, even if we do not accept the affidavit of the 3rd respondent that it is only of the value of scrap iron. When the winding-up order was made in February 1913, various debts and establishment charges had not been paid although there was and still is Rs. 1,40,000 of uncalled capital. Nothing was done to meet the claims of creditors until the present scheme was put forward this year to give them, in full satisfaction, second debentures payable in five years which must, of course, be postponed to the rights of the mortgagee whose claim now amounts to more than four lakhs, against which this Company have a counter-claim against him for refusing to advance more money. In these circumstances the Company now comes forward with three affidavits from persons who profess to be willing, if the order is set aside and the scheme approved, to advance each Rs. 15,000 on terms to be hereafter agreed upon between themselves and the Company. We cannot regard this as a serious offer, as it does not appear how in the circumstances of the present Company, any business man could be willing to make such an advance subject to the claim of the mortgagee and of the existing unsecured creditors pursuant to the scheme we are asked to approve. We cannot attach any weight to the statements of the Manager in his affidavit about other lenders who have not filed affidavits. No serious attempt has been made to show that the sum of Rs. 45,000, even if available, would be sufficient to enable the Company to re-open and carry on their business. It is noteworthy that the only suggestion put before us is to carry on with borrowed money and that nothing has been said about the practicability of calling up the unpaid capital of the Company, a circumstance which we consider highly significant.

GANGA DIN SHUKUL v. KRISHNA PRASAD SINGH.

As regards the creditors who support the scheme, we do not attach much importance to their opinion as they are mostly not business men and some of them are interested in opposing the winding-up order which would make them liable for calls. Messrs. Burn and Company's opinion would be entitled to great weight from a business standpoint, but they have not only got back their machinery but are to receive Rs. 1,500 down under the scheme, and it is, therefore, natural they should refrain from opposing it. On the whole we have come to the conclusion that the proposed scheme put forward at the very late stage is not a bona fide or a workable one and we accordingly refuse to sanction it and dismiss the appeal with costs of the 3rd respondent.

Appeal, second—Amendment of plaint, if allowed.

A Court of second appeal cannot order amendment of a plaint, specially when the plaintiff has not asked for it in both the lower Courts and such amendment, if allowed, would mean the trial of the case de novo. [p. 388, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jullundur, dated the 10th March 1914, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Jullundur, dated the 23rd July 1913, decreeing the claim in part.

Mr. Fazal-i Hussain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Monohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing arguments on both sides I have no hesitation in holding that the view taken by the lower Courts is correct and there is no sufficient reason for interfering with the decree of the learned Divisional Judge in second appeal. The plaint shows that the claim put forward by the plaintiff, which was referred to the decision of the arbitration, did not include a prayer for possession of any part of the yellow house. Further, it is to be noted that the appellant did not, either in the GAJADHAR LAL v. GULABA.

Court of first instance or in the Divisional Court, apply for the amendment of the plaint and it is manifest that a Court of second appeal cannot accede to a request of that kind which was never made in the Courts below and which, if accepted, would mean the trial of the case de novo.

It appears that according to the award, the plaintiff cannot recover one-half of the yellow house without paying his share of the costs of the improvements effected by the defendant. It is, therefore, clear that an amendment of the plaint, if allowed at this late stage, would involve a trial of the issue as to compensation, and, in view of what the learned Divisional Judge has said about the conduct of the appellant, I do not think he is entitled to any indulgence. I must, therefore, affirm the decree appealed against and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Syed Zahur Ahmad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for foreclosure on foot of a mortgage effected by Musammatt Puna in favour of Musammatt Gulaba on the 26th November 1908. The mortgage purported to have been made to satisfy a decree held by Sat Narain against Musammatt Puna and Kalidin. Kalidin attested the mortgage-deed. The main question for consideration in the appeal is whether Kalidin is estopped by reason of the attestation from setting up the invalidity of the mortgage.

It appears that the mortgaged property belonged to a joint family comprising Dhonkal, the husband of Musamma Puna, and Kalidin, his nephew. On the death of Dhonkal the name of Musammatt Puna was entered in the revenue papers though according to the Hindu Law Kalidin was the sole proprietor of the entire estate. Kalidin nevertheless allowed Musammatt Puna to represent herself as the owner of the grove in suit and on the strength of that representation to obtain a loan of Rs. 82 from Musammatt Gulaba. The lower Appellate Court has found that the loan was taken to pay a joint debt due by Musammatt Puna and Kalidin and under the circumstances the case falls within the purview of section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act. Kalidin attested the mortgage after its contents were read over to him, and, as observed in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (1) and Wazir Mohammad v. Har Prasad (2), having deliberately allowed Musammatt Puna to hold herself out as the owner of the grove and attested the mortgage-deed in proof of his consent, he cannot be allowed to resile from that position and deprive the mortgagee of the money she had advanced on the faith of that representation. The defendants-appellants claim to be prior mortgagees of the property mortgaged under a deed dated the 6th November 1899. But the execution of that deed was not proved in the opinion of the Court below by any reliable evidence and in view of the fact that the deed was unregistered while that in favour of the plaintiff-respondent was registered no priority can be claimed in respect of the former. Musammatt Puna had been served in this case at the original hearing of the appeal before an issue was remitted to the lower Appellate Court. She did not then appear and no further service on her is, therefore, necessary.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. The time for payment of the mortgage-money is extended till the 9th September 1915.

Mortgage—Joint estate—Mortgage by all joint-holders severally—Redemption by one joint-holder of all land mortgaged by all joint owners severally—Objection by one joint owner's widow—Priority of right of redemption—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 91.

In a joint holding, where each co-sharer has mortgaged his specific share separately, though technically each has an interest in every inch of the joint estate, its joint character may be regarded as in a state of suspension till the respective mortgages have been redeemed.

The interest contemplated by section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act is an interest derived directly or indirectly from the mortgagor since the making of the mortgage.

A mortgagor or his heir in possession has the preferential right to redeem the mortgage over the other joint owners of the estate who are merely reversioners.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Jullundur Division at Ludhiana, dated the 13th May 1912, modifying that of the Munsif, first Class, Jullundhur, dated the 17th January 1912, decreeing the claim in part.

Lala Ganga Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nehal Chand Mehra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The land in dispute was comprised in one joint estate owned by three brothers.

Though the estate was and still is joint, each brother appears to have dealt in practice with specific portions as his own share, for each one effected separate mortgages.

The present contest is now between the one surviving brother and the widow of another brother.

The plaintiff has been given a decree for the redemption of the areas mortgaged by himself and of those mortgaged by his deceased brother, Waryama, but the object of this second appeal is to secure a decree for redemption of the areas mortgaged by Mihan Singh, the third brother, and by his widow, Musammatt Partapi, who is in possession on the usual widow's tenure of her late husband's share.

She resists the plaintiff's claim and contends that it is brought merely to molest her.

The question for decision is whether the plaintiff merely by reason of the fact that he is a co-sharer in the joint holding has a right to redeem against the wishes of the mortgagor, who admittedly had a prior right to redeem?

No authority in point has been cited before us, but it has been urged that section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act confers the right to redeem on any person holding an interest in the property mortgaged.

The interest contemplated by the section, however, must be an interest derived directly or indirectly from the mortgagor since the time of the making of the mortgage.

Moreover, though technically the plaintiff has an interest in every inch of the joint estate, it is clear from the manner in which the brothers have treated the estate that in fact its joint character may be regarded as in a state of suspension, at any rate till the mortgages have been redeemed.

The appellant has not established his right to the relief prayed for and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Bombay District Municipalities Act (III of 1901), ss. 46, 167,—Duty and power to dismiss officers and servants of Municipality—Dismissal of Secretary—Act done "in pursuance of" the Act—Suit for damages for wrongful dismissal barred if instituted more than six months after dismissal.

As section 46 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act and the statutory rules made thereunder impose the duty and confer the power upon a Municipality to dismiss its officers and servants in proper cases, a dismissal of its Secretary by a Municipality is an act done in pursuance of the Act within the meaning of section 167 and a suit claiming damages for such dismissal on the footing of its being a wrongful dismissal is barred if instituted more than six months after the date of dismissal. [p. 391, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order passed by the District Judge of Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 328 of 1913, reversing the decree passed by, and remanding the suit to, the Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri, in Civil Suit No. 74 of 1913.

Mr. D. A. Khare, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. K. Parekh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—This was a suit filed by the plaintiff, who was formerly the Municipal Secretary of the Ratnagiri Municipality, against that Municipality, claiming damages for wrongful dismissal. The learned Assistant Judge held that the suit was barred by limitation under the provisions of section 167 of the District Municipalities Act. That section provides that:—

"No suit shall be commenced against any Municipality...for anything done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance of this Act, without giving to such Municipality... one month's previous notice in writing of the intended suit and of the cause thereof, nor after six months from the date of the act complained of."

The suit was instituted more than six months after the dismissal of the plaintiff by the Municipality, and the question raised in the preliminary issue was whether the dismissal was something done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance of the Act. The learned Assistant Judge held that it was done in pursuance of the District Municipalities Act, and that, therefore, the suit was out of time.

On appeal to the District Judge that decision was reversed and the case was remanded for hearing on the merits. The learned District Judge said:

"I hold that section 167 of the District Municipalities Act does not cover this case. That section is applicable in cases relating to anything done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance of the Act. The test to be applied is not the nature of the suit or the subject-matter, but whether the cause of action was or was not connected with the exercise of the statutory powers conferred upon the Municipality. The employment and dismissal of servants are not acts done in pursuance of the Act within the meaning of this section."

We are unable to agree with that decision. Section 46 of the District Municipalities Act (Bom. Act III of 1901) provides that—

"Every Municipality shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the constitution thereof, make and may from time to time alter or rescind rules, but not so as to render them inconsistent with this Act, ... determining ... the staff of officers and servants to be employed by the Municipality and the respective designations, duties... etc., of such officers and servants, ... subject to the provisions of section 184, determining the mode and conditions of appointing, punishing or dismissing any such officer or servant."

Section 2 of the Act provides that all Municipalities constituted and rules made under the repealed District Municipalities Acts of 1873 and 1884 shall, so far as may be, be deemed to have been constituted and made under this Act. Therefore, the rules which were in force at the time of the dismissal, which were rules made under the Act of 1884, must be deemed to have been made in pursuance of the duty cast upon the Municipality under section 46 of the District Municipalities Act of 1901.

Now rule 98 of the Rules of 1884 provides that "the Municipality alone shall have power to appoint, reduce or dismiss the Municipal Secretary," and certain earlier rules, namely, 77 and following rules, prescribe that the Secretary shall be one of the staff of officers to be employed by the Municipality, and define his duties. The Municipality, therefore, have the power and the duty in a proper case to dismiss the Municipal Secretary. That duty is imposed upon them, and that power is given to them by the Act or the statutory rules deemed to be made under the Act. That being so, when they exercised such power by purporting to dismiss this Secretary, that is, in our opinion, an act done or purporting to have been done in pursuance of the Act within the meaning of section 167. It does not appear to us that the decisions referred to in argument, namely, Myers v. Bradford Corporation (1) or Lyles v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation (2), give us any assistance in the decision of the particular question before us. We, therefore, set aside the order of remand, and restore the decree of dismissal passed by the Assistant Judge with costs throughout.

Order reversed.

Will—Evidence—Intention of testator—Proof—Oral evidence; admissibility of—Amendment of plaint.

Oral evidence of a testator's intention is inadmissible but oral evidence is admissible to prove the surrounding circumstances of the testator and the beneficiaries. [p. 392, col. 1.]

A plaint cannot be allowed to be so amended as to set up a totally different title and cause of action. [p. 392, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool, in Appeal Suit No. 276 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Kurnool, in Original Suit No. 375 of 1909.

FACTS of the case appear fully from the judgment,

Dr. Swaminadhan, for the Appellants:—The question is whether the daughter took a limited estate or absolute estate, when the testator says, "I agree that my two daughters and two sons shall take my properties in three shares."

It is against all general principles to send back a case in order to ascertain by oral evidence what the testator meant. Oral evidence as to the intentions of the testator has been let in. The daughter is not a party to the suit. The general principle is that the Will must be construed from the words in the Will and not by oral evidence.

[BAKEWELL, J.—What evidence you have?]

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondent:—The terms of the Will under which the daughter would take would be very cogent evidence.

[BAKEWELL, J.—You did not tender any evidence and how can you give it now?]

In the Munsif's Court, beyond the document none was produced. Paragraph 10 is clear; it says that no oral evidence is necessary. There is nothing to show whether any witnesses have been summoned. The point was taken before the lower Court, but he refused to allow it. The Will also deals with the ancestral property of the testator. The question arises clearly upon the document itself.

[BAKEWELL, J.—You set up a Will and claimed under it. How can you now say that the dispositions are invalid?]

Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (1) shows that the intention is to be determined; but the meaning must be gathered from the surrounding circumstances and it may displace any presumption arising from law. Bhuggobutty Prosonno Sen v. Gooroo Prosonno Sen (2) shows that when the testator's intention is to be considered, both the terms of the Will and the surrounding circumstances ought to be taken. Allgood v Blake (3) shows that the Will must be understood according to the surrounding circumstances. There is no final decision in regard to the construction of the Will.

man Singh (4) it was held by the Judicial Committee that a party is not precluded from questioning the invalid portion of the Will.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's case is founded upon the Will of Papi Reddi, and the plaint alleges that the testator gave only a life-interest to his daughter, and that upon her death the plaintiff took an absolute interest in her share, and prays that his right may be declared and for recovery of property in the possession of the husband of the deceased's daughter. The cause of action is alleged to have arisen on her death.

No evidence was called by either party, and the District Munsif gave judgment upon the construction of the Will. The Subordinate Judge has remanded the case for evidence as to whether the testator intended to give an absolute interest to his daughter or merely a life-interest.

The learned Vakil for the respondent was unable to specify what evidence he wished to adduce, and apparently it is oral evidence of the testator's intention simply. This is clearly inadmissible. Evidence would, no doubt, be admissible as to all the surrounding circumstances of the testator and the beneficiaries, but no such evidence was tendered at the trial of the suit, nor was it a ground of appeal to the lower Appellate Court that the District Munsif improperly refused to take evidence on behalf of the plaintiff: no reason has been given why the parties should be allowed to adduce further evidence, and have a re-trial of the suit. We cannot allow the plaintiff now to amend his plaint, and allege that the Will does not affect the suit property because it is ancestral, and passed to the plaintiff by survivorship; that would be to set up a totally different title and cause of action.

The order of remand must be set aside, and the District Judge of Kurnool will dispose of the appeal on the evidence before him. The appeal is allowed with costs.

A mere entry in a wajib-ul-arz, attested by the asamis but not by the muafidars of the village, that the land is held rent-free, by local custom at the pleasure of the grantor, does not, in the absence of any other evidence to that effect, establish the said custom.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated the 7th May 1914, reversing that of the Deputy Commissioner, Rai Bareli, dated the 1st August 1913, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, Rai Bareli, dated the 13th May 1913.

Babu Hargobind Das, for the Appellant.

Chaudhri Ram Bharose Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Appellant's first point is that the land is liable to resumption as it is held by local custom at the pleasure of the grantor. The only evidence of custom is the wajib-ul-arz which, appellant now points out was attested by the asamis of the village. There is nothing to show that the muafidars themselves attested the wajib-ul-arz, and in the absence of any other evidence of local custom I find that it is not established.

The second point urged is contained in the fourth ground of appeal. The two lower Courts had not come to concurrent findings of fact as to under-proprietary rights and the Commissioner was entitled to do come to a finding on the facts, but in a third appeal his finding of fact cannot be questioned.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 704 OF 1914.

May 4, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier.DHANI SAHU—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
*versus*RAJ MAHAL KUNWARI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.Ex-proprietary right, relinquishment of, effect of.

The effect of the relinquishment of ex-proprietary rights is as if the ex-proprietary rights had never come into existence at all. The person in whose favour the relinquishment of ex-proprietary rights is made cannot subsequently claim those rights.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Gorakhpur.

Mr. A. P. Dube (with him Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal), for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Sheo Dihal made a simple mortgage of a two-annas share in a village in favour of the respondent. Seven years later he made a usufructuary mortgage of nine-pies out of the two-annas shares in favour of the appellant. A few days after this mortgage the mortgagor executed a deed of relinquishment in respect of his ex-proprietary rights in certain plots of land aggregating 18 bighas or so. The first mortgagee brought a suit upon her mortgage impleading the second mortgagee. She obtained a decree, brought the property to sale, and purchased it herself. She obtained formal delivery of possession of the entire 2-annas share. But the appellant declined to give up possession of the 18 bighas odd, the ex-proprietary rights in which had been relinquished by the mortgagor. This is a suit for possession of the nine-pies share including the 18 bighas odd. The first Court decreed the claim for the share but dismissed the claim for possession of the plots. On appeal the Additional District Judge gave the respondent a decree for possession of 9 bighas 6 biswas 5 dhurs and for mesne profits of the same. He dismissed the claim of the respondent as regards the remaining 9 bighas, on the ground that she had failed to prove that the appellant held possession of those 9 bighas. On behalf of the defendant-appellant it is contended that the respondent is not entitled to possession of any portion of the land, in which the mortgagor became entitled to ex-proprietary rights on the making of the usufructuary mortgage, and that the relinquishment of his ex-proprietary rights by the mortgagor operated for the benefit of the appellant only. In my opinion the learned Judge has taken a correct view of this matter. The mortgagor became entitled to ex-proprietary rights but deliberately relinquished them. No one could prevent him from doing so. The result of the relinquishment was to improve the security held by the mortgagees. In the first instance, no doubt, the relinquishment operated more for the benefit of the second mortgagee than for that of the first mortgagee, because it enabled the second mortgagee to obtain actual possession of land which he could not otherwise have obtained; but, in my opinion, when the property was sold in execution of the decree on the first mortgage the purchaser became entitled to proprietary rights in the whole two annas. The ex-proprietary rights had been carved out of the two-annas share by the law but subsequently ceased to exist. To my mind it is as if the ex-proprietary rights had never come into existence at all, and there is no more ground for refusing to give the purchaser possession of these plots than for refusing to give him possession of any other plot included in the usufructuary mortgage. The appeal, therefore, fails. Cross-objections have been filed by the respondent to the effect that the Court should have decreed possession of the entire 18 bighas and mesne profits of the same. I have been referred to a number of rubkars recorded by the first Court. None of them show that the appellant held actual possession of the whole 18 bighas. They show that the parties elected not to give oral evidence and they state the result of an examination of some of the documentary evidence. No attempt has been made to show me that the documentary evidence proves that all the plots specified at the end of the plaint were in fact in possession of the appellant. The District Judge finds that it is not proved that the appellant held possession of all the plots. I accept his finding. The result is that the cross-objections also fail. Both the appeal and the cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

IN COUNCIL—RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 19C, 19-I—Probate—Succession-duty—“Full fees chargeable under the Act,” meaning of—No further fee in second grant—English Law—No new devolution of property, no new succession-duty—Legislature, intention of—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 86—Appeal.

Once a Probate has been granted on payment of succession-duty in accordance with the scale of Court-fee then in force, no further Court-fee can be levied for granting a second Probate in respect of the same estate, if the scale of Court-fee has, in the meantime, been revised and raised. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Section 19-I of the Court Fees Act requires the fee chargeable upon a Probate to be paid before the order for grant of Probate is made: and so what constitutes “the full fee chargeable under this Act” must be determined by reference to the point of time when the grant of Probate is made. [p. 395, col. 1.]

The full fee chargeable must not be determined with reference to the point of time when the second grant is sought. [p. 395, col. 1.]

The expressions “under the Act” and “under the same Act” refer to the Court Fees Act and not the subsequent Acts amending the Court Fees Act. [p. 395, col. 1.]

It is the intention of the Legislature that when the full fee chargeable under the Court Fees Act on a Probate, at the time it is granted, has been paid, no further fee shall be chargeable when a second grant is made in respect of that property as comprised in that estate. [p. 395, col. 1.]

In England all second and subsequent grants of Probate and Administration in respect of property on which the full duty has been already paid upon a previous grant, are exempted from further stamp duty by section 3 of 41 Geo. III, c. 86. [p. 395, col. 2.]

When an executor to whom Probate has been granted dies, leaving a part of the testator's estate unadministered and a new representative is appointed for the purpose of completing the administration, there is no new succession, no new devolution of the estate and no fresh succession duty should be levied. An order refusing to issue a Probate till a sum of money, which is not legitimately leviable under the law, is paid as succession-duty, refuses in effect the application for Probate and is, therefore, appealable under section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the District Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 18th of January 1915.

Babus Dwarkanath Chakravarti and Kalki Kinkar Chakravarti, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order whereby the District Judge has in substance refused to issue a Probate to the appellant till a sum of Rs. 769-3-0 had been paid as succession duty. The facts are not in controversy and may be briefly recited. One Prasunna Kumar Bhattachariya died on the 28th October 1908. He had previously made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 24th March 1907. The Will provided that during the minority of his son, Amulya Kumar Bhattachariya, his estate would be administered, first, by his eldest sister, Gobinda Sundari Debi, and, next, upon her death, by his widow, Swarnamoyi Debi; the ladies were thus constituted the two successive executrices. On the 29th April 1909 Probate was granted to Gobinda Sundari Debi under section 21 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, though it was not explicitly stated that the grant was made durante minore ætate. The executrix died on the 17th July 1914. As the sole residuary legatee had not yet attained his majority, the second executrix named in the Will applied for Probate on the 9th September 1914. An order was recorded on that date that no Probate duty appeared necessary as it had been paid already, and the case was fixed for disposal on the 7th November 1914. On that date the Court directed that the original Probate produced by the applicant be cancelled and that a fresh Probate with a copy of the Will annexed be granted to the petitioner. On the 21st December 1914, the Court re-considered the matter and held that as the scale of Probate duty on estates valued at above Rs. 50,000 had been raised from 2 to 3 per cent. by Act VII of 1910 and as duty had been paid at the rate of 2 per cent. on the first Probate, the petitioner should be called upon to pay the difference between the duties calculated at 2 per cent. and 3 per cent, respectively. The petitioner was heard on the 18th January 1915, and contended that under section 19 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, as amended by Act XIII of 1875, no further duty was payable. This contention was overruled and she was called upon to pay the additional sum named before the Probate could be issued to her. The petitioner has appealed to this Court and has also obtained a Rule in the alternative, should a question be raised as to competency of the appeal. It is plain that the order, in effect, refuses the application for Probate and is appealable under section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act.

Section 19C of the Court Fees Act, 1870, which was inserted therein by section 6 of Act XIII of 1875, is in these terms: "Whenever a grant of Probate or Letters of Administration has been or is made in respect of the whole of the property belonging to an estate, and the full fee chargeable under this Act has been or is paid thereon, no fee shall be chargeable under the same Act when a like grant is made in respect of the whole or any part of the same property belonging to the estate." It is plain that as the fee chargeable upon a Probate is required by section 19-I to be paid before the order for grant of Probate is made, what constitutes "the full fee chargeable under this Act" must be determined by reference to the point of time when the grant of Probate is made. We are unable to accept the contention that the full fee chargeable under this Act must be determined with reference to the point of time when the second grant is sought. We are further unable to accept the contention that the expressions "under the Act" and "under the same Act" refer to, not the Court Fees Act, but the subsequent Acts amending the Court Fees Act. What the Legislature appears to have intended is that where the full fee chargeable under the Court Fees Act on a Probate at the time it is granted has been paid, no further fee shall be chargeable when a second grant is made in respect of that property as comprised in that estate. If this interpretation were not accepted, and if the contention of the Government Pleader were to prevail, the anomalous result would follow that section 19C would have no application where, as in the case before us, the scale of Probate duty has been raised in the interval between the grant of the first and the second Probates, and consequently, the entire Probate duty in the enhanced scale would be payable without deduction of the duty previously paid. This could hardly have been the intention of the Legislature. The second paragraph of section 19C would be of no avail, as it is restricted to grants in respect of property forming part of an estate. In our opinion, the interpretation put upon the first paragraph of section 19C by the appellant is reasonable and is undoubtedly consistent with the language used. We hold accordingly that as the full fee chargeable under the Court Fees Act on the first Probate granted in this case on the 29th April 1909 was paid thereon, no fee is now chargeable under the Court Fees Act on the second grant. This view does not militate against the decision of Couch, C. J., in In the goods of Chalmers (1) and of Garth, C. J., in In the goods of Gasper (2). In the former case, the first grant had been made and a fixed duty paid thereon under the Indian Succession Act, 1865, while the second grant was made after the Court Fees Act, 1870, had come into force. In the latter case the circumstances were similar with this difference that section 19C had meanwhile been inserted in the Court Fees Act, but that section could not avail, as it refers expressly to cases where both the first and the second grants had been made after the Court Fees Act had come into force. Nor is any assistance derived from the decision of Norman, C. J., in In the goods of Peter Innes (3), which merely recognises the principle subsequently embodied in the second paragraph of section 19C. We may add that the view adopted by us places the law in this country in a line with what has long been the law in England. There, all second and subsequent grants of Probate and Administration, in respect of property on which the full duty has been already paid upon a previous grant, are exempted from further stamp duty by section 3 of 41 Geo. III, c. 86: section 36 of 5 and 6 Vict., c. 82, contains a corresponding provision for Ireland. It may further be observed that if the question be considered as one of principle, the rule as formulated in England and as interpreted by us is evidently just. When an executor to whom Probate has been granted dies, leaving a part of the testator's estate unadministered and a new representative is appointed for the purpose of completing the administration, there is no new succession, no new devolution of the estate and it is difficult to appreciate why a fresh succession duty should be levied. A good illustration is afforded by the case of In the goods of Samuel Balthazar (4); there, Letters of Administration had previously been issued in respect of the whole property, and the full fee chargeable on the property at the value then placed upon it had been levied. It was ruled that when a new grant had to be made under section 229 of the Indian Succession Act on the death of the first Administrator, no further Court-fee was leviable although the value of the property had increased in the meantime. This is consistent with the decision of Norman, C. J., in In the goods of Ameerun (5) that no duty is payable on a double Probate which recites and in fact proceeds upon the first. Reference may in this connection be made to the following passage from Williams on Executors, 10th Edition, Volume I, page 295; "Probate granted to one of several executors enures to the benefit of all. Webster v. Spencer (6), Cummins v. Cummins (7). Where there are several executors, upon the grant of Probate to one of them, it is usual to reserve power of making a like grant to the others. But this appears to be unnecessary, both because the Probate already granted enures to their benefit, and because they have a right to the grant, whether the power be reserved or not. The practice is to take out what is called a double Probate, which is in this manner. The first executor that comes in, takes Probate in the usual form, with reservation to the rest. Afterwards if another comes in, he also is to be sworn in the usual manner and an engrossment of the original Will is to be annexed to such Probate in the same manner as the first, and in the second grant such first grant is to be recited; and so on, if there are more that come in afterwards. 4 Burn. E. Law 310, Philimore's Ed.: In the goods of Bell (8). If there be several executors appointed with distinct powers, as one for one part of the estate and another for another, yet there being but one Will to be proved, one proving of it suffices. Wentw. Off. Ex. 31, 14th Ed., Bacon's Abr. Exors. C4. So if B is made executor for 10 years and afterwards C is to be executor, and B proves the Will and the 10 years expire, C may administer without any further Probate. Anon. (9); Anon. (10); Watkins v. Brent (11)." In our opinion, we cannot reasonably hold that the appellant is bound to pay additional Probate duty.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, and the order of the District Judge dated the 18th January 1915 set aside. Probate will be granted to the appellant without payment of fresh Probate duty.

The Rule will stand discharged.
